Personals

THE REV. VICTOR R. JARVIS, who for the past year has served as senior curate at All Souls' Church, New York City, has resigned that position in order that he may give his whole time to the work of the Church Temperance Society, as superintendent of one of its departments. Mr. Jarvis' address for the present will be 1611 Flatiron Building, New York.

CHAPLAIN WILLIAM HENRY PETTUS' address is changed from Camp Eustis, Virginia, to 14 Powder House Boulevard, West Somerville, Massachusetts, where he has resumed his duties as rector of St. James' Church.

THE REV. FRANKLIN C. SMITH, recently mustered out of the officers' training camp for chaplains at Camp Taylor, Louisville, Kentucky, has been appointed canon missionary of the Pro-Cathedral of the Nativity, South Bethlehem, Diocese of Bethlehem. His address will be the same as heretofore, 28 South St. Cloud Street, Allentown, Pennsylvania.

THE REV. HIRAM R. BENNETT, rector since 1915 of Grace Church, Greenville, Jersey City, New Jersey, has accepted the call to Trinity Church, Asbury Park, New Jersey, and will enter upon his duties there January 15. Mr. Bennett served for several months as chaplain at Camp Dix. He is a graduate of the College of the City of New York, and of the General Theological Seminary. In going to Asbury Park, Mr. Bennett succeeds the Rev. Francis H. Richey, now rector of St. George's Church, Maplewood, who served Trinity Parish three years.

THE REV. J. H. FERGING, Ph.D., a distinguished scholar and author, formerly of the Reformed Church of Holland, lately rector of St. John's Church, Grand Haven, Michigan, has become professor of history in Racine College.

THE REV. W. C. CHARLTON on Christmas morning, officiated for the first time as rector of the Church of the Redeemer, Astoria, Long Island, New York, succeeding the Rev. L. R. Urban. Mr. Charlton was, until recently, rector of St. Andrew's Church, Jacksonville, Florida.

THE REV. DR. EDWIN B. NIVER, rector of Christ Church, Baltimore, has been promoted to the rank of major in the U. S. Marine Corps, of which he is chaplain. He has been with them in camp at Quantico, Virginia, during the war.

THE REV. THEODORE S. WILL has resigned the rectorship of Trinity Church, Dorsey, Maryland, and has become rector of the Church of Our Saviour, Baltimore.

THE REV. IRVING SPENCER of St. John's Church, Oakland, California, has accepted the rectorship of St. Matthias' Church, Los Angeles, and may be addressed at 1830 South Normandie Avenue.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES has appointed the Rev. C. E. Wheat of Sewanee, Tennessee, to the chaplaincy of the Military Academy at West Point.

THE REV. J. M. PETIT took charge of St. Mark's Church, Bay City, Texas, on January 1.

THE REV. H. R. KELLAM, of St. Paul's Church, Lawrenceburg, Indianapolis, expects shortly to take up work in the Diocese of Texas. Mr. Kellam will be in residence either at Lufkin or Calvert.

THE REV. RICHARD WILKINSON, D.D., was instituted as rector of St. John's Church, Montgomery, Alabama, the last Sunday in November by Bishop Beckwith. The sermon was preached by Dean McCready, of Christ Church Cathedral, Louisville, Kentucky. Between September 29 and November 24 eighty-eight new communicants were added to the parish roll either by Confirmation or transfer.

THE REV. E. C. YOUNG, M.A., of Phillips Brooks Memorial Chapel, Philadelphia, should now be addressed at 5817 Filbert Street, Philadelphia.

THE REV. MARCUS H. CARROL, rector of St. Andrew's Church in Hanover, Massachusetts, was taken to the Corey Hill Hospital in this city on Christmas Eve suffering from appendicitis. Mr. Carrol's condition is now reported as encouraging.

ON CHRISTMAS EVE a committee of business men presented the Rev. Dr. Walter D. Buckner, rector of Calvary Church, Memphis, Tennessee, with a check for $750 as a token of their appreciation for the splendid war work Dr. Buckner has done in Memphis.

Guarding the Aqueduct

By Captain Theodore Hutton

THERE is probably no unit which has played such a large and important part in the Great War and about which so little is known as the First Provisional Regiment, which since August of 1917 when the federalized National Guard troops were sent south has been guarding the water supply vital to the existence of the City of New York.

Most persons, looking at the matter from the casual viewpoint, might wonder how the safety of New York City's water supply could have a distinct bearing on the success of the allied troops. When it is considered, however, that seventy-five per cent of the subsistence and munitions for the American and allied forces passed through the port of New York, and that almost eighty per cent of the troops sent to Europe went through the same channel, it will at once appear that New York was a very important strategic point to the allied forces, to say nothing of its place in the financial and commercial world. An incendiary blow destroying New York City would cripple the entire nation and seriously threaten the troops of this country fighting in France. Against a concerted attack of German-American incendiarism, such as was planned for last winter, but which was never carried out, the great financial heart of the world had but one insurance—the mighty pressure of the water that gathers in the valleys of Esopus and rushes from Ashokan Reservoir in the Catskills down through the one hundred miles of steel and concrete aqueduct to the great city.

Along this one hundred miles of territory a regiment of 1,500 men drawn from all parts of New York State and welded into an aggressive, clean thinking, clean living, and hard-hitting organization, has been setting up a record of which the general public knew nothing. Such a work as this had to be done quietly, without the flare of a publicity which might have attracted attention to the aqueduct. One writer has described the work thus:

There's a beaten path from 'Shokan
To the lights of New York town
That the men of the Guard have pounded hard
On the job of No Renown.

This tells the story very well; it has been a task without glory, achieved in the face of immense difficulties, and made possible only by the faith and spirit that Colonel Rose, the commanding officer, has been able to inculcate into the officers and men.

The idea of guarding a vital line one hundred mile long with a force of 1,500 men in war time is a new one in military annals. The First Provisional Regiment has the distinction of breaking all records for a thin, far-flung line, and the men of the regiment are very proud of the fact that they are doing what has never been done before.

Not until after the war will it be possible to discuss this work in detail, for it is still going on and there is still the danger against which the men of the First Provisional Regiment have been guarding in the last fifteen months. The hour of victory is ever the hour of the crank, and the history of the Great War has shown Germanism moves when least expected and in the most unexpected ways. So for reasons that cannot be discussed here the First Provisional Regiment is still on duty and will probably remain so for some months.

"A Great Novel, Tremendously Human"

William Allen White's New Novel

IN THE HEART OF A FOOL

One prominent metropolitan clergyman says of this remarkable novel:

"Mr. White has dealt with the ever present problem of RELIGION in a fine spirit. I am glad to have one man write who seems to have some personal experience of what religion may mean to real men . . . a most interesting story, a fine summing up of the growth of the American spirit."

—The Reverend C. R. Stetson, St. Mark's Church, Washington, D. C.

Third Edition Now Ready At All Bookstores, $1.60

THE MACMILLAN COMPANY, Publishers, NEW YORK

One of the most interesting phases of this regiment's history is that which has to do with its religious life, and since Captain Charles W. Baldwin, rector of St. Mary's, Scarborough, is the chaplain of the First Provisional this phase will be of especial interest to Churchmen.

Early in the organization period of the regiment Colonel Rose issued orders to company commanders to afford opportunity for religious services to their men at least once on Sunday and to render reports to regimental headquarters of the number of persons attending. In this order Colonel Rose said:

It is the belief of the commanding officer that men on such duty as this will perform their tasks better for the realization that there is something more to life than a place to eat and sleep, and clothes to wear. They must appreciate the bigger and better things if they are to be bigger and better for this work.

Although the regiment did not have the services of a chaplain in the beginning, the aid of churches of all denominations along the line of the aqueduct was enlisted to carry out the program outlined by Colonel Rose and services have been held at regimental headquarters every Sunday since the troops entered the field. When regimental headquarters, which was then at Croton Lake, was cut off from the outside world by the storms of last winter, Colonel Rose and the staff officers at the post conducted services.

One of the first outdoor services of the summer was conducted from the platform of the big boxing ring at the summer headquarters, with the chaplain and the piano occupying the corners. A combined lectern and litany desk fashioned by the men at headquarters meets all needs for services in the field.

On September 29 details from every unit in the regiment from Ashokan Reservoir to New York were taken by motor to St. Mary's Church, Scarborough, for the first

FATHER BULL, American readers know, is a member of the Community of the Resurrection in England and is a well-known writer upon economic subjects. Guild Socialism is not a Church movement, but an economic one. The distrust among guild socialists of State control on public utilities makes his contribution one of especial interest now. Father Bull may entertain a too roseate view of human nature but like many another preacher of social justice, he is trying to introduce into modern industrialism the control of the Christian motive of service. Like so many other writers of his school Father Bull strains we think the contention that the wage system and chattel slavery are similar states of slavery. Industrialism at its worst has little regard for human rights, but it seems to us a gross exaggeration of the evils of our present system to place it upon a level with slavery. We hope to bring to our readers other solutions of the problems of industrial warfare which are occupying the minds of thinkers.

THE BISHOP OF CONNECTICUT makes an interesting contribution to the discussion occupying the chief place in every journal of opinion today in his article, "Patriotism and a League of Nations."

WHEN BISHOP BRENT preached in St. Paul's Cathedral, London, on America Day, April 20, 1917, he found his text in 2 Maccabees XIII:13-15. On November 17, 1918, Bishop Brent preached in the Church of the Holy Trinity, Paris, from the same passage in Maccabees adding verses 16 and 17. THE CHURCHMAN is glad to be able to print Major Brent's sermon, "The Victory of God."

Things in General

THE CHURCHMAN congratulates Dr. Manning, Dr. Parks, Dr. Stires, Dr. Van De Water, Messrs. R. Fulton Cutting, William Fellowes Morgan, E. H. Outerbridge, Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler and other leading citizens of New York City on their membership in Mayor Hylan's recently formed club of profiteers, scoundrels and human hyenas.

THE EX-KAISERIN possesses a particularly beautiful diamond necklace presented to her at the time of the Kaiser's visit to Constantinople. This necklace was procured by the Sultan as a gift for his guest's wife through an Armenian jeweler to whom he paid the price his imperial sense of justice deemed sufficient. This price was one-tenth the worth of the necklace; the jeweler was ruined and his son is now the leading rug cleaner in New York. We venture to suggest that, since the Kaiserin will probably not attend many social functions during her sojourn at Amerongen, she donate this necklace to the fund for the relief of starving Armenians.

NEW YEAR'S GREETINGS

THE CHURCHMAN as it sends its greetings to its readers enters the new year in a slightly altered garb. Its pages, as the eye will readily feel, are of different proportions from those to which for many decades its friends have been accustomed. But the editors are confident that the form in which THE CHURCHMAN appears this week is one of added comeliness and convenience.

The new year tripping in on the heels of the armistice promises many substantial favors to a war-weary world. We shall not in this modest greeting attempt to wing our way among the higher expectations which are in the air today. We shall be content merely to thank our patrons for their good-natured endurance in recent months of the many annoyances incident to the production and distribution of a weekly journal. Better days are ahead.

The war is over and like all the company of forward-looking agencies today, THE CHURCHMAN votes for a new world wherein the spirit of the Magnificat shall become the mood of our nation's councils and the Spirit of the Christ shall infuse a new sincerity into the prayers of the Churches.

ON PUNISHING THE GUILTY

WE can conceive of no more impressive a method of making war unprofitable and of giving to war-makers the status of outlaws than the one, so popular today among the Allies, of bringing to trial and of punishing those who were the instigators of the world war. Because the suggestion reflects an attitude towards war and warriors which is quite new, there is in it matter for hope that war has lost its glamour and that people are beginning to see it as it is—a shoddy, bestial thing, and its perpetrators, skulking criminals.

But we are not deceived into false expectations by the clamor, raised just now, to bring the Kaiser and other malefactors of great name to public trial. Symbolically it would be a help in the direction of decency to execute a few kings, several staff officers, a goodly number of diplomats, a few professors, an editor here and there, some ministers—but, alas! how the list grows when one sets forth sincerely bent upon tracing the responsibility of this war back to its sources. The list swells to such proportions; the condemned would include such winsome and respectable patriots that one grows distrustful of the wisdom of the enterprise.

What so complicates and muddles this righteous motive in making an example of the guilty is that the company at the scaffold or the guillotine, if justice be equal and impartial, would present a quite international appearance. German would not be the only language spoken by the criminals in their farewells to the world, though court

German would probably, by a majority vote, be the official tongue. The only reason that some distinguished statesmen would not appear upon the scaffold is that they happened to have died before the war started. They have an alibi. They fill honored graves in Germany, Russia, Austria, France, England, Italy and the United States. They can be found almost anywhere that nations have been making distinguished history and planting the blessings of empire among backward peoples.

Personally, we do not think that much will come out of this clamor for bringing the criminals to trial. It is so just in its purpose and represents, shall we say? so Christian a point of view, as to look almost bizarre to shrewd and sophisticated statesmen. Besides, it is a ticklish business to set going, for, as we hinted above, it is pretty hard to know where to draw the line, and if the trial became thoroughgoing and impartial, something better than an international vigilante proceeding, there would be a good many more criminals summoned to the bar than some of us would care to have appear. It is better, perhaps, to keep the trial limited to a few great figures who can serve as decorative scapegoats. By all means, let them be confined to the four nations, German, Austrian, Bulgarian and Turk, for the dragging in of history would only confuse what now seems, under the flash of indignation, so righteously simple.

But if such a trial as the one now generally proposed is to develop into something more useful than the indulgence of wrath and vengeance; if it shall actually serve as a warning to troublemakers and a preventive of future wars, why not let the business be thorough, so thorough and impartial that it shall really be educative? Let there be a commission appointed of disinterested historians, if such may be found, who will make a judicial inquiry into the real causes of this detestable war. Let them dare to dig far deeper than the deposits of contemporary plots and bargains. Let them bring out of the slime of the past into full daylight all the secret treaties, the diplomatic correspondence, the understandings about spheres of influence, the trade concessions. Let them scrutinize the treaties of peace, so-called, which have ended other wars within the century, to ascertain whether the germs of future conflicts had not begun to breed in those compacts before the ink was scarcely dry on the names appended. Let them even go farther and turn a pitiless light upon the careless and vicious utterances of newspapers, the preachments of poets, philosophers, clergy and professors who have indulged in the heady theories of race ascendancy, national sovereignty and “the honor of the empire.” The findings of such a commission would, if the commissioners lived to tell the tale, inform the public about the causes of war, which would serve in the future to instruct democracies as to how to go about the task of preventing wars. The real causes of war are always hid in the dark. We attack only, and always too late, the remote and impotent agencies concerned in the brutal business. If we should start hanging the culprits who caused the war of 1914 the congestion on the scaffold would make the world seem to be a Bolsheviki festival.

But another infinitely wholesome revelation, if taken to heart, would come out of the findings of such a commission of impartial historians. To our chagrin, and we hope to our chastening shame, we would discover that the devil, patient, persevering, cynical, is not discouraged by any wrath we are showing against the Kaiser or the fair words we have uttered about this being the last war. Satan is every inch a man of the world. He never so much as moves a muscle of his face when he sees preachers and diplomats, politicians and Christian ladies, with eyes flashing fire, meting out punishment, not in a spirit of vengeance—far be it—but in the commendable Christian mood of teaching repentance to the criminals for their everlasting betterment. We wonder if Satan does not feel as much at home today in Christendom as he did before the war. He may have shuddered at the idealism we felt and the glowing words we uttered while millions upon millions of boys set forth to fight like gods for a holy and chivalrous cause. But the devil is an historian. He has seen other wars. He has helped to write many a treaty of peace. He knows precisely the kind of rider to attach for making a mockery of the phrase “a treaty of peace.”

It is wholesome and just to punish those responsible for the present war. Were the punishment to fit the crime, tender people would shudder at the cruelty of the sentence that should await a little group of men who in fiendish cynicism played with the lives of men and women, with the happiness of thirty million homes and the rights of unborn children. It is impossible to punish Germany for what she has done. Her crime is too cruel, too disgustingly sordid and vicious; the matter is loathsome to the touch. But the whole subject of punishing the responsible has other implications than those with which we are now too exclusively concerned. In our wrath we are pharisaical. In secret and in the open, words are being spoken, policies planned and advocated, not always with sinister intent, which are fuel for the fire of other wars. Whether William Hohenzollern is hanged or left to live on in loneliness to brood upon his shriveled dreams of grandeur does not really matter much. What infinitely concerns us and our children is that the democracies of the future shall find the means to check and punish the war-makers before they have contrived to lead another generation of boys into the shambles. Here is anxious matter for the employment of wisdom and of grace.

COMPETITIVE NAVIES

THERE are signs very disheartening to those who had builded high hopes on the crusader's shibboleth with which America went into the war. We had said, and it had been plentifully indicated in high quarters which had the conscription to popularize, that this was a war to end war; that it was a people's war, a war which, if successful, would lift the noxious burden of armaments from the shoulders of the nations, and the threat of conscription from the homes of the poor throughout the world. It is amazing, it must be comic to the cynical, how these pacifist passions have subsided since the armistice was signed. When the daily papers carried a front page headline the other day that Rear Admiral Charles J. Badger, chairman of the executive committee of the General Naval Board, appeared before the House Committee on Naval Affairs to urge the building of a navy which should be the equal in 1925 of any navy in the world, there was not even the ripple of disapproval in the press, let alone any storm of indignation and protest among the Churches and the people generally. Nobody seems to see any menace to peace, any dastardly betrayal of promise in such proposals.

For such proposals do carry a menace of peace and if such proposals do win easy government endorsement they are a betrayal of pledges. Did any of us believe when we heard those impassioned war sermons by peace-loving parsons, when we wept copious tears at the theatre or on the street corners when the Liberty Loan orators described the horrors militarism had wrought, that hardly before the war-to-end-war should be victoriously over our navy boards would come forward with a proposal to throw America into the European armament competition?

Apparently that is what we now face. What sickens the heart is that no voice is raised against it. No one seems to care whether our navy nurtures an ambition to grow and grow until its grandeur eclipses every other navy in the world.

There is not a hint from the administration that it disapproves of competing with England's navy. The quickness with which America builded a great war machine, the fair appearance of our lines of battle ships seem to have intoxicated a section of our population. They really glory in the armament. If they glory in it, it will not take long before they swagger and boast of their invincibleness. Never was there a truer word of warning spoken than that of Bishop Gore when he said that every successful war had left behind it the evil seeds of militarism.

But we had hoped that this was a different war, an idealist's war, a war-to-end-war. Thinking and hoping will not make it so. It is time the Churches began to watch the politicians and the militarist professions and the men who are accustomed to rate the greatness and the safety of a nation by the size of its armies and its navy.

There should be a hiss heard through the land whenever such a proposal is publicly made as that which Rear Admiral Badger made before a committee of the House the other day. Militarism will not die of its own amiable will. It must be killed by the determined will of Christian citizens.

THE WEEK

Chronicle and Comment on Current Events

HIGH ADVENTURE

SOMEONE said recently that with the signing of the armistice and the return of our young crusaders to civilian occupations, romance and beauty had faded again out of American life. But Epiphany refutes such a dismal statement. The Feast of Lights points the way to the path of high adventure stretching out before us.

Bishop Brent in Paris on Victory Sunday said:

There was a time a few weeks since when the High Command was the hope on which the nation hung. The army represented a mass of humanity dependent on the conspicuous leaders. Now this is all changed. The most important men are the enlisted soldiers, the non-commissioned officers, and those who will never wear insignia greater than the two bars.

Again:

Up to the present we have been straining for great outline effects. We stood in need of a world background, . . . but this forms the barest beginning, doomed to become a menace unless we follow it up by laborious filling in of detail.

Every chevalier of democracy is now challenged with the harder and the higher task of manifesting in the humdrum round of the ordinary day the glory that entered into humanity when the Son of God stooped to the level of the common man in the manger of Bethlehem.

Foreign missions are appreciated at their real value in the light of the newly discovered importance of internationalism. Skeptics are met by the incontestable social and economic worth of the missionary. A young woman about to be released from service in the medical corps made inquiry the other day as to the possibilities of nursing in the mission field "because that seems to be the kind of thing one wants to do now the war is over." Adventure for God in foreign lands has been popularized by the American Expeditionary Forces. The next few years should witness a missionary movement unequaled in power since the days of the Apostles.

But adventure for God in the common round, the daily task has also been popularized by the men and women who in the kitchen, the canteen, the Red Cross workroom and the Liberty Loan booth have played their less spectacular part in winning the Great War.

The Feast of the Epiphany may be celebrated throughout the year. It isn't enough, as the layman in his Saturday night Meditation this week says, to pay someone else to preach about the efficacy of the Christian life. It is for every one who knows the Christ to manifest His glory to the man next door.

A FITTING WELCOME

PROBABLY no contribution that America has made to the sustaining of the best ideals of civilization has been more fittingly celebrated than was the return of the Fleet from foreign waters last week. The part which the Fleet has played in the bringing of peace cannot be measured in terms merely of its material help. Its efficient and friendly co-operation with Britain's Grand Fleet has perhaps done more to stimulate in the hearts of Englishmen a spirit of friendship for America than any other single contribution we have made to the winning of the war. At all events it has been to the people of England the outstanding symbol of all that we have done toward that end. Whatever decision may be made at the Peace Conference as to future naval power of the world, the fact remains that the Grand Fleet holds a place in the hearts and minds of the people of the British Isles difficult for the rank and file of Americans to understand. It was natural, therefore, that the fine co-operation of our own fleet with that of Britain should have touched the imagination of England and roused gratitude.

WHERE HUMOR COUNTED

IT was the peculiar good fortune of America to have in command of its Fleet an admiral whose common sense, good humor and general personal charm, together with a gift for understanding, made for America a friend of every Englishman with whom he came into contact. Americans have been fond of saying that Englishmen had little if any appreciation of American humor. It would be hardly an exaggeration to say that Admiral Sims won his way to the heart of England by his sense of humor, and his gift of telling typical American stories. Americans who heard his addresses on formal occasions were often distressed because he had little to say about international affairs, but showed an amazing capacity for telling stories which sombre, war-weary Englishmen received with roars of laughter. When some of these Americans sought to apologize for the "unfortunate taste" of the admiral they were usually met with some such statement as: "Oh, that's Admiral Sims's way. We understand him over here, and like him." The final breaking down of the old misunderstandings between our two countries has been made easier by the sojourn of this exponent of good fellowship and sunshine in a land whose people lived more than four years under an appallingly black cloud.

THE WAR AND THE FUTURE

NO better or more inspiring lecture on England's contribution to the war has ever been written than the one which Mr. Masfield delivered on St. George's Day in America and which is published in the little volume entitled The War and the Future. (Macmillan, $1.25.) Here is a telling passage:

I know my nation's faults as well as I know my own. They are the faults of a set and of a system. They are faults of head, they are not faults of heart. When I think of those faults I think of a long graveyard in France, a hundred miles long, where simple, good, kind, ignorant Englishmen by the thousand and the hundred thousand lie in every attitude of rest and agony, for ever and for ever and for ever. They did not know where Belgium is, nor what Germany is, nor even what England is. They were told that a great country had taken a little country by the throat, and that it was up to them to help, and they went out by the hundred and the hundred thousand, and by the million, on that word alone, and they stayed there, in the mud, to help that little country, till they were killed.

I've been along many miles of that old line, and seen those graves, many of them not even marked, except by a bayonet, or a bit of packing case, and I've thought, as I went along, what epitaph could be put above that unending graveyard, and I could only think of one epitaph, "These men came here of their own free will to help their fellow men in trouble."

SATURDAY NIGHT MEDITATIONS BY A LAYMAN

The Mystical Companionship of Jesus

BY WILLIAM H. JEFFERYS, A.M., M.D.

X. The Homing of Love

"If anyone loves Me, he will obey My teaching; and My Father will love him, and We will come to him and make Our home with him."—St. John, 14; 21-24.

WHERE does Christ feel at home? In what terms might we say to Him, "Abide with us," and dare to hope that He will actually make his home with us?

First, let us take a brief survey of things as they are. Let us ask ourselves a series of simple questions and try to be clear-headed and perfectly frank. We want to know if things are just right and as they should be in this matter of the open door of hospitality to Christ. If not, what is wrong and how might we improve matters? Are we on the right track, or have we switched off?

Let us begin with the missionaries. Jesus says—"With Me, ye can do all things." Do the missionaries show the evidence of that sufficient power to win the world which our Lord promises them on certain conditions of obedience? When you hear them speak, are you thoroughly satisfied with their spiritual efficiency, with their faith, enough and of a kind to overcome the world?

Some of the comments I have heard on missionary speakers have been that, "The speaker proved a disappointment," "Had not a vital message," "Spoke too long, and said too little," "Did not tell anything practical," "Did not seem to have any vision." The verdict is usually most generous and kindly; but the above facts remain.

Then how about ourselves in the home Church? How many of us have ever in the past clearly shown the Living Christ to one fellow-man? For I take it, that is our function, the reason for our existence as Christians. As the Bishop of London said recently:

The whole purpose for your being born and your being brought into the Church is this—that you might see Jesus and be Jesus to the world, and that however successful in business you may be, however popular with your friends, however much you may be acceptable at home or successful in your club; if you are not seeing Jesus and being Jesus in the world, you are a dead failure.

How about it?

Missionaries often say, "Those people are altogether parochial," "That diocese or that parish seems moribund," "That service was merely a formality, it lacked meaning and purpose and expectation." A missionary who recently returned from the foreign field declared that "Christendom is not in earnest about Christianity; Christendom is merely playing with Christianity."

I think it was Bishop Pattison of Melanesia who said that the Solomon Islander is the laziest man on the face of the earth, and went on to describe him as not only too lazy to till the ground, but even too lazy to climb the banana tree from which he draws his sustenance. Instead of climbing, he lies in the shade of the tree and if a banana drops within reach, he will make the effort to stretch out his hand and partake thereof, but only if it drops within reach.

Now it does seem to be understood by a good many so-called Christians that Christian life consists in men's going to church once a week, when it is not raining, and when the sun is not shining too brightly, and on such occasions, sitting under the pastoral banana tree with mouths open in the faint hope that something may drop into the same which will suit their particular line of digestion and by which they may be fed. It is the old halo-polish idea, but a candid study of our Lord's talk on discipleship in the fifteenth chapter of St. John's Gospel will reveal nothing whatever in common between this banana tree conception of the Christian life and our Lord's own conception of living union with Himself, resulting in abundant fruit-bearing.

"And one does not have to go to the missionary to find such opinions expressed. To most of the toilers, the Church is merely a great institution or machine, going through the motions, but seldom actually producing anything." And concerning the subject of producing anything, Christ says—"By this is God glorified, by your bearing abundant fruit and thus being true disciples of Mine." In other words, according to our Lord's idea, and I expect what He says goes on this subject, "disciples bear fruit."

Has one out of every three persons in this country a grasp of what the message of Christ really is? Has our life ever shown one person what the message of Christ really is? Has our life the power to do that thing? I am not talking about our neighbors, or our rector, or the missionary we support. I am talking about you and me.

Mr. Rollinson, a chaplain in the British Army, is convinced from his experience with soldiers, that "men are not in essence irreligious," but, speaking broadly, that "the average man hopes for nothing in the Church," and he goes on to say, "I am quite sure that the reason is to be found in the conventionalism of the Church herself, her incoherence and unreality and the utter futility of her ways."

In the knowledge of Jesus Christ, the Church holds in her hand the possibility of drawing all men unto Him irresistibly, gloriously—but on a certain condition, and that condition is perfectly clear, is within her reach, and there is a way by which she might attain what, according to our present way, looks unattainable, almost hopeless, but the present way is not the way.

I agree with the chaplain that the way we have been following for so long is almost futile, that its emphasis is wrong, that even its direction is doubtful.

I do not suppose it ever occurs to as much as one Christian in fifty that according to Christ's own standard, the normal Christian type is a missionary. I do not suppose it occurs to more than one in fifty that unless he, himself, succeeds in making Christ known to this or that person with whom he associates daily, that person may never see Christ.

We expect our clergy to do it for us, and we gauge their salaries on a very moderate basis of expectation. Some of us rise to heights of paying certain selected individuals to go do this same thing in foreign lands, this thing which we do not think it worth while, or pretend we are unable to do ourselves, to those who walk by our side day after day, after day, after day. It is a marvel to me the amount the clergy really do accomplish and especially the missionaries. It only goes to show the power of some lives, but I honestly believe that the world will never be won for Christ until we laymen as a body learn to make Him known to our fellows by the great lay-preaching mission of our daily, loyal, living witness and likeness to Jesus, the living witness of Love in action.

The last of these painful questions that I am going to ask is this: Do you think that on the whole the friendship of the home Church is loyal to Christ? Is your personal friendship loyal to Him in the human sense, in the sense that you would expect your best friend or your child to be loyal to you? Let me quote from a letter which speaks to me about a certain girl who is, I have every reason to believe, a true disciple of the Living Christ. The letter says:

H. is just back from a wonderful six weeks at (a certain university). She had much to do with a Chinese girl there who is in this country studying under a Boxer scholarship, and who took a great hold on H. This Chinese girl told her that she had almost lost her (Christian) faith during an illness after she came to America, because no one ever spoke to her of their Master, nor seemed to count Him in their lives at all. And this is the land from whence had gone the messengers who had taught her people Christianity. She told H. that she was the first girl in America who had seemed glad to talk intimately with her about the things of the soul and the things of Christ. This Chinese girl was educated in a mission school and she is very clever and attractive and musical and lovable. . . . I am glad she found one person, at least, who could and did love to talk with her about our Master.

I want you to note particularly that H. did not pay someone to make an address to the Chinese girl on the subject, "Our Christian Religion," but she personally loved to talk about Christ. Now let us focus the thing at a particular point. Suppose you, or you, had met that Chinese girl on a secular college committee, would you have loved to talk to her about your Friend of friends, Jesus, or would you have asked her whether they had phonographs as yet in China? How about it?

"I have called you friends because all that I have heard from the Father I have revealed unto you." "Him that denieth Me before men, I will deny before My Father which is in Heaven. He who has My (love) commandments and obeys them, he it is who loves Me. And he who loves Me will be loved by My Father, and I will love him and will clearly reveal Myself to him—and We will come to him, and make Our home with him." It is a tryst. "He who obeys!"

It seems to me that it is a straight issue. It is either a loyal, glowing friendship for the living Christ, and power to bear abundant fruit to the glory of God, or it is a weak, sloppy disunion which has the assured prospect of bearing no fruit, and being thrown into the fire. I love to face a square issue, and this is clear as day to me, that fruit-bearing in the Kingdom of Christ is entirely dependent on a loyal, loving union, which admits of Christ's calling us "friends" and making known to us the unsearchable riches of God's love, in order that we may bear fruit, get results, in making the same known to our fellow-men.

The Chinese girl said, "I almost lost my faith," in the land which is trying to teach China, Christianity. Yet one girl's loyalty was all that was needed. Suppose the whole body of Christ were as loyal to Him as that one true disciple, what would the result be?

I know a man who spoke the name "Jesus" in a railroad car—another heard it and saw a great light, and the fourth generation of that living witness wrote recently these words to a girl friend:

You have certainly made me feel and know a living personal Christ as never before; something that nothing can ever take away. That is a big thing to have done for a fellow creature. . . . How happy you must be, and I know you are, that you are able so successfully to do this tremendous work toward the spread of the Kingdom. It is so different from the idea that being as good as you can and going to Church regularly is all that is required.

Thou wast their Rock, their Fortress, and their Might;
Thou, Lord, their Captain in the well-fought fight;
Thou, in the darkness drear, the one true Light.

Alleluia.

THE BUTTERFLY

BY UNA HUNT

I SAW a pale white butterfly
With wings still weak,
That fluttered timidly
Close to the grass,
And seemed afraid
Of the luminous blue-vast sky.

Christ is love,
I often say those words
Of such profound simplicity,
And yet I drift
Tossed by the veering winds of life,
Afraid to rise,
And trust myself to Him.

ON NATIONAL GUILDS

BY FATHER PAUL BULL, C.R.

I MUST explain that I do not write as an economic expert, but merely as a student of the moral and spiritual aspects of social movements, and that I write only from the English point of view.

The war is forcing all men of good will to search out and remove as far as possible the root-causes of war, so that never again may the world be bathed in human blood. The cause of war undoubtedly lies in the unregenerate hearts of men. But whether his worst or his best qualities shall develop and dominate his life depends on the organization of his economic and social life. Every person born into the world has a twofold heredity: his inheritance of the germ plasm which will decide his physical and essential capacities as an individual, and his inheritance of his psychic environment, his social inheritance, which will decide which among his many possibilities for good or evil shall have an opportunity to develop.

The war is widely recognized as the suicide of western civilization based on unrestrained competition. Unrestrained competition is war, from the cradle to the grave, war of man against man, shop against shop, company against company, trust against trust, nation against nation. When this bloodless war of unrestrained competition reaches a certain point it breaks forth into physical violence and pours forth its accumulated terrors in rivers of blood and tears. The root-cause of war is the selfishness of the individual, seeking private gain in entire disregard of the commonwealth. This is the essence of our present system of unrestrained competition. Under this system war is inevitable. It makes brotherhood impossible. It destroys character at its roots and inevitably breeds injustice, unrighteousness, inequality, dishonesty, untruthfulness, slums, disease and equally soul-destroying extremes of poverty and wealth. When it has destroyed all that is good in character it proceeds to destroy itself in the suicide of universal war. Its root-fallacy is that it treats man merely as an animal on the Darwinian basis of the "survival of the fittest," which really means that if A destroys B before B destroys A, then A is most fit to survive!

Is there any other system on which human life can be organized in its economic and social activities? We answer: "Yes—the principle of co-operation." We recognize that the principle of competition was a useful step in the stimulation and integration of man as an individual. We are sure that God's purpose now is to educate man into brotherhood by teaching him no longer to be efficient for private gain, but for public good. Human nature knows now that self-assertion can only mean self-destruction, and that self-sacrifice is the only way to self-realization. So above the welter of blood and filth on the battle-field soldiers of our two great nations are uplifting the Cross of Christ—self-realization by self-sacrifice—as they gladly die for the spiritual issues of righteousness and justice, faith and freedom, which are the only possible bonds of brotherhood of man, as they are the very foundations of the throne of God. It is for us to see that these principles penetrate and transfigure and sanctify the economic and social and political life of our nations.

The problem before us is how to set man free. Both in England and in the United States we have won political freedom by democratizing our politics. But we have not yet obtained economic freedom. Space will not allow me to discuss the chief alternatives to the present system at all fully. So I must be content to say that State Socialism no longer satisfies our aspirations in England. We see that the State may be as much a tyrant as the individual capitalist, and that the machinery of State Socialism would be captured by the plutocrat. Germany with its horde of State slaves does not attract those who value freedom.

Syndicalism is based on class-war and on false philosophy of hatred, violence, and selfishness. It has had much influence in England in stimulating men from lethargy into activity. But it has no ideal of social integration and tends only to disintegration, and the dissolution of mere anarchy. The Bolsheviks in Russia are demonstrating its futility.

Various schemes of reconstruction in England fail to satisfy us because they aim only at the improvement of the old capitalist system, while we feel that God is calling us to a new venture which will eradicate the root of our social disease. The National Guilds find that root in wage slavery.

It is suggested that the present wage system is the root of the evil. Under chattel-slavery the owner bought a man entire; under wage-slavery the owner buys only so much of the man and for so long as he needs. The chattel-slave was a valuable human machine who had security without freedom. The wage-slave is merely the provider of labor power; he has freedom without security. It paid the owner of the chattel-slave to keep his property in good repair. But the employer of the wage-slave has no interest in the person who supplies labor force, except to get as much power out of him as possible, and then scrap him. I am not ignoring the magnificent philanthropy of capitalists in England and America. But I am leaving it on one side for the present, because what is given in charity is often accumulated by injustice, and we want to win a clear-eyed vision of what is right and just. Under every system of economic life-slavery, feudalism and despotism, individual employers have often loved and cherished those whom they employ.

The essence of wage-slavery is that it abstracts labor from the laborer, treats labor as a commodity to be bought and sold, and so countenances traffic in labor, while it no longer permits traffic in man. The chattel-slave was provided for in sickness and health, in employment and unemployment. The wage-slave is at the mercy of the employer, who may manipulate an industry solely with a view to prices and profits, and with entire disregard for labor. The wage-slave has political but not economic freedom. He must go where employers want his labor, and work under conditions over which he has no control, in obedience to foremen whom he does not choose, and who may be utterly indifferent or utterly hostile to his interests. In selling his labor he practically sells his freedom. The result is a soulless system in which personality is crushed, and all pride and joy in work is stifled. It is most remarkable that in England at the present time labor unrest is not due to material but spiritual causes; it is not merely a demand for higher wages and better conditions, but for the recognition of personality. The wage system makes one class of man merely the means to the ends of another class; it degrades and wastes labor by poverty, overwork and insecurity; it corrupts the wealthy by luxury, idleness and the wielding of irresponsible power; it creates the enormous class of parasites who live on dividends and may never contribute anything to the common wealth; it directs production to profit, instead of to goodness, utility and beauty; it squanders wealth in advertisement and destruction of competitors.

In barest outline the Guild System, as far as it is formulated, is this:

1. The object of the National Guilds League is to abolish the wage system and to establish self-government in industry, through a system of national guilds, working in conjunction with the State.

2. The State would take the place of the capitalists, buying them out by guaranteeing them an income for a period of years.

3. The State, while retaining ownership of the capital so acquired, would lease it to the guild for each particular industry.

4. There would be two kinds of guilds:

- (a) Civil guilds consisting of existing civil services, the Army, the Navy, the whole personnel engaged in education, the public health services (including the medical profession).

- (b) Industrial guilds, which would arise out of the Trades Unions of today, and include everyone who was engaged in the industry, both brain and manual workers.

Beyond the guilds would lie a number of occupations insusceptible of guild organization—journalism, art, literature, etc., whose members would live, as they do to-day, by their wits.

5. The State would represent the consumers who own all the capital and means of production. The guild would represent the producers who manage every detail of the industry, pay, hours of labor, holidays and promotion. The consumers would be represented by the State in Parliament and Municipalities and the producers in the Guild Congress. The smooth working of the plan would depend on a balance of power between the two. The State would make its demand on the guild for what it needed, and supply capital for the expansion of the industry. The guild would pay an annual tax to the national budget in lieu of rent, and would have the entire control and arrangement of wages, hours of labor, election of foremen, managers, and all in authority. The Guild Congress would negotiate with the State on behalf of the guilds in fixing taxation, prices and other matters affecting both producers and consumers. It is of supreme importance to keep steadily in mind at every point under this system that most consumers will also be producers, and all producers will be consumers; so that the State and the Guild Congress do not represent two hostile classes, such as Capital and Labor, but in the main two aspects of the same persons, e. g., the worker on the railway is a producer in the matter of transit, but he is a consumer in the matter of food supply, housing, etc. This will be the best security for the harmonious working of the system.

6. In matters of dispute, each guild will retain the power to strike, and the State in conjunction with the other guilds will deal with it by a just and righteous judgment, and raising the tax on the offending guild, and in the last resort by cutting off supplies.

Such is an outline sketch of the schemes as presented by its two leading advocates, A. R. Orage, in his book National Guilds, and G. H. D. Cole, in his books The World of Labor and Self-Government in Industry, from whom I have largely quoted. My most sincere apologies are offered if I have misrepresented them, as is very possible.

The scheme seems to me to be open to the following criticisms:

1. As with all non-Christian schemes of social reconstruction, there seems to be too little allowance for "original sin," that bias to selfishness which cannot be ignored. But to underrate this is better than to construct society only on the basis of individual selfishness as under the present system or chaos.

2. Some may fear that the elimination of the individual capitalist may lead to lack of stimulation of energy and daring. But it may be answered that the disease of commerce is over-stimulation to the point of intoxication and delirium, so that we lose our life in the effort to get a living. The delirious love of money and power has destroyed beauty and leisure for enjoyment and the joy of creation for the vast majority of men.

3. There seems little room for giant geniuses, the Napoleons of industry. But the world might be happier without selfish Napoleons, and unselfish Napoleons would find a sphere of action in the service of the commonwealth.

4. There seems to be no adequate provision for dealing with the "won't works" and the slacker. But the presence of public opinion will probably reduce these to a minimum, and when labor is emancipated the refusal to work can rightly be treated as a crime.

5. The whole question of international commercial relationships suggests difficulties. But faith in freedom justifies us in hoping that they will find their solution in practice. The free worker will, in the long run, be more productive than the slave.

The gains of the system may thus be summarized: (1) Freedom will have penetrated our economic, industrial and commercial as well as our political life. (2) Personality—the worker will no longer be merely a “hand,” but a partner in the work. (3) Motive—work will no longer be a mere striving for private gain, but will be recognized as a real contribution to the commonwealth. Not selfishness but service will now be the chief motive, and this fundamental change of motive will transfigure the whole moral and spiritual nature of man and make Christian brotherhood among men and nations more possible than it is at present. (4) Stimulation—if the stimulation of personal ambition is removed from the few, a higher stimulation will affect the many. Countless millions will take a pride in their work who cannot do so now. Creative and inventive energy will will find more free expression. (5) The whole enormous class of parasites, with its consequences of slums, poverty, overwork, underpay and preventable disease will be swept away.

In conclusion, one may note that this ideal is not wholly visionary. During the war the Trades Union Congress in England has controlled large sections of the nation's industry, in consultation with Parliament. Doctors and lawyers already have their self-governing guilds. The nation on the whole has answered well to the call of self-sacrifice for the commonwealth, and has worked far harder on the impulse of honor and duty than it did for merely selfish profit.

And the United States has answered to God's call with a spirit which proves the inspiring power of a lofty ideal. She is manifesting to the world the miraculous of freedom: that political freedom has in two or three generations educated the sons of a hundred races to unite at the call of duty and self-sacrifice, and to stake their life on spiritual issues. May we not hope that she will place herself in the forefront of the battle to win for all men that economic freedom of self-government in industry, without which the millions of humanity are not really free?

(Note.—Space will not allow me to comment on the new Labor Program which, for the first time, presents England with a national as opposed to a party policy, and uplifts a spiritual ideal of the commonwealth.)

PATRIOTISM AND A LEAGUE OF NATIONS

BY THE RT. REV. CHAUNCEY B. BREWSTER, D.D.

“PEACE on earth to men of good will.” Such, in the rendering of the Vulgate Version, was the Christmas promise, cherished for centuries. To make it a permanent reality in human affairs is the desire of a war-worn world today. There seems no other way to accomplish it than by substituting for strife between nations their covenanted concert and co-operation. Was nineteenth-century nationalism the last word in political science? Years ago Lord Bryce, near the close of his early work on The Holy Roman Empire, warned against advocating the principle of nationality “as the final and perfect form of political development.” A further development now seems to many urgently desirable in the shape of an association of nations in co-operation for common purposes. What would be the relations of such a development to the sense of nationality which manifests itself as patriotism?

There are cheap varieties of patriotism. There may be the sham which Johnson termed “the last refuge of a scoundrel.” There is blustering jingoism. There is an instinctive love of one's native land. There is, moreover, the patriotism which means devotion to one's country as the repository of certain ideals. For there are national ideals. There are the English ideals of justice and liberty. Our national greatness consists not in the boasted bigness of what “America” denotes: so many square miles of territory, so many millions of population and billions of wealth; but rather in what “America” connotes: ideals of humanity and freedom to be realized in a future that beckons on to vaster issues. Who may measure the dynamic, uplifting force of national idealism in human history! Such is the kind of patriotism demanded by Christianity. The Jew's passion for Zion our Lord lifted to the wider outlook of a world horizon.

Ideals transcend local and temporal limits. Thus the higher patriotism looks beyond narrow confines. As genuine regard for self studies the possibility of service to others, so true love of country regards its possible contribution for the benefit of other lands. They who laid the foundation of this nation believed it inaugurated a new era in human affairs. So it was, a little later, with

The ideal patriotism looks across the border and, beyond boundaries, beholds something like a world-citizenship. Said Marcus Aurelius: “As Antoninus, my city and country is Rome, but as a man, the world.” There is here no incompatibility. That personal life is rooted in one's own home does not prevent love of the whole country. So love of country need not limit one's outlook and sympathy. To be an American in 1915 did not mean a single heart-beat less of fellow-feeling with democracy and freedom fought for in France. So far from there being opposition between patriotism and this large sense of human fellowship, there is between them an organic and vital relationship. The latter grows out of the former, whereas there might be the meaningless cosmopolitanism of a man really without a country and a mere individualist. Take American democracy. Because it is more than a form of government, because it is an ideal regarding the value and possibilities of human nature, it looks beyond national confines. We have seen it carry this nation into the struggle to make the world safe for democracy.

We have beheld a new nationalism which, in its extravagant exaltation of the State, was incompatible with international law and faith and right. But a genuine principle of nationality is not antagonistic to a true internationalism. The latter is not to be secured by breaking down or ignoring national life and aspiration. On the contrary, it is really dependent upon the freely and consciously realized life of the nations.

It is evident that so long as nations inhabit the same world there must be relations between them. Shall these international relations be forever left to haphazard chance, which would mean in each collision the supremacy of the stronger? To substitute for such chaos some law and order has been the aim of laborious effort for three centuries in constructing a system of international law. That system has lately been shaken to its foundations until it might seem there was little of it left. A solemn treaty, in the very exigency for which it was framed, was a scrap of paper. Principles that had won universal agreement were openly defied. In the insecurity of its foundation lay the weakness of the structure. Upon what basis of obligation did it stand? In repairing the ruin wrought by the war it is inevitable that attention should be given to the reconstruction of this fabric from its very bottom.

The catastrophe of the world-war we might expect to see followed by a re-constitution of the law of nations in a new authority. The primary question will be touching its foundation of obligation. There has been demonstrated the need of something more binding than the conclusions of a Hague Conference. Is international law to be a primer of polite behavior for nations in good society, which some swashbuckler among them may rudely defy; or shall it be a body of laws to be enforced? This foundation of obligation can be secured only by the definite and enforced covenant of such a league as is proposed. It was the German philosopher, Kant, who said a century and a quarter ago: "The law of nations must be based upon a federation of free states," to be distinguished from a treaty compact which ends a war. His federation was to put an end to all wars forever.

In the proposed league the nations would come into an association of weaker and stronger peoples. There would be no limitation upon the sovereignty of any nation as regards its management of its own affairs. A nation's individuality would be as secure as the individuality of a citizen today. Each nation would have entire liberty of self-government and development so long as there was no encroachment upon others. Only in its external relations the nation would make such surrender as would be necessary to effective co-operation of the nations for common purposes. There would be a judicial tribunal to hear such questions as can be decided according to rules of law and equity, a council of conciliation to hear all other questions. Thus would be substituted, for the game of sharp diplomacy, impartial adjudication; for international anarchy, the benign and majestic authority of law. In an emergency there would be summoned to the defence of the weakest member of the society of nations the combined strength of the whole. In the project are evident difficulties; but they are not insurmountable. They must be surmounted if the world would not see hell break loose again.

Meanwhile the project can be carried into effect only as the forces of public opinion are arrayed behind it. Within my own observation I find much indifference and even opposition and no little misunderstanding. In the Senate of the United States it was represented that we should "become entangled in every broil in Europe." As it is, we were drawn into the maelstrom of European war. The very aim of the proposed league is the elimination of broils as possibilities of war. Today things are at close quarters, as they were not when Washington warned against "entangling alliances." This would be no entangling alliance, but a disentangling covenant to prevent particular complications by the general acknowledgment of law as determination.

The league would exist for more than police purposes, to preserve the peace. Howsoever weary of war, we may well beware of building too much on that word, peace. We have learned that there is that which is worse than war. This league would enforce not only peace, but justice. As opportunity opened, it might develop into a league to realize public righteousness. We may expect the higher activities of mankind to be more and more international. This league may at the first be constituted with a narrower or a wider purpose. At any rate, a whole world wants now a just and lasting peace somehow guaranteed. It can be guaranteed only through law potent with obligation and authority.

As the democratic ideal more and more prevails, we see that democracy is something more than liberty. It means the liberty of eternal law. The principle of democracy requires the rule of law between nations as between individuals. Is the establishment of a league of law among nations chimerical? It is not chimerical but practicable in the opinion of such statesmen as Root and Taft and Wilson, Asquith, Balfour and Lloyd George. There ought to be no doubt as to where Christian people stand on this question. Although not yet waked up to the opportunity and its momentous demand, the Church ought to champion this idea of international co-operation toward the construction of permanent peace, is bound to do so in simple loyalty to its own Catholic ideal of a human fellowship transcending national and racial limits.

BUILD thee more stately mansions, Oh my soul,
As the swift seasons roll!
Leave thy low-vaulted past!
Let each new temple, nobler than the last,
Shut thee from heaven with a dome more vast,
Till thou at length art free,
Leaving thine outgrown shell by life's unresting sea!

THE VICTORY OF GOD

BY THE RT. REV. CHARLES HENRY BRENT, D.D.

Judas . . . determined . . . to go forth and try the matter in fight by the help of the Lord. So when he had committed all to the Creator of the world, and exhorted his soldiers to fight manfully, even unto death, for the laws, the temple, the city, the country, and the commonwealth, he set the battle in array . . . having given the watchword to them that were about him, "Victory is of God." . . . And at last they filled the camp with fear and tumult, and departed with good success. This was done in the break of the day, because the protection of the Lord did help him. (2 Maccabees, 13: 13-17.)

WE are here to exalt God from Whom all victory comes. We must not allow our joy to be degraded into self-congratulation, so at the close of this historic day in this city which is palpitating with merited gladness let us thankfully say, "Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but unto Thy Name give the praise for Thy loving mercy and for Thy truth's sake."

Something over a year and a half ago, when America could no longer stand on the sidelines of the Great War without losing her soul and abdicating her national sovereignty, she did what the doughty old warrior, Judas, is here described as having done—she solemnly pledged herself and her sons to "try the matter in fight by the help of the Lord." She did not set up a cause of her own, and then cry to God to become her ally and help her out. She perceived, when further forbearance would have ceased to be tolerable, when its continuance would have been a crime, that the existing cause was God's cause, and she chose to be His ally and the associate in arms of the patient nations who for three desperate years had been His allies against the Teutonic architect and master builder of ruin, himself now a ruin by his own choice. The crushed figure with his broken sword, pursued by the clustered flags, as drawn by Faivre, is a literal presentation of fact. Personal ambition and brute force have been defeated, as always must be the case, by the spirit of the nations and loyalty to the commonwealth of mankind.

America had no grounds for supposing that she could accomplish the titanic task set her solely with her own prowess and developed military skill. I suppose that never in history has so difficult an undertaking been tackled with so inadequate a preparation. As our commander in chief has just said in his fine Victory General Order: "Our armies, hurriedly raised and hastily trained, met a veteran enemy, and by courage, discipline and skill always defeated him." The secret of our success lies in the fact that we were fighting not only for man's ends but also for God's purposes; not only for ourselves but also for others; not only with lead and steel but also with ideals and a sword bathed in heaven. Our courage was our chief asset, and it was born of the belief that "victory is of God." That has been our watchword. In flaming words our President and other leaders of our American democracy branded on our souls the ideals which are more powerful and more durable than all the weapons of war. They were to our military organization what the fire is to the iron that takes on the character of the red flame that heats it. The battle was between peoples who put ideals first and mechanism second, and against those who put the machine first and trimmed ideals to fit the emergency. The Allies stood for the might of right; the Central Powers for the right of might. "I will not trust in my bow: it is not my sword that shall help me, but it is Thou that savest us from our enemies: and putteth them to confusion that hate us. We make our boast of God all day long: and will praise Thy Name forever."

Our danger in this our hour of victory is obvious—to accord to physical force and military might a position in our own nation from which we have dethroned it in our foes. The real victor in this fight is God, Who "maketh wars to cease in all the world; He breaketh the bow, and knappeth the spear in sunder, and burneth the chariots in the fire." The power which has confounded our enemies and made them flee as smoke before the wind is that which made John of England quail before his barons; that which laid the foundations of the American Republic; that which led brave Belgium to contend that she was not a road to France for the iron hoof of the Hun, but a nation not afraid to block with her life the ruthless purpose of a tyrant—it was the principle of justice born of God and steeping the souls of men.

What explanation can be given of the extraordinary unification of our nations in this matter other than that God by our traditions and national experience had made us the servants and loyal votaries of justice and liberty to a degree that forced us to fling safety to the wind and "to flight manfully, even unto death, for the laws, the temple, the city, the country and the commonwealth"? I insist upon it, that to God belongs the praise. Unless He kindles and keeps burning the mystical inner light, man is but a wisp of hay, a withered leaf dancing in the wind of circumstance.

When, then, we go home, let us not spoil the quality of our victory by military bombast or the pride of mere might. Rather let us rub away what rust there may be clinging to our ideals of justice and purity and honor, and put into effect nationally those principles which we advocate internationally. Up to the present we have been straining for great outline effects. We stood in need of a world background. This we have in some measure secured by our victory, but it forms the barest beginning, doomed to become a menace unless we follow it up by a laborious filling in of detail. The world vision includes America, but it does not absolve her from a distinct national vision for home conditions. We are suddenly confronted with the fact that the small things now are the great things. Religiously, economically, intellectually, socially, we are pledged to a program of justice and righteousness, which alone can procure for us national salvation.

Let us live for the things our comrades have died for. It is not that I would depreciate what we have achieved. Rather is it that I would exalt God and His hidden processes, operating in and through and beyond us. The only hope of our nation and of the world is the frank recognition that God is King—never more so than at those moments when we take full credit to ourselves for those matters in which God, not ourselves, was the chief, though invisible and modest, actor.

"At last," writes the ancient historian who is in a marked degree the recorder of wars—"At last they filled the camp with fear and tumult, and departed with good success. This was done at the break of day, because the protection of the Lord did help him." How well these words describe the happenings of our day! The camp of our enemies has changed from a condition of mechanical precision to that of national chaos. How often, too, our fellows went over the top at dawn to drive the enemy before them. Now for the last time the pitiless barrage has curtailed the advance and we have achieved the final good success because the protection of the Lord did help us. "This was done at the break of day." Let our imagination play upon this phrase and wring from it all that it has to contribute. The dawn means a new era of effort. Every human accomplishment is a new beginning. We have achieved only in order to achieve further. "Those things you have done. There remains now a harder task which will test your soldierly qualities to the utmost. Succeed in this and little note will be taken and few praises will be sung; fail, and the light of your glorious achievements of the past will be sadly dimmed. But you will not fail!"

Of course the first thing that is incumbent upon all of us is to carry back to America unblemished manhood. Indeed, I would go further and say that unless during these days of the armistice and the ensuing period of demobilization we build upon our present manhood, we shall be delinquent. The country does not want us merely as we were, but something better. We are not going back to an old order; the old order has vanished. We return to win a new order, having as our chief instrument a new manhood won in the university of adversity. The great leaders of the army today are those who like the junior and non-commissioned officers are in constant touch with the enlisted men.

The question has recently been asked by some of our Allies: "What has America gained by the war?" The answer comes swiftly and surely: "She has gained her soul! She has maintained and put on a higher plane her self-respect! She has learned to respect other nations, and has won for herself new respect from them!" There can be no higher or grander spoils of war than these. Then, too, we have won for all time the power to see grandly in a world vision. Before the war, we swam around in our own little puddle, thinking it was the world. Now we have learned the meaning of "universal." We were empowered to see in behalf of mankind as well as in behalf of ourselves—to see what the world might be, aye, what it must be. But it is part of the vision that each nation must by its own inherent character put into effect the program of liberty. Our nation is not responsible, nor can she be held responsible, for the manner in which other nations work out their own salvation. Each must give its own interpretation of democracy, according to its national genius. Neither America nor any other nation can be responsible for more than its own just share and part.

There is yet another fruitage which we may expect from this war. In that God has promised a time when war shall be no more and the sword and gun will plough the furrow, let us demand that that time be now. There are many adversaries, but a great opportunity. It is God's purpose. The only thing lacking is man's will. Man's will is now the sole enemy to peace, but it can be turned into its chief ally. When we entered this struggle we said we were making war upon war. Let us be true to our purpose and make the world safe because it is unarmed and not because it is armed.

With this as our background, we have reason to rejoice over victory gained. No one nation dares talk as though its prowess were the chief or the deciding factor in this victory. The Allies were our defenders before we entered the conflict; we were their associates in the fighting after we became their comrades, and we must remain their comrades in the results of our fighting. If there be any rivalry, let it be a rivalry of commending the brave deeds of one another. Again I say, Victory is of God! There is a victory that is not of God; that has no share in the Divine purpose; that is a defeat of our Saviour's plan for mankind. But our victory, as we humbly believe, was due to the strong arm of the Lord of Hosts. Such a victory is an impulse forward, not an end; a weapon, not a toy; a responsibility, not a luxury. As stored power it will run through the nation, and through the world, making all things new. No one is outside the beneficent impress of our victory.

The maimed rejoice because they have scarred themselves that the nation might be without scar. The widow and the bereaved smile through their tears, for their heroes have made victory possible and added lustre to the flag. They thrill even as they sob, for their own men have done the greatest thing God or man can do—they have laid down their lives for their friends. And the dead themselves rejoice because they have not died in vain. They know it well. Today the ramparts of heaven are alive with our brave soldiers and the soldiers of our Allies, aye, and soldiers against whom they fought, cheering because victory is won—victory which is of God. And we can catch something of the echo of that cheer, which is a command as well as a cheer, bidding us live for those great ends for which they died. They thought dying was gain to make the world safe for democracy. They challenge us to live that democracy may be made safe for the world!

HIS SECOND COMING

BY MARION SHIRLEY COLE

1ST SHEPHERD (alone)

Now is it nigh the middle of the night
And I know not where my fellows be;
'Tis Christmas time—but we're not vouchsafed the sight

That they of olden time were blessed to see.

Alas! It is a wicked world we pace
And I, for one, despaired of the race.
What Ho! My friends and fellows! Ho!

(The 2nd and 3rd Shepherds enter)
You surely do not here expect the foe
That thou dost slink about afar away?
When we should sleep e'en till the brink of day.

2ND SHEPHERD:

But foes are rife out in the world all round about
And I and all my sheep are filled with doubt.

The sheep—they run as if bewitched,
And every nerve in my poor body's twitched.

(1st Shepherd shakes head in agreement)

3RD SHEPHERD:

Now, brothers, let us counsel take
Of those who nineteen hundred years ago
Lay down and slept and when they did awake

They heard the angels' song, which cured their woe.

1ST SHEPHERD:

Ay, but that song is gone from mind—
"Peace," was it not? Or something of that kind?

3RD SHEPHERD:

"Peace on the earth, good will to men,"
Was heaven's all gracious cry.

1ST SHEPHERD:

And to that would the world could say
"Amen"

And we, too, as we down on earth do lie.

3RD SHEPHERD:

We may see visions; 'tis the Christmas night!

2ND SHEPHERD:

More likely snow will fall and cold will bite.

1ST SHEPHERD:

Would we might see the "Holy Light."
(They lie down and sleep)

(Singing off stage—"While Shepherds Watched Their Flocks by Night.")

(Young Shepherd comes in with traveler's pack and sits down; he does not sleep.)

(The star appears; a vision of Mary is seen—Mary with the traditional blue head-dress and a beautiful radiance from the "Light" in her arms. If desired Mary may sing "Sleep, Little Shepherd King.") (Angels sing "Gloria in Excelsis").

(Kings enter: bow low; sing "We Three Kings of Orient Are" and present gifts.)

THE KINGS:

We three kings of Orient are. Bearing gifts we traverse afar,
Field and fountain, moor and mountain,
Following yonder star.

CHORUS:

A star of wonder, star of night,
Star with royal beauty bright;
Westward leading, still proceeding,
Guide us to Thy perfect light.

MELCHIOR:

Born a king on Bethlehem's plain,
Gold I bring, to crown Him again,
King forever, ceasing never,
Over us all to reign.

CASPAR:

Frankincense to offer have I;
Incense owns a deity nigh
Prayer and praising, all men raising,
Worship Him, God most High.

BALTHAZAR:

Myrrh is mine; its bitter perfume
Breathes a life of gathering gloom;
Sorrowing, sighing, bleeding, dying,
Sealed in the stone-cold tomb.

ALL:

Glorious now behold Him arise,
King and God and sacrifice,
Alleluia, Alleluia,
Earth to the Heavens replies.

(Chorus after each stanza.)

(Then Shepherds slowly awake and speak, 1st, 3rd and Young Shepherd; 2nd sleeps)

1ST SHEPHERD (kneeling before Mary and The Child):

My doubting mind is set at rest;
The world is wrong; but Thou know'st best.
Accept the best I have to bring,
My shepherd's pipe in offering.

3RD SHEPHERD:

I knew that Thou would'st come this way
To cheer us on—through darksome day—
Take Thou here my sheepskin warm,
'Twill wrap Thee well through cold and storm.

YOUNG SHEPHERD:

I've just returned from years of war
Where I offered myself for Thy second coming.

And through all that I was—or felt—or saw,
Thy presence was nearer than wounds or groaning.

But not as a babe dost Thou walk those fields

And not as a babe at those cross-roads art standing!

Oh! Help me to teach what the battle yields

To the world of suffering and understanding.

(Shepherds go back to lie down; Angels sing "Gloria in Excelsis" two or three times. They seemingly awake and stretch.)

1ST SHEPHERD:

Didn't see a vision as of old?

3RD SHEPHERD:

Ay, Ay, my friend, as 'twas foretold.

2ND SHEPHERD:

What? What was that you saw?
I dreamed only of slaughter and war.

(Young Shepherd is seen for the first time by the others.)

3RD SHEPHERD:

And here's another vision truly—

1ST SHEPHERD:

Our youth preserved miraculously.

2ND SHEPHERD (peering):

It's the youth himself? No spirit ghostly.
(Youth kneels to them and speaks.)

YOUNG SHEPHERD:

Ay, 'tis indeed—I shared your dream;
For me, still waking, the star did gleam
And the Christ Child true and real did seem.

1ST SHEPHERD:

Now tell us of the world afar!
Dost think the world will see the star?
And can it through the war clouds wild
Behold the Christ and Mary mild?

2ND SHEPHERD:

How silly now indeed you are!
The world's own thoughts from Christ art far!

3RD SHEPHERD to YOUNG SHEPHERD:

Dost thou believe this doubting man?
Is that the message with which ye ran
O'er moor and fen to your home tonight
To hearten us who canna' fight?

YOUNG SHEPHERD:

A tale I'll tell and tell ye true
Of what mankind is living through
And coming to! Christ's second coming
Ye shall see—

'Tis the coming of Him by Calvary!

(Where Mary was, a cross of gold or of light appears. The Three Kings, without crowns, in white robes, or tri-colored, and bearing the flags of France, England and America appear to the tune of "We Three Kings of Orient Are".)

FRANCE sings (kneeling):

All I have to you I have given;
By sacrifice fair France has been riven.
Cross forever, symbol ever
Of lives laid down again.

CHORUS:

Oh! Cross of suffering,
Cross of love,
Cross with light
From heights above,
Heavenward leading,
Still proceeding,
Guide us to the realms of love.

ENGLAND sings (kneeling):

Wealth and power for you I resign,
Lessons I've learned of kindness benign:
Enduring ever, ceasing never—
Only the Cross shall shine.

CHORUS:

AMERICA (kneeling):

Long I've been a stranger to Thee,
Wandering far—my way I could see—
Suffering, learning, weary, burning;
All Thou shalt mean to me.

CHORUS:

(The Shepherds have dropped on their knees. One stanza of "O Come All Ye Faithful.")

A NEW YEAR'S SUGGESTION

It is a fact only too true that salaries paid to many rural clergymen and missionaries, and to some in the larger centres as well, are so small that they are unable to pay for subscriptions to Church papers or any other periodicals.

Many of our readers have contributed generously to a fund to provide these persons with free copies of THE CHURCHMAN, but this fund is now exhausted and there remains a long list of clergymen, missionaries and deaconesses who want this weekly help in their work, but are unable to pay for it.

Bishops and many of our most prominent clergymen say emphatically that THE CHURCHMAN is a help to all Church people. It is a real working auxiliary, keeping them in touch with Church problems and progress. Dean Hodges says: "It is a means of grace."

Won't some of you who appreciate THE CHURCHMAN help us meet this situation? $3.00 will place THE CHURCHMAN in the hands of one of these deserving workers for one year.

NEWS OF THE CHURCH

CHAPLAIN SWAN, HERO OF FISMES, HOME ON SAXONIA "Fr. Duffy Has Nothing on Our Dominie," Say Boys

Conspicuous among the 1,400 men who arrived last week on the Saxonia was the Rev. Thomas E. Swan of Saginaw, Michigan. Chaplain Swan's citation for "extraordinary heroism in action" was printed in THE CHURCHMAN recently. This is the story of Chaplain Swan's return according to the New York Tribune:

A young Episcopalian chaplain who did brave things in battle arrived here yesterday from London on the Cunard liner Saxonia with thirty-two officers and 1,373 men, all of whom were sick or wounded. He wore the Distinguished Service Cross, bestowed for extraordinary bravery in action, but he wouldn't say one word about it.

"My name is Swan—Thomas Swan, chaplain of the 125th Infantry," he said, "and I come from Saginaw, Mich. Yes, I was pastor of an Episcopal church there, and that is all you need know about me."

The young chaplain laughed heartily as a group of men who fought with him and saw him face German gunfire shouted in chorus:

"Nothing doing! You reporters must hear all about our dominie."

CHAPLAIN THOMAS E. SWAN, D.S.C.

Up went the hand of Chaplain Swan and the noisy chatter of the soldiers ceased.

"Please let me say a word," he said. "It was the great privilege of my life to have served in this war with the American forces. No braver or better men are on the face of the earth to-day, but they certainly surprised me on board this vessel on the trip across from London."

"What was the matter, chaplain?" asked a corporal. "We were all good boys coming over."

"Yes, good boys, but swindlers," said the chaplain. "You know there was only one last shell fired by the Germans, and nearly every chap on this boat had ten or twelve shells which he called the last. I checked up on the 'last shells' that were sold or traded on this ship, and I found there were 77,444."

After the laugh subsided Chaplain Swan was called away, so his boys told what he did to win the D. S. C.

"General Biddle pinned the decoration on him," said one of the group, "and we were mighty glad to see him get it. Everybody in France is talking about Father Duffy, of the 69th, but he hasn't anything on this dominie. The citation said the cross was given for extraordinary heroism in action along the Marne and the Vesle rivers from July 31 to August 15. Many of us were bowled over every day by machine gun bullets and shrapnel, but Father Swan was there with us all the time.

"We used to howl at him to get back and keep under cover, but he never heard it. Every time there was an advance and some of us were potted, there was the chaplain holding the heads of dying men upon his knee and saying something cheerful as they went west. Up at Fismes, on August 3, we got a rough deal from the Germans. They trapped us in a gully and opened up a withering fire. Our boys went over like ninepins. Then they shot in gas shells to finish us.

"Father Swan found out what happened in the gully. In he rushed through the stifling gas, and didn't put on his mask. He went about among the wounded and helped these fellows put on their masks. He kept on putting on the masks of fellows that couldn't move a muscle until the gas got him and he went under."

Chaplain Swan has been assigned to the hospital transport for duty between France and the United States.

Miss Billie Burke Helps

HASTINGS-ON-HUDSON.—A delightful feature of the children's Christmas program at Grace Church was the presence of Miss Billie Burke, whose estate, "Berkeley Crest," is near the parish. Her own daughter, Patricia, aged two and a half, helps her to enter into the lives of all children. Miss Burke was confirmed at the age of 16 by the Bishop of London.

The children sang carols around the brilliantly lighted Christmas tree and deposited gifts in the manger for the children of St. Barnabas' House, New York City.

Bishop Lawrence Ill

BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS.—Bishop Lawrence has been confined to his house with an attack of influenza for more than two weeks. The bishop is also suffering from the strain of overwork and his response to treatment and recovery of strength are slow. He is, however, gaining steadily if slowly.

Pittsburgh Convention Postponed

The fifty-fourth convention of the Diocese of Pittsburgh has been postponed from January 28 to April 22 by the bishop. He gives as his reason his slow recovery of health and consequent inability to prepare for the meeting of the convention.

Texas Diocesan Council to Meet

The diocesan council of the Diocese of Texas will meet in Christ Church, Tyler, on January 15, 1919.

ASKS FOR FREE PEWS FOR OLD TRINITY CHURCH Rector Says Parish Should Foster New Spirit of Fellowship

In his New Year sermon preached at Trinity Church on December 29, Dr. Manning put himself on record as strongly in favor of free pews. He said that he spoke for himself and not for his vestry. Dr. Manning has advocated free pews often in the past, but nothing has yet been done towards making the pews in Old Trinity free. With the exception of the mother church and of St. Agnes' Chapel, the pews in Trinity Parish are all free.

"For the church of the future," the rector said, "we must all want a deepening of religious faith and religious conviction, and along with it we want less of narrow religious prejudice and sectarian division. In this great day all Christians must draw nearer to each other if they are to meet the Church's opportunity. It is time for it to take some definite, practical steps to break down the barriers. I believe that our greatest need in the Church is more of that spirit of fellowship and brotherliness and close companionship in a great common aim which makes the life in our camps and our army so wonderful.

"When a man goes into a group of soldiers he finds this spirit of fellowship. The barriers are all down. He finds himself one of a band of brothers, with a new zest, a new interest, a quite astounding joy and freedom in life, a cheerfulness and courage equal to any and all tasks. There ought to be more of that spirit of fellowship when we come here on the common ground of Christianity, where of all places we should find that Christian fellowship.

"With this in mind, I wish most earnestly we could give up all renting of pews or sittings in the church and make the seats free and open to all. This does not mean that those who come here regularly could not sit in their accustomed places, provided they came in time. It does not mean we should give less money to the church. We ought to give whatever we can to the church without getting something back for it, in the shape of a reserved seat, and I am sure all of us feel this. We have, I know, a thoroughly hospitable spirit here in Trinity Church. All who come here are most welcome. No one is kept standing in this church while there are seats unoccupied. That I hold to be a thing quite intolerable in the house of God.

"But the renting of pews is an obstacle to that full spirit of fellowship which we want and which we know ought to exist in the church. We all know what a spirit of warmth and life there is in our great midday service, when the seats are all free. We ought to be satisfied with nothing which falls below this at our services on Sunday."

Death of the Rev. A. T. Pindell

The Rev. A. T. Pindell, rector-emeritus of Sherwood Church, Cockeysville, Maryland, died recently at his home from pneumonia. He was seventy-eight years of age and had been rector of the parish for forty years before becoming rector-emeritus. He is survived by his widow, two daughters, four sons and seven grandchildren.

BISHOP COURTNEY DIES IN NEW YORK DECEMBER 29

Had Been Bishop of Nova Scotia for Many Years

NEW YORK CITY.—The Rt. Rev. Frederick Courtney, D.D., D.C.L., S.T.D., died in his home here on Sunday afternoon, December 29. Bishop Courtney had been ill for three weeks. Had he lived until January 5 he would have celebrated his eighty-second birthday on that day.

Bishop Courtney was one of the most widely known and best loved clergymen in the Diocese of New York. He was born in Plymouth, England, the son of the Rev. Septimus Courtney. He received his education at Christ's Hospital, London, and

King's College, London. He was ordained to the diaconate in 1864 and advanced to the priesthood the following year. He served at Hadlow, Kent, and Charles Chapel, Plymouth, and then at St. Jude's Church, Glasgow. In 1876 Bishop Courtney came to this country and for two years occupied a curacy at St. Thomas' Church, New York, from whence he went to St. Thomas' Church, Chicago, and then to St. Paul's Church, Boston. In 1888 he was elected to the missionary district of Nova Scotia. His wife's failing health compelled him to resign his see in 1904, when he became the rector of St. James' Church, New York. Three years ago he retired and was succeeded by the Rev. Frank Warfield Crowder, D.D. Bishop Courtney retained his connection with St. James' Church as rector emeritus and took an active part in the life of the parish.

Bishop Courtney was strongly identified with all diocesan activities. He was chairman of the committee on canons of the diocesan convention, he was chairman of the diocesan board of religious education, an active member of the board of the Seamen's Church Institute and a member of many other boards and committees. Since its foundation in 1906 he was president of the Church Temperance Society. He was always in demand as a special preacher and took many of Bishop Greer's Confirmations for him.

Prayer for Peace Conference

The Executive Committee of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America has suggested that Sunday, January 12, be designated as the special day upon which all churches be urged to make the subject of the Peace Conference a matter of special supplication and prayer.

CHOIRS SING TO WOUNDED

New York Churches to Provide Services at Debarkation Hospital

NEW YORK CITY.—When the choir of St. Thomas' Church sang carols in the wards of Debarkation Hospital No. 5 on Christmas Eve and when the choir of Trinity Church lead the singing at the Sunday evening service in the recreation hall, the winter's program of religious services for the wounded at the huge hospital in the Grand Central Palace here was foreshadowed.

It was the Sunday before Christmas that the doors of the new hospital were first opened to receive about fifteen hundred men who had landed in New York in the dismal rain of that bleak December day. The old "Palace" was hard to recognize in its new dress. But "They've fitted it up fine" is the boys' comment. "We're awful glad to be here for Christmas," they add.

The Rev. E. A. Gerhard, rector of Christ Church, Winnetka, Illinois, is the commissioned chaplain stationed at the hospital. Chaplain Ogilby is assisting him at present. Down on the first floor the chaplain's office is situated and the men are urged to bring anything that is either on their hearts or on their minds straight to that office.

"We had a grand Christmas—a show, stockings, a box, an awful good supper, yes, and service too," a nice young fellow from Wisconsin was saying to a visitor at the service last Sunday night. (He had been gassed on October 7 and would be in the hospital for at least another month, he thought.) But the Christmas services were simple and informal, although on Christmas Eve the choir from St. Thomas' Church came over to sing the old carols.

The first regular service was held last Sunday night. Dr. Manning and the choir of Trinity Church came to assist the chaplains. The hall was comfortably filled with the wounded—some on crutches, some with empty sleeves, others with head or arms swathed still in bandages, all of them dressed in the grey hospital wrapper marked on the pocket with the red cross.

How the men sang, at least as soon as Chaplain Gerhard had told them that the choir did not want "Onward Christian Soldiers" to be a solo production! Afterwards the choir did sing alone, some of their Christmas music. Then Dr. Manning, evidently happy to be speaking to army men again, preached a short sermon, and afterwards there was more singing.

This service is to be repeated every Sunday night. Next week the cathedral choir and Dean Robbins will assist the chaplains.

Chaplain Marsh Helped Wounded

It is now learned that the Rev. Arthur H. Marsh, of St. Paul's Church, Omaha, a chaplain serving with rank of lieutenant with our army in France, whose death on October 7 was reported in THE CHURCHMAN, received his fatal wound while ministering to the wounded during the St. Mihiel drive. He kept the news of his wound from his wife and parents because he believed that he would recover and he did not wish to cause them unnecessary anxiety—a very characteristic act on his part.

UNITY FOUNDATION MEETS IN DAY'S CONFERENCE

Unofficial Body Is Seeking to Study Fundamentals of Unity

NEW YORK CITY.—The Christian Unity Foundation held a most interesting and helpful conference on December 20, 1918, at Yale Club here. This was a whole day's conference, including representatives from the Presbyterians and Congregationalists. The host at luncheon was the Rev. Dr. Frederick Lynch, editor of Christian Work. On account of the absence of the president of the Foundation, Bishop Courtney, because of illness, Bishop Lines of Newark, one of the vice-presidents, presided at both the morning and afternoon sessions.

During the morning Bishop Lloyd presented a very forcible paper on "The Need of Organic Union in Meeting the Needs of an Awakened Religious Conscience." He was followed by the Rev. Dr. Walter Laidlaw, a Presbyterian, who advocated federation as the immediate and practical step towards ultimate, organic union.

The general discussion of the subject by those who attended the conference led to a decided conclusion that the present time calls for nothing so pressing and so hopeful as the demands for organic union. Too frequently have Christians been satisfied with some alternative for union, but the present conditions require a definite concerted effort to deal with the whole subject as one great problem, and to raise its consideration to a higher and broader plane than has generally been the habit in the past.

A special committee composed of two men from each body represented was chosen to arrange for further meetings, and it was decided that a more systematic study of the whole subject of unity should be made and a working outline of what has already been suggested should be published for the benefit of all who are working for the cause.

The Christian Unity Foundation has already accomplished much in the way of preparation and now should have its distinctive work known and realized. The Foundation is an unofficial body started in January, 1910, and has had as its distinctive object the seeking of the fundamentals in the efforts toward reunion. Many conferences with the leading denominations have been held and much research made, and the results gathered for future use and consideration.

The Rev. W. C. Emhardt of Newtown, Bucks Co., Pennsylvania, is the secretary of the Foundation, and will be glad to hear from anyone who is willing to help on the work towards the solution of one of the most important questions that is to be solved by and for the Christian Church this present reconstructive period.

King Answers Cablegram

BROOKLYN, NEW YORK.—The following cablegram was received this week from King George V in reply to the message of congratulation from the Sons of St. George celebrating Britain's Day at the Church of the Redeemer, Fourth avenue:

"James Henry Darlington, Bishop of Harrisburg, and Tom Ward, Deputy Grand President Sons of St. George:

"The King heartily thanks Sons of St. George for kind greetings on the occasion of their celebrating Allies' victorious achievements, which have cemented for ever brotherhood in arms of our two nations. "STAMFORDHAM."

ST. JOHN'S DAY KEPT AT NEW YORK CATHEDRAL

Bishop Makes Memorial Address About Mrs. Morton and Mrs. Irvin

NEW YORK CITY.—St. John's Day was the twenty-sixth anniversary of the laying of the corner-stone of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine. The day was marked by the usual anniversary services and meetings, beginning with a celebration of the Holy Communion at half past ten o'clock, at which the cathedral choir was in attendance and much of the Christmas music was repeated.

At the conclusion of the service in the cathedral, the annual meeting of the Diocesan Auxiliary to the Cathedral was held in New Synod Hall. The president of the Auxiliary, Mrs. Henry W. Munroe, was in the chair. The introductory address was made by Bishop Greer, and was in the nature of a memorial to two devoted Churchwomen, members of the Auxiliary, who had died during the year: Mrs. Levi P. Morton, and Mrs. Richard Irvin. The bishop spoke of Mrs. Morton as having done more than any other woman to make possible the building of the cathedral, her interest in it having influenced Mr. Morton in making his subscription for the completion of the choir, and having been further manifested in their joint gifts of the altar and reredos, the great organ, and the furnishings of the sanctuary and presbytery. The bishop described the blending of strength with gentleness and humility in Mrs. Morton's character, and characterized the influence of her deeply religious nature as "contributing, more largely than material gifts, to the true glory and wealth of the cathedral."

The bishop then spoke of Mrs. Richard Irvin's service as an officer of the Diocesan Auxiliary and chairman of the choir committee, dwelling upon the efficiency of her work and the charm of her personality, after which he asked the members of the Auxiliary to unite with him in the memorial prayers which followed.

At the business session, the annual reports were read by the chairmen of the various committees. The Rev. H. Percy Silver, rector of the Church of the Incarnation, was then introduced by the bishop. Mr. Silver made a stirring address on the functions of an American cathedral as the bishop's church, picturing it as the proper center for all the missionary work of the diocese.

The same day a meeting of the trustees of the cathedral was held in the afternoon, Bishop Greer presiding. Mr. Robert G. Hone was re-elected secretary, and Mr. Charles F. Hoffman was re-elected treasurer. The various standing committees were reappointed. The bishop introduced the subject of the building of the nave, work upon which was suspended when the United States entered the war, and commended it to the attention and consideration of the trustees. He spoke of the necessity of team-work, and of well organized and co-ordinated effort, to carry the great project through. Definite plans will be considered at a subsequent meeting.

Union Christmas Services Held

WILLIMANTIC, CONNECTICUT.—A union service of all the churches was held here at 11 p. m. Christmas Eve. The service consisted of an abbreviated form of Evening Prayer and singing of the old familiar carols. The Congregational minister read the lesson, the Baptist pastor read the prayers and psalms, while the Methodist pastor led in the reciting of the creed. Each of these ministers gave a few words of greeting appropriate to the occasion. At five minutes before twelve silence was maintained for private prayer and meditation. As the bell in the tower announced the natal day, the rector advanced to the altar steps and while the congregation knelt, "Holy Night" was sung very softly by the choir. Immediately after this there was a celebration of the Holy Communion, the visiting ministers receiving before the congregation.

On Thanksgiving Day a community thanksgiving service was held in the state armory of the same town, all churches, Roman Catholic and Protestant, taking part. The Episcopal prayers, which were printed on the program were read by one of the Roman priests and the Baptist minister. The armory was packed with between two and three thousand people.

WAR VESSELS SERENADED

Seamen's Institute Tender Takes Choir of Waits Around Harbor

NEW YORK CITY.—As usual the Seamen's Church Institute kept Christmas very merrily. The presents—all done up in white paper and red ribbon—sent by friends of the Institute to be placed in the rooms of the men on Christmas Eve, were so much in excess of the actual needs of the Institute that 200 were sent to the Naval Hospital to gladden the hearts of the wounded jackies under Uncle Sam's care.

One unexpected and unusual feature of Christmas at the Institute was the serenading of the battle squadron in New York Harbor on the evening of St. John's Day. The J. Hooker Hammersley, all gaily decorated with lines of electric lights and gay flags, and with a huge Christmas tree, tinsel-covered and lighted with colored lights, set upon the rear deck, went about from ship to ship, and a choir of forty men and women sang Christmas carols and popular songs to the men aboard. Never before had the Institute had an equal opportunity to express its friendly feeling for so many seamen at once. The plan for the serenade was not preconceived, and the forty men and women aboard the Hammersley were hastily gathered. They were led by Mr. Frederick Weld, musical director of the Navy Y. M. C. A. War Activities, and by the Edna White Trumpet Quartet.

"It Came Upon the Midnight Clear," "The First Noel," "The Little Town of Bethlehem" and "Oh, Come All Ye Faithful" floated across the water as the Hammersley halted opposite each vessel. The tender was kept in a glow of light and silhouetted against a black background by the searchlights of the serenaded vessels. Each of the grim sentinels of the deep was greeted with rousing cheers, "Hurrah, hurrah, hurrah. Welcome Home, Arizona" (or whatever the name of the vessel might be). Notwithstanding the fact that it was very late when some of the vessels were reached, the boys tumbled out of their hammocks and rubbed their astonished eyes as they gazed on the strange sight. A voice out of the blackness cried: "Take us ashore and we'll not only sing, but show you how to dance." The rousing "welcome home" by the great organization working for the betterment of the seamen was highly appreciated, as was evidenced by repeated encores.

Cambridge Conference at Wellesley

It has been announced that the summer conference heretofore held in the buildings of the Cambridge Theological Seminary will meet hereafter at Wellesley College.

ADVENT CALL HAS DEEPENED LIFE OF WOMEN IN PARISH

Experience in Pottsville Is That Advent Call Shows Results

BETHLEHEM, PENNSYLVANIA.—Writing of the Advent Call in Trinity Parish, Pottsville, Miss Laura Boyer, diocesan educational secretary, says:

So far the success of the Advent Call can best be measured by the results to the messengers and intercessors themselves.

The intercessors have realized as never before the power of prayer, and now have trained themselves in the practice of prayer. This band of praying women is bound to have its influence on the parish. The intercessors in the church were joined in their "highest work" by a band of shut-ins, who in this way, some of them for the first time in many years, became active sharers in the work of the Church. I have heard from several of these "intercessors at home" and found them so happy to be able to do something for the Church, together with the other more active Church workers.

For the messengers, the influence of having been missionaries themselves, carrying the message of life, has already been shown in the attendance at the week-day services of the Holy Communion, during this Advent week, as well as in a greater interest in the spiritual life of the parish. Some of the messengers have already taken upon themselves the responsibility of bringing to the rector candidates for Confirmation. Some have persuaded the women they visited to attend the week-day services of the Holy Communion. The meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary last evening was the largest that we have ever had, and we trace the large attendance and the interest in the meeting directly to the Advent Call. We feel that we have in the Advent Call messengers, about one hundred in number, a body of active missionaries whose influence is bound to be shown in the parish and beyond it.

The results to the women who were visited in their homes can hardly be estimated so early. Practically every woman in the parish signed the pledge to make an earnest effort to be more faithful and more intelligent in her prayers, more regular in Bible reading and more frequently present at the Holy Communion.

As a result of the Advent Call we surely expect a deepening of the spiritual life of the parish, a greater sense of responsibility for its welfare, a greater loyalty to the Church, and a larger missionary vision.

Y. W. C. A. TO CONTINUE IN INDUSTRIAL CENTRES

The coming of peace brings grave problems. At all the big plants of industry where women have been employed, new workers have been arriving, to find work, and girls who have been receiving thirty dollars a week are reduced to twelve. The Young Women's Christian Association, which has recreation centers at these plants, has been requested by the agents of the factories to keep the club centers open as usual, advising and caring for the girls, till the last readjustment is made, and the last girl has gone home.

If, as anticipated, the munition plants will be taken over by private capital, and women will be employed in paper mills, dye factories, motor plants, etc., the Y. W. C. A. will continue to operate club centers for the women, for they will be exposed to the same hardships as during the war.

These clubs, or service centers, will include, as in time of war, an information bureau, educational classes, recreational opportunities and week end camping places. The managers of these plants will continue to need the help of the Y. W. C. A., for they will no longer have the help of the Government. There must be more of these centers because of greater need. There will be strikes in readjustment, and women of understanding must be available to give help. The standards won by American women now will become the standards of all nations.

Y. W. C. A. PROVIDES WORKER FOR ARMENIA AND SYRIA

Another chapter in cooperation between humanizing organizations opened January 1, when Miss Margaret B. White of Minneapolis, as a special representative for the National Y. W. C. A. joined the Armenian and Syrian Relief Unit which is to start reconstruction work in those countries. Miss White is the daughter of the Rev. J. E. White, D.D., of Minneapolis, who has been engaged in missionary work in Turkey for some years. She was a teacher in Turkey in 1913-14 and much of her youth was passed in that country. To discover the needs of women and girls in Armenia and Syria will be the special purpose of Miss White's going with this unit. She will report to the Y. W. C. A. from time to time on her findings and it is probable that the war work council of that organization, created upon the entry of America into the world war to provide necessary housing and allied efforts for women engaged in war industries, will follow up her investigations with the establishment of lines of work designed to meet their needs.

Japanese Branch of G. F. S.

KYOTO, JAPAN.—A branch of the Girls' Friendly Society in America has just been started at St. Agnes School here. The English G. F. S. is also in Japan, but confines its work to English girls, no work for the natives having been attempted by it up to the present time.

Escapes from German Prison Camp

Lieutenant Henry C. Lewis, the son of the Rev. Louis K. Lewis of Germantown, Pennsylvania, who spent some time in a German prison camp and escaped into Switzerland through the ruse of using crutches and pretending invalidism, landed in this country on Christmas Eve. He is only the third American soldier who has succeeded in escaping from a German prison camp.

Chaplain Tucker Wins D. S. C.

The Rev. Royal K. Tucker, a chaplain of the 105th Regiment, has been awarded the Distinguished Service Cross. He was rector of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, Gloversville, New York, when he was commissioned chaplain with the rank of captain in the old Second Infantry, which was later renamed the 105th Infantry. The citation came to Captain Tucker as the result of extraordinary heroism. He displayed remarkable devotion to duty and courage in caring for the wounded under heavy machine gun and shell fire.

The Bishop of Oxford's Return—We on this side have been following the progress of Dr. Gore in America with great interest. His name has figured very considerably in THE CHURCHMAN news, but perhaps a final paragraph may not be out of place. Immediately after his return home he was due for an engagement in his old diocese of Birmingham. The occasion was a missionary campaign which had been organized in that city: a great united meeting of Churchmen and Nonconformists. Unfortunately the weather, the influenza and the General Election combined to interfere with the great meeting which took place in the town hall, which was only partly filled. The interest in the cause itself was not sufficient to override the hindrances. But when Dr. Gore's turn came, which was at an intercession service at the cathedral, Birmingham forgot the obstacles, and flocked to hear him for personal reasons. For that city always gratefully remembers his great "citizen work" which he did while there. Of course he drew his parable from his American visit: the Catholic Church should be like the United States—a mass of people of every race, language, and custom, welded into one nation. And the proposed league of nations would unite with a common will in the interests of the whole world. And he appealed for an earlier measure of independence to be given to the Churches founded in foreign lands. Evidently he does not approve of the present system of keeping them in leading strings of the Mother Church at home.

The Duty of Punishment—The other episcopal traveler, the Bishop of London, arrived home about the same time as Dr. Gore. He preached at Westminster Abbey on the evening of Advent Sunday, his text being the Seventy-second Psalm: "Give the King Thy judgments . . . He shall keep the simple folk by their right, defend the children of the poor, and punish the wrongdoer." After a reference to his homeward journey through "a joyous Greece, a wildly triumphant Italy, and a radiant France," he spoke of the two duties of thanksgiving and what he called "thoroughness." He is not a man who would unthinkingly join in popular clamor—and there is no doubt that our people are making the punishment of the Kaiser an election point—but he evidently could see that, in spite of the present feeling on the point, there is a danger that the "easygoing" Englishman, whose wife and daughters had lived in comparative comfort and safety was not going to "redress the wrongs of the children of the poor and punish the wrongdoer." Punishment must not be inflicted only on the "western offenders": that is where we might be "easygoing." Greeks and Serbs have also suffered severely, and justice must be done for their wrongs. The western offenders will doubtless get their due, there is not much danger here of want of thoroughness: Nurse Cavell, Captain Fryatt, the submarine murders will keep us up to the mark. Punishment, proceeded the bishop, is quite different from revenge. "That is why it is a good thing that the United States of America, who can supply a balanced and impartial judgment, should be at hand to see that the punishment, while unsparing and thorough, does not degenerate into revenge." Why should the criminal in the dock be let off the moment he says he is sorry? (The bishop here repeated the point made in his sermon at Rome). Without punishment, experience shows that men will do these things again: if people are "let off" the moral standard of the world goes down. Christ himself died because some one had to fulfil the broken law of God. Either the nations were all more or less responsible for this war, in which case the less said about punishment the better, or it was an entirely unnecessary war, brought on by one nation to satisfy its pride and lust of power. "God expects to see us exact punishment."

Professor Deissman's Appeal—As the appeal of Professor Deissman for more favorable armistice terms was designed to reach America through the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ, it has doubtless been reproduced on your side. No doubt it will receive a similar answer to that given by the Archbishop of Canterbury, to whom it was also addressed. The archbishop, replying through the Archbishop of Upsala, Sweden, declares that the professor's description of the situation is not one which he can accept as correct. It says nothing about the origin of the war, nor of Germany's manner of conducting it. Germany has done a grave wrong to the Christian cause, and no protest was raised in that country against the crimes which it has perpetrated. Righteousness must now be vindicated "even though the vindication involves sternness." Full reparation must be made. But there is hope for the future: "We recognize the sacred ties which bind together in ultimate unity the children of our Father who is in heaven, the deep and enduring ties of Christian fellowship." The archbishop hopes that when the necessary reparation has been made we may be enabled once more to lay hold of that fellowship and make it mutually operative anew.

The Church and the Elections—No special lead has been given to Church people as to the kind of candidates to support in the General Election. The archbishops have contented themselves with issuing a prayer that representatives of the right character be chosen. There is indeed no outstanding Church question, unless it be that of the "Life and Liberty" movement. In a few cases candidates have been asked for their attitude on this point, but it seems to be assumed that a Coalition Government will not fail to do justice to the Church. The Church Family Newspaper has been endeavoring to extract opinions from Church dignitaries as to whether the Coalition should be supported. It has not "drawn" many bishops: the Bishops of Bath and Wells and of Durham briefly record their approval, those of Carlisle and of Sodor and Man write more fully. The remainder of the replies are from deans, of which the two most interesting are those of Gloucester (Dr. Gee), who says that his sympathies are largely with Labor, but that "it has made the mistake of its life in deserting the Coalition," and of that doughty radical, Dr. T. C. Fry, Dean of Lincoln, who dismisses the enquiry with the unexpected remark that he now eschews politics at election.

CHICAGO

Parish Meeting to Discuss the Ministry

—On Tuesday, December 16, at St. Paul's Church, there was held a special meeting of the boys and young men of the parish to discuss the ministry. There was a supper at the parish house at which thirty-six were present. Afterward there was a general discussion, and talks by Mr. Inglis, president of the local assembly of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, and the Rev. B. I. Bell, volunteer chaplain of the Great Lakes Naval Training Station. It is good to know that some of our churches feel strongly enough about the need of more young men entering the ministry to take definite steps to lay before their boys and young men the ministry as a possible field for their life work.

The St. Mark's Society—On Friday, December 13, Bishop Griswold addressed the St. Mark's Society at the University of Chicago. The St. Mark's Society was started last year by a group of Churchwomen at the university, and has been holding regular meetings ever since. It was one of the first college societies to become affiliated with the newly formed National Student Council of the Episcopal Church. The meeting which Bishop Griswold addressed was the last of a series of four Advent meetings held in compliance with the requirements set forth by the National Student Council. Owing to the absence of the president of the society from the university, Miss Rachel Sheldon was elected president for the rest of the college year.

Memorial Service at Winnetka—On Sunday, December 22, at Christ Church, Winnetka, a memorial service was held for Lieutenant Roswell Hayes Fuller, of the Ninety-third Aero Squadron, who was killed over the German lines on September 26. Lieutenant Fuller was twenty-three years old. The service was in charge of the Rev. Peter C. Wolcott, rector of Trinity Church, Highland Park.

Bishop Anderson at the Sunday Evening Club—Bishop Anderson was the speaker at the Christmas meeting of the Sunday Evening Club, held on the Sunday before Christmas. "As a people we particularly need at this time a renewal of faith in God, in our national ideals, and in the people," he said. "That is what democracy needs to save it from sordidness and the commonest vulgarity."

"There is a rumor going about that Armenia, ravaged and despoiled by the Turk, is to be placed under Turkish suzerainty. It impressed me so strongly that I cabled to Paris, declaring that such an act would be viewed with inexpressible horror by the entire civilized world."

NEW YORK

Christmas—Although the heavy rain interfered somewhat with the services on Christmas Eve, especially with those planned for out-of-doors, the weather cleared Christmas morning, and all day the sun shone brightly. The churches were thronged. Many of the sermons were victory and peace sermons. The saints' days after Christmas were marked by Sunday School and guild festivals. At St. Ann's in the Bronx the Christmas pantomime Logos, printed a year ago in THE CHURCHMAN, was presented. On Christmas afternoon the choir of St. Martha's Chapel in the Bronx visited the wards of Harlem Hospital and sang Christmas carols. A beautiful carol service was held at the cathedral on the afternoon of the Sunday after Christmas. The cathedral choir sang the usual carols as well as some new ones, if possible more exquisitely than ever before.

New Year's—Dr. Muhlenberg was the first to hold a watch-night service in his church on New Year's night. He instituted this beautiful custom as a protest against the revelry and drunkenness with which the new year is so often ushered in. The custom is still continued. At eight o'clock a service of remembrance is held, when the names of all members of the parish who have died in the past year are read aloud. Then at half after eleven is a short service followed at midnight by the Holy Communion. At the Church of the Ascension, Calvary Church and Trinity Church there also are midnight celebrations of the Holy Communion. At Trinity the chimes are rung for an hour before midnight. It used to be that the noise and merrymaking on lower Broadway entirely drowned out the music of the bells. But since the midnight Communion service has been instituted the New Year is ushered in with more decorum and a more fitting sense of the solemnity of the occasion. There is a watch-night service in the cathedral, with an address by Dean Robbins but no celebration of the Holy Communion. At all the watch-night services there is special music, and in several cases an organ recital preceding the service.

Services and Preachers—Dr. Percy Dearmer will preach at Trinity Church next Sunday, January 5. The Cowley Fathers will preach at St. Paul's Chapel on Sunday evenings at eight o'clock during January and February. January 5 is the fifteenth anniversary of Dr. Gates' ministry at the Chapel of the Intercession. He will preach an historical sermon in the morning and in the afternoon the rector, Dr. Manning, will preach. Saturday afternoon, January 4, a Children's Victory service will be held at the cathedral. The combined choirs of the city Sunday Schools will render the music.

Death of Mrs. Flagler—The Church of the Ascension has lost one of its most devoted parishioners and strongest supporters in the death of Mrs. J. H. Flagler. She died of influenza on Christmas Eve. Her funeral was held at the Church of the Ascension on December 27. Mrs. Flagler had a beautiful voice and for many years sang in the choir; she was the founder of the St. Cecilia choir. She was active in many philanthropies.

Junior Clergy Missionary Association

The regular monthly meeting of the J. C. M. A. was held on Tuesday, December 17, in the parish house of the Church of the Ascension. The rector, the Rev. Percy Stickney Grant, extended his hearty welcome to the association. The speaker of the day was the Rev. Ernest M. Stires, D.D., rector of St. Thomas' Church, who spoke upon the topic "The Church and the Army—Over There." His story was a graphic and inspiring message.

The next meeting of the association will be held on Tuesday, January 14, at St. Ann's Church, Brooklyn. The Rev. Charles L. Slattery, D.D., rector of Grace Church, will be the speaker on "From Flag to Cross." It is felt by many that Dr. Slattery is dealing with probably the most important topic in the association's series for this year. He will endeavor to show us how the spirit and activities called forth by the war may be directed into Church channels. It is hoped that a large representation will be present.

BOSTON

Christmas—Christmas Eve was ushered in with a heavy rain and the day itself was damp and disagreeable. But the influence of the Twenty Weeks made itself manifest in the congregations and large numbers of Christmas Communion services, which attracted large numbers of people at the cathedral and the Church of the Advent. Owing to the rain the carol singing before the State House was postponed to Christmas night. Mayor Peters and members of the Japanese mission made short addresses at the conclusion of the meeting. The bands of singers were led by Professor O'Shea, the director of music in the Boston public schools.

Keeping Christmas in New England—New England is celebrating Christmas as never before. We are told by a Churchwoman who came from the South to a Vermont village about fifty years ago that the only recognition of Christmas in the community at that time was the service at the Episcopal church and the tree at the rectory for the children. Even after all these years one will find many a town and village where all the churches are closed on Christmas Day. This is also true as regards the observance of Thanksgiving at many places in Vermont and Massachusetts. In spite of the proclamations setting apart that day as a day of worship and thanksgiving it is our experience that the churches, with the exception of the Episcopal church, are usually closed.

The Good News Associates—Mrs. Edith Talbot of Newton Highlands, a daughter of General Armstrong, the founder of Hampton Institute, has been delivering an interesting series of lectures at St. John's Church, Newtonville. Mrs. Talbot's theme is the revival of mysticism in the Church. The following from the Transcript gives an idea of the scope and direction of the movement:

A small but interesting group has recently been formed in New York for the purpose of spreading a sane mysticism among the Churches. Its members believe in health, happiness and success through the spiritual life, based on the teachings on Jesus, within the fellowship of the Christian Church. They believe that if the Churches would develop the practical possibilities of the Christian life they would both meet the needs of their own members better and serve a larger circle than at present. They believe in and practice direct evangelism, directed not so much toward the general public as toward the building up and deepening of the spiritual life of the Church members, and they publish a monthly bulletin devoted to this message.

The organization is strictly denominational in character, and finds support among church membership in all denominations. Further information can be had by applying to the secretary, or to Room 83A, 289 Fourth Ave., New York.

WEST VIRGINIA

Dr. Brittingham's Illness—The Rev. Jacob Brittingham, D.D., for thirty years rector of St. Luke's Church, Wheeling, West Virginia, has been in the general hospital of that city for the three weeks last past as the result of a serious operation. Dr. Brittingham is now convalescent, but will be unable to leave the hospital for some time yet. It was a great disappointment to the parish and their rector that he could not be with them at Christmas, as this was his first absence on that occasion in thirty years. It is probable that he will return home about the middle of January. During the period of his absence the clergy of the diocese have been ministering at St. Luke's.

Dr. Brittingham was the first clergyman ordained by Bishop Peterkin and is without doubt the widest known and best loved minister in the State of West Virginia.

LEXINGTON

Influenza—The Diocese of Lexington has suffered much from the influenza epidemic, which continues in places. The annual Bishop's Day, held on the bishop's birthday, was not held this year; nor was the annual meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary. St. John's School, Corbin, which had but a few mild cases, has been closed through the advice of the board of health. Margaret College, Versailles, kept so strict a quarantine that not a case of influenza occurred within its doors. The disease became so prevalent, however, that President Harris, acting on the advice of the health board of the city and the executive committee of the board of directors of the school, asked the parents to take their children home until after the abatement of the epidemic. It will probably be after the holidays before the school's sessions will be resumed. Our general missionary, the Rev. W. R. Dern, has been unable to hold any services at all, the epidemic being more general in the mountains. Lexington, however, is now open for limited services.

Cathedral to Get Assistant—The vestry of Christ Church Cathedral has agreed to elect an assistant minister, not only that the dean may be relieved of many onerous burdens incident to a large parish and too heavy for one man to carry in connection with all that is required of a modern rector, but also to extend the work as, again, no one man could, and to give the Episcopal Church in Lexington a larger share in all community service.

Colored Work—The Rev. E. E. Hall, minister in charge of St. Andrew's Mission, Lexington, is extending the work amongst the colored people of the diocese by holding occasional services in nearby towns. Mr. Hall has been East in the interest of St. Andrew's rectory, receiving some contributions towards the debt on the building. Contributions amounting to $250 have been received from the diocese for this purpose.

Building Resumed—The congregation of the Good Shepherd, Lexington, has again begun operations on its new church building to replace the former structure, destroyed by fire some months ago. Work on the new building had been stopped, from patriotic motives, while the war was going on. The Rev. Arthur Marshall, formerly in charge of St. Andrew's, Fort Thomas, and who has been serving as chaplain at Camp Zachary Taylor, has been appointed, by Bishop Burton, in charge of the work at the Good Shepherd.

Continues—The official organ of the diocese of Lexington, the Diocesan News, continues its usual publication of ten issues a year, notwithstanding the increased cost of printing. HENRY P. MANNING.

WESTERN MICHIGAN

A Soldier Priest—The Rev. F. A. Patterson, of this diocese, has been in active service with the Canadian forces as a soldier. He has, however, been privileged to celebrate the Holy Communion, to hold other services, and to preach on numerous occasions in hospitals and on the field.

Funeral of the Rev. F. W. Bachman—The funeral of the Rev. F. W. Bachman, lately of St. Alban's, Indiana Harbor, was held in St. Paul's Church, Grand Rapids, November 12. It was in this church that the deceased priest celebrated the Holy Communion for the first time, and it is the spiritual home of his mother. Several of the clergy acted as pall bearers. The Rev. Mr. Bachman was at one time rector of St. James, Albion, and was greatly beloved.

A Thank Offering of $4,500—At St. Paul's Church, Muskegon, Thanksgiving Day was marked by a splendid expression of gratitude for victory and all other blessings. In the timely spirit of sacrifice the people of the parish made an offering to pay a standing debt of $1,800. When the offerings were counted the amount was found to be $4,500.

At a meeting of the vestry of St. Mark's Pro-Cathedral, Grand Rapids, on the day of the signing of the armistice, the following minute was spread upon the record of the church:

On the eleventh day of November, nineteen hundred and eighteen, as the people of the world rejoice in the signing of the armistice ending the dreadful war which has continued for better than four years, the vestry of St. Mark's Pro-Cathedral desires to spread upon its records of this day's meeting an expression of gratitude to Almighty God for the peace which has come. The vestry is grateful that through all these trying years the cathedral church has not only been able most successfully to continue her work, but, as well, that the bishop and many of her flock have gone forth to do their country's bidding. The vestry is no less grateful for the valiant work done by all those who have remained at home, in their individual and collective capacities, for the welfare of Church and Nation. And the vestry remembers with deep gratitude those who have fallen—the brave ones who have given their lives, whose souls have mounted to the Paradise of God, there to find well earned peace and refreshment. For all these gifts and for the peace now falling upon the world, the vestry records its thanks.

MISSOURI

Christmas in St. Louis—Christmas has come to be a wonderful day among the poor and the sick and the unfortunate in the city institutions of St. Louis. In the sanitarium the only Christmas gifts the lonely and forgotten have are the packages of fruit and candy which are carried on Christmas morning by the helpers on the staff of our missionary to the city institutions. The old and crippled men and women at the infirmary get Christmas packages and, weekly through the year, as a kind of continuous Christmas present, they get a movie show. At the City Hospital each of the 700 patients gets a Christmas package and the children get toys. The workhouse, the jail, the industrial school, the Koch Hospital for Tuberculosis all are visited by members of the staff with greetings and gifts. All this is done under the direction of the Rev. J. H. Lever, Episcopal missionary to the city institutions. To crown it all, Mr. Lever starts out in the very early morning and before ten o'clock has taken a quartette of the best singers in St. Louis to five of the institutions to sing the beautiful old Christmas carols. This year Mr. Lever asked and received a special offering from friends of the work of $1,000, in order that he "might say 'Merry Christmas' and mean it, regardless of creed or color, to 5,000 of the most lonesome and cheerless and discouraged men and women and children in the world, by God remembered and by men forgot." The Christmas joy and cheer carried by the Episcopal Church to the city's poor has come to be regarded as one of the most significant and beautiful features of the celebration of the day of Jesus' birth.

At St. Philip's Church—The new rector of St. Philip's Parish, St. Louis, the Rev. R. D. S. Putney, has announced that the church will be "wide open" every day of the week. It is also planned to keep open house with amusements, games, reading matter, etc., in the parish house alongside of the church. On several Sunday evenings recently supper has been served, after which discussions of some live topic have been had.

A Community Sing—On the evening of the Sunday before Christmas the choir of the Church of the Ascension, St. Louis, was assisted by the War Camp Community Service and the St. Louis Art League Organization for Americanization Through Music in a "community sing," rehearsing favorite Christmas carols. One purpose of this was in preparation for the Christmas Eve street caroling, which has greatly grown in popularity in St. Louis of late years. Groups of singers organized for the carol work were invited to attend and they, with the congregation choir, went through the carol book under the leadership of the superintendent of music in the public schools and Ray Dougless, organist and choir master of the Ascension. An address suited to the occasion was made by the president of the Art League.

HARRINGTON ROGERS.

NEVADA

Advent Call—The time for the Advent Call was when the influenza situation was most serious throughout the state. The plans were carried out as best they could be under these circumstances.

Among Pyramid Lake Indians—Miss Lucy Nelson Carter, for several years a worker among the Uncompahgres in Utah has come as a United Offering worker among the Pah-ute Indians on the Pyramid Lake Reservation. The workers' quarters in the mission house on this reservation have been completely furnished through the generosity of the Rev. and Mrs. Sherman Coolidge.

Diocesan Notes—One hundred and thirty-five men went into war service from the parishes and missions of Nevada.

The Twelfth Annual Convocation will be held in Trinity Church, Reno, beginning Sunday, January 26, 1919.

The Rev. Harold H. Kelley has resigned the rectorship of St. Peter's Parish, Carson, and the charge of adjacent missions, to take effect January 1, 1919. The Rev. James MacLaughlin comes from Alamosa, Colorado, to St. Bartholomew's Mission, Ely, with charge of nearby places, on January 1, 1919.

GEORGE WILLIAMS.

ALBANY

New Life at St. John's, Cohoes—On Monday, December 16, 150 men gathered in the parish house of St. John's Church, Cohoes, the Rev. E. J. Hopper, rector, to consider some plan whereby the men of the parish might serve the Church in meeting the demands of our "new world." A good spirit prevailed. Special interest was shown in the experience of Mr. E. J. Walenta, the new field secretary of St. Andrew's Brotherhood. The names of twenty-six men were handed in for a prospective organization of a Brotherhood chapter, and six names for a junior chapter and twelve for a boy scout troop.

The Rev. Mr. Hopper came to the rectorship of St. John's on October 1 to succeed the Rev. Frederick S. Sill, D.D., now rector emeritus. Mr. Hopper is stirring up this old and conservative parish. During the Advent Call there were several services each day with meditation and Bible studies and at noon the missionary litany was said.

COLORADO

In Honor of Soldier Dead—Sunday, December 22, was designated by the bishop as the day for all congregations to assemble to honor the memory of their dead who have given their lives as a ransom for many in camp or battlefield. As complete a list as possible of their names has been printed with the form of service put forward by the bishop.

New Church Dedicated—One of the handsomest churches in Denver was dedicated by the bishop on Sunday, December 22, at East Twenty-second and Dexter Street. Founded as a mission by the Rev. H. R. H. O'Malley nearly twenty years ago the church built by the Rev. R. B. H. Bell and known as St. Thomas' is in one of the most prosperous districts of the city now. It is of Spanish mission style and cost upwards of $20,000. The Rev. Sherman Coolidge assisted in the ceremony.

Advent Call Postponed to Lent—The Advent Call has been postponed from Advent to Lent owing to the epidemic of influenza, which prevents a regular and systematic visitation being made.

Clerical Changes—The Rev. James MacLaughlin leaves the diocese to take up work in Nevada on New Year's Day. He has worked here for eighteen years and for several years was secretary of the diocesan council. The Rev. Alan Russell on the same day relinquishes his connection with St. George's, Leadville, and the Rev. D. C. Lees, of Buena Vista, assumes temporary charge of the same.

Ordination—Twelve persons only were permitted to be present by the mayor when on November 17 the Rev. De Forest Bolles was admitted to the priesthood by the bishop, assisted by the Rev. A. P. Mack and the Rev. Thomas Worrall. Mr. Bolles lives at La Junta and has charge of that place and also Las Animas and Lamar, all in the Arkansas Valley.

G. H. HOLORAN.

NORTH TEXAS

Influenza—Practically all the churches in North Texas were closed by the city and town authorities during the epidemic of influenza in November. Services were resumed the latter part of the month, but in many places "the quarantine against heaven" was renewed in December because of a recrudescence of the disease. In Amarillo the rector of St. Andrew's Church appeared before the board of health and the city commission as representative of the Roman Catholic and Protestant pastors and obtained recognition of the place for prayer and sacraments in combating the epidemic.

Personal Notes—The Rev. A. D. Ellis, rector of the Church of the Heavenly Rest, Abilene, is ministering once a month to the parish at San Angelo pending the call of a rector to that place. Rev. Mr. Ellis visited Amarillo and made three addresses anent the follow up work of the Advent Call.

The Rev. W. A. Williams, Ph.D., has resumed his mission work, having returned from the Chaplains' Training School at Louisville. His address is Colorado, Texas.

Thanksgiving—In Amarillo on November 11 when the whistles blew at eleven o'clock as they had blown daily for some weeks calling people to prayer, some 3,000 people gathered spontaneously on the court house square for thanksgiving. At three in the afternoon services were held at the Episcopal, Presbyterian, Roman Catholic and Baptist churches. Bishop Temple and Archdeacon Garner addressed the congregation that filled St. Andrew's, where a Te Deum was sung by the full choir and a special thanksgiving service was led by the rector, Rev. E. C. Seaman.

E. CECIL SEAMAN.

PITTSBURGH

Ordination—Mr. William James White, of the senior class of the General Theological Seminary, New York, was admitted to the diaconate in the Chapel of the Good Shepherd of that institution, on December 6, by the Rt. Rev. Reginald H. Weller, D.D., Bishop of Fond Du Lac, acting for the Bishop of Pittsburgh.

Chaplaincies—Two of the clergy who had been in the Training Camp for Chaplains, at Louisville, Kentucky, have returned home with their commissions in the reserves. The Rev. S. H. Bishop will resume his rectorship at the Church of the Holy Cross, Pittsburgh, and the Rev. T. M. Browne will probably take up parochial or missionary work at the opening of the new year.

JANE CUDDY.

BALTIMORE

The Churchman's Club—Nearly three hundred and fifty men sat down to the dinner of the Churchman's Club at the Southern Hotel upon the occasion of its December meeting. The chief speaker was Lieutenant George M. Sauvage, a member of the French High Commission in this country. Lieutenant Sauvage is a priest of the Roman Church, but he appeared in the uniform of a soldier and his address was not a sermon but a stirring recital of some of his experiences upon the battlefield. He described the brutality and robbery of the Germans, as he himself had seen them, and stated what France desires as the results of the war. He asserted that France has the greatest confidence in the men who will dictate the terms of peace, for "all the allied nations have sent their best men to do this work, and you have sent your best man." This brought the club up standing and led to such a demonstration as showed its hearty endorsement of the President and of his mission in France. The Rev. Dr. Philip Cook, who has just returned from six months of war-work in France, told the club in an interesting way of his experiences and impressions.

Legacy to St. Luke's—St. Luke's Church, Baltimore, has again had the good fortune to be made a legatee of a member of its congregation. The estate of Mrs. Elizabeth Sophia Lish is left in trust to her brother and his wife during their lifetime and at their death is to go to St. Luke's Church.

WYLLYS REDE.

MONTANA

Clerical Notes—The Rev. Thomas W. Bennett of Trinity Mission, Jeffers, in the Madison Valley, having declined a call to the Church of the Incarnation, Great Falls, has accepted a call to the rectorship of St. James Parish, Dillon.

The Rev. Mr. Kapp from the diocese of Milwaukee is in charge of the parish of the Holy Spirit, Missoula, while the rector, the Rev. H. S. Gatley, is away on a leave of absence.

Mr. John Crippen Evans, formerly a Methodist minister and now a candidate for Holy Orders, who has been for some months in the artillery officers' training school at Camp Zachary Taylor, Louisville, Kentucky, expects to return soon and take up his work at Hamilton and the Bitter Root Valley.

Congregational Minister Confirmed—The Rev. A. Clark Selby, a former Congregational minister, was recently confirmed in the Church of the Holy Spirit, Missoula, and is now a candidate for Holy Orders. Continuing for the present his residence in Missoula, he will minister to a number of missions in the western portion of the diocese.

MAINE

Ordination to the Priesthood—The Rev. Robert J. Evans was ordained to the priesthood by the Bishop of Maine on the Third Sunday in Advent. The candidate was presented by the Rev. E. M. Weller, of Caribou, a former member of St. Paul's parish. The sermon was preached by Dr. G. B. Nicholson, who was ordained in the same church twenty-five years ago. His theme was "The Priesthood—Its Necessity and Its Responsibility." After the benediction Dr. Nicholson presented Mr. Evans with a beautiful private communion set from the Gorham shop in New York. It is a gift from the people of St. Paul's Church. Mr. Evans will remain priest in charge of St. Paul's Church, Fort Fairfield. A happy coincidence is the fact that Mr. Evans was confirmed six years ago on the Third Sunday in Advent in St. Paul's Church in Brunswick.

An example of thoroughness in the interests of the Advent Call was shown by the women of Trinity Church, Portland. Before Advent season began all the women in the parish were reached either in groups or as individuals. And the spirit and obligation of the Call was emphasized by a large corporate Communion on the First Sunday in Advent. The parish was can-passed a second time during the first week in Advent to add a further note in behalf of the reconstruction which is expected to follow the victory which the signing of the armistice represents.

GEORGIA

Savannah—While not so severe as in other cities the influenza epidemic has caused the churches to be closed for several weeks, one period being during warm weather when outdoor services were possible. During the second period in November and December this has not been possible. The prohibition has now been removed and all churches had services on Christmas Day. The Rev. W. Dakin of St. John's, suffered a four weeks' illness. Two Sundays the church was closed, the services on the other two being taken by Bishop Osborne, who is now permanently settled in the city, and who also presided on Christmas Day.

At the Episcopal Orphanage many children were sent to hospitals for care and one little one was taken to rest. All are, however, well now and were able to enjoy their usual Christmas tree, at which the bishop of the diocese was present and gave a lovely and hearty talk in the chapel before the tree was lighted.

Brunswick—The Rev. Wm. Johnson from Augusta will enter upon the rectorship of St. Mark's Church on January 1. The bishop of the diocese spent the last Sunday in the year with St. Mark's people, confirming one candidate from St. Augustine's.

EDWARD W. OSBORNE.

SOUTH DAKOTA

A Church Thanksgiving Dinner—An interesting gathering was held in St. George's Mission, Redfield, on Thanksgiving Day. Instead of having many separate Thanksgiving dinners in each family the members of the congregation were asked to bring their dinners to the guild hall and there a Thanksgiving dinner was enjoyed by about sixty-five persons. After the dinner there was music by the orchestra of the mission church and the people danced and played cards together as one great family for the rest of the afternoon. They all stayed for supper and had the "leavings" and the remainder of the evening passed equally quickly in a general good time. It was a splendid exhibition of that fellowship and brotherhood which the Church needs so much to-day not merely for herself, but to give to the world. The Rev. W. H. Talmage is the missionary in charge of the work at Redfield.

Uses of a Guild Hall—The guild hall of Grace Church, Huron, was used as a hospital during the recent epidemic of influenza and proved of splendid helpfulness to the city during the dread disease. During the year this same building serves as the meeting place weekly for the Rotary Club of Huron, the Young Ladies' Guild of the parish providing the luncheons. The rector of the church, the Rev. E. W. Pigion, is a member of the Rotary Club. He is also the chairman of the Home Service Section of the Red Cross for Beadle County.

A Conference of Deans—The bishop of the district has called a meeting of the deans of the various deaneries of the state to meet with him and with a few other clergymen of the district in Sioux Falls to consider further work that the deanery system may accomplish in missionary work in the district. The meeting will be held immediately after the New Year. It is probable that at the same time the Rev. David Clark, who is a deacon in charge of the work at Rapid City, will be advanced to the priesthood. Mr. Clark graduated last year from the Berkeley Divinity School and has been in Rapid City since that time.

PAUL ROBERTS.

NORTH CAROLINA

Two Priests Ordained—On December 18, being the first of the Advent Ember Days, the Rev. James Reginald Mallett and the Rev. Samuel W. Hale were ordained to the priesthood in Christ Church, Raleigh, North Carolina. This was the first service held by the bishop of the diocese since his attack of the influenza. Mr. Mallett was presented by his father, the Rev. Frank J. Mallett, rector of St. Paul's parish, New Albany, Indiana; and Mr. Hale was presented by the Rev. W. W. Way, rector of St. Mary's School, Raleigh. The preacher was the Rev. Robert B. Owens, rector of the Church of the Holy Comforter, Charlotte.

The two newly ordained priests are in charge of the work at Mayodan, an important cotton mill village, and several associate missions nearby. They have done good work as deacons, and have purchased to themselves a good degree.

MILTON A. BARBER.

ALASKA

Losses to the Staff—The mission staff has been greatly decreased during the past year. Rev. Wm. Loola, native deacon, and the Rev. T. P. Howard, died; the Rev. Philip Howard Williams died in Baltimore soon after reaching his home on furlough; the Rev. A. E. Butcher of Juneau has resigned and gone to Honolulu to work; Miss A. Isabel Rowntree has returned to the States, and Walter Harper and his wife were lost in the wreck of the steamer Sophia.

Bishop Rowe writes, regarding this disaster: "The Sophia disaster, the loss of Walter Harper and his wife, John Pugh and many old friends, was terribly pathetic, stunning and depressing."

The Shift in Population—From a population of about 45,000 the white settlers in Alaska have dropped to about 16,000, largely owing to enlistments for the war and to the era of high prices caused by the war. Prospecting at best is a hand to mouth business, where a man adventures his life in the search for gold, matching his physical and mental strength against the silent, tremendous forces of nature. His chance of "striking it rich" is about one in a thousand, yet the lure of that life keeps him at it; working in the summer to gather together a "grub stake," early in the winter going out with dog-sled, usually one dog, the prospector pulling the sled alongside the dog, and when he reaches his selected location, thawing the frozen muck down to bed-rock and then panning the dirt on the bottom to see if gold is there. It is a hard life, and the prospector deserves all he finds, no matter how much it be.

At the present time the normally high prices of food—about four times the price in the States—have been increased until it is almost impossible to get together the necessary "grub stake," hence part of the exodus to the ship yards and other war works on the Pacific coast, where high wages are commanded.

With the end of the war the exodus will stop and ingress begin, while the funds saved by the prospectors may open up an entirely new section and great progress result.

New Churches—The most prosperous section of Alaska today is the southern coast, where the building of the railroad which will connect the coast with the interior is progressing at a good rate. In order to take care of the increased opportunities we have built a church close by the famous Red Dragon at Cordova, which will be finished at Christmas. It cost $5,000, and the Kennecott Copper Co. have given us $2,500 towards its cost, thus testifying to the belief they have that the mission is of help in their work.

The residence and church at Seward, likewise, have been completed, but are not yet paid for.

From Nenana, November 15—The Indian mission, which has done such splendid work here, must shortly be either partly rebuilt or removed. The terminal of the railroad from the coast for the present is here, and that spells disaster to our work, so that it may be necessary to remove the whole plant—Indians of the village, mission children, mission, everything.

GUY H. MADARA.

HONOLULU

Great Thanksgiving Service—On Thanksgiving Day a notable service was held in St. Andrew's Cathedral, Honolulu. Previous services of thanksgiving had been held, but the bishop sought to make this one of a special character, and to this end he invited representative people to be present. There were in attendance in reserved seats the consuls of Great Britain, France, Italy, Belgium, Portugal, Japan, China and Cuba. There were also present the governor, ex-governor, the delegate to congress (Prince Kuhio), the president of the territorial senate, the speaker of the house of representatives, etc., the heads of the several departments of the Army and Navy, each of whom was attended by from five to fifteen officers, of whom there were over fifty present.

The cathedral was packed when a choir of forty voices entered, preceded by the cross, followed by the Stars and Stripes and the Red Cross banner.

The flags of the Allies were hung in the choir. The service was specially prepared by the bishop and included the Serbian national hymn and the intercessory hymn set to the music in King Albert's Book.

The bishop preached and called for a true patriotism which would lead each citizen to strive to give the best that was in him for the honor and welfare of his country. After the sermon the bishop stood in the choir and said a few words about each flag. At the close of each brief address the national anthem of the country represented was played on the organ.

The service made a deep impression upon the large number present. The bishop had previously presided at a large public meeting of thanksgiving at which the various ministers of the city were present and took part.

Service Flags—Service flags are in place in all the churches in Honolulu. One which excites especial interest is that at St. Peter's Chinese Church, containing twenty-nine stars. It has two gold stars, one representing Sergeant Apau Kau, who was killed in France in October. A memorial service was held for him, and among the mourners were two brothers of the deceased, one a lieutenant and the other a sergeant in the Army.

Changing Hymns

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

I am glad you give space to a letter from somebody else who has ideas similar to those in my letter in the issue of November 30 on the change in the new hymnal of "Weary of earth and laden with my sin." There is no question that a literary mistake as well as an intellectual has been made in the substitution of "self" for "earth." The hymn throughout is a contemplation of "heaven" life as giving a sense of "home" in contradistinction to what "earth" life gives. The sentiment is a true, experiential one, however much the committee may have been trying to think it was doing away with a morbid use of "earth" in days when sociology aims at an ethical will of God being done on "earth" as it is in "heaven." Other hymns for other moods are always supposed to be comprised by a well edited hymnal. To show the untenableness of the change, we can go to another well known hymnal, which has a literary variant on the same thought as that in the original first two lines, and make the same substitution:

"Self is a desert drear;
Heaven is my home."

Instantly, we want "Earth," the original word, back in its place.

Is it really too late to save the hymn?

Forms for Administering Communion

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

In few matters are there such wide divergences as in the manner in which the clergy recite the words of administration to the communicants. The forms given in the Prayer Book for each kind are seldom said to each person complete, even when, at so-called "early celebrations" there are fewer than a dozen present and receiving. More and more the custom seems to be coming into use of addressing groups of two, or three, or four, or, what is worse by far, of beginning the first two or three words for the first receiver and then stringing out the words, so timing them that the last few words are addressed to the last person.

There is much to excuse these methods. It is probable that every priest would confess that the ideal way of using the words would be to say them all to each person, just as the English rubric orders. Nevertheless the use of these long formulae becomes burdensome to the priest, especially when he is alone (as most of our parish clergy are), and wearisome to the waiting people. Moreover, if a priest conscientiously tries to utter the complete form to each receiver his utterance almost inevitably becomes an almost breathless rapid gabble in which balance, pause, or emphasis is impossible, so that all sense of seriousness or devotion is quite absent.

Why is it necessary, then, for us to keep a form which is in practice essentially set at nought?

Our American form is the Elizabethan combination of two earlier forms set forth respectively in the First and Second Prayer Books of King Edward VI.

In those days actual Communion had become infrequent, a minimum of once a year, at Easter, having become the usual number. The Reformation attempt to require a minimum of three Communions a year never had success. The failure in course of time became so marked that by the time our American edition of the Prayer Book was put forth all mention of any minimum was omitted, and is still left out.

In consequence, then, of the rarity of Celebrations and also of the meagre number coming, the recitation of the long forms would not be burdensome. Affairs are much better now, there are frequent Celebrations and fairly large numbers come to receive.

Is it not possible to devise formulae which will be helps to devotion, theologically accurate and so brief that they can be said to each person in full? Such were the very early forms used when the priest said to each communicant "The Body of Christ; The Blood of Christ." Somewhat later a precatory phrase was appended: "Preserve thy soul unto everlasting life." Still later the first sentence of our double form was composed, quite beautiful, true and complete. Nevertheless it is too long, as experience proves; far, far too long when the second sentence is added.

If we cannot have the earliest of these forms restored—"The Body, the Blood of Christ"—is it not possible to adopt a method which would be dignified, solemn and complete and check or destroy the custom of uttering one or two words to each receiver as the priest passes along?

A bishop authorized his priests to address the whole of each form to each railful, administering to each person with the words "The Body, the Blood of our Lord Jesus Christ" no more. Experience where this use prevailed proved it to be admirable. The solemn words spoken to all came with a force and authority that were very affecting; they drew the attention of all minds and stimulated earnest devotion.

Yet another suggestion might be ventured: To say the whole form for each kind once to each railful and then to administer in silence to each person. Each would know that the whole was spoken to him; there would be no parceling out of the affirmations and injunctions of the forms.

One thing more: there is nothing sacramental in our forms; we are not bound to them as we are bound to the formula of Baptism, and therefore our American Church is free to choose any form of words she can find "in ancient authors," or elsewhere, or to frame others, subject only to the need of conforming loyally to the spirit of Catholic tradition.

But if we are going to retain this cumbersome Elizabethan form we ought to use it in a better way than our clergy are using it.

Preaching the Red Cross

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

In a letter from a Pittsburgh correspondent, printed in your issue of December 21, the surprising statement is made that "the Church exists to preach the Gospel, not the Red Cross, to every living creature." Is it possible that any one can maintain that preaching the Red Cross is not preaching the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ? Is there any institution upon earth that more truly exemplifies the precepts of that Gospel?

When our Lord first sent forth His disciples upon their ministry He commissioned them "to preach the Kingdom of God and to heal the sick." And when He defined the terms of admission to that Kingdom the tests he announced were not belief in any dogma or doctrine, nor even service rendered to or for His Church, but feeding the hungry, refreshing the thirsty, giving shelter to the stranger, clothing the naked, visiting the sick and the prisoners. The Red Cross exists for the performance of these works of mercy. Like the Blessed Master whom they serve, its representatives go about doing good. Preaching the Red Cross, symbol of His own sacrifice for his brethren, is surely preaching His Gospel.

The same correspondent is also much concerned about the prohibition of church services during the recent influenza epidemic and commends a clergyman who saw fit to disregard the order of the health authorities and expressed his readiness to "rot in prison" rather than obey it. It is not my purpose to discuss here the necessity or wisdom of the official action, but I wonder whether your correspondent has not overlooked St. Peter's admonition to the Christians of his day, "to submit yourselves to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake." If all our clergy had assumed the defiant attitude of the Pittsburgh rector, in what a shameful position the Church would have been placed before the community, and before her Master as well!

It is absurd to say that the churches were closed from any political motive. No possible political end could have been served by the order. It cannot be seriously doubted that the authorities acted from the best of motives, believing that, in the great emergency which existed, their action would promote the common good. No surrender of principle was involved in obedience to their command, and the great mass of our clergy and people willingly submitted in the spirit enjoined by St. Peter.

A New Year Resolution

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

On Saturday, November 23, I noticed that the Rev. David M. Steele would make an address before our Clerical Brotherhood on "What is the matter with the Episcopal Church?" As one of the priesthood of the laity I went to hear him. As usual his talk was pleasant to listen to as well as much he said was good, but he suggested no plan to cleanse the Church of its "defects," although he did say that "a diocese ought to have a mind of its own, it ought to be able to speak that mind, it ought to have a way of making what it has in its mind effective. All this is a virtue." In closing he said: "There is nothing the matter with the Church. The trouble is entirely with the Churchmen. There is not a malady from which our body suffers that could not be cured to-morrow if we took our medicine."

Regret he did not write us a prescription with the directions, how much to take and how often. One of the Churchmen and one who has been such for more than sixty years states a defect, in fact, it is a very serious disease and also suggests a cure: The chairman as he approached his desk said (after laying his pipe on the table behind him): "Gentlemen, the hour for our meeting has arrived, arise and recite the Creed." Fully two-thirds of the clergymen were smoking. The members arose, recited the Creed (some, if not all, with their cigars between their fingers). Then the chairman said, "Let us pray." Down went some on one knee, some on two knees, yet still clinging to their cigars or pipes, said, "Our Father Who Art in Heaven, etc." After the blessing at the close of the prayer, they arose and puffed away at their cigars or pipes, that social friend that many of them love too well.

The Churchman as he ratifies his baptismal vows in Confirmation, promises to "Renounce the Devil and all his works—and the sinful desires of the flesh."

If tobacco is not of the Devil, I submit there is no Devil; if it is not a sinful desire of the flesh, again I submit there is no sin. The deacon when ordained promises among others—"As much as in him lieth to be a wholesome example to the flock of Christ." Naturally one would suppose this meant to be an example of good to all of the children in his care, particularly the boys. When the deacon is advanced to the priesthood, he goes a little farther and promises to be "As much as in him lieth a wholesome example and pattern to the flock of Christ." When consecrated bishop he promises to deny all ungodly and worldly lusts—and in all things show himself an example of good work unto others that the adversary may be ashamed, having nothing to say against him.

In closing, I ask in all seriousness if it is hard to find "What is the matter with the Episcopal Church?" Our Elder Brother whom we aid and whom we are expected to serve says, "Whosoever shall cause one of these little ones to stumble, it is profitable for him that a great mill stone should be hanged about his neck and that he should be sunk in the depths of the sea." Again I submit that any bishop, priest, deacon, yea, and layman, who through his tobacco habits is causing a little one to stumble, it is profitable for him to look out for the great mill stone.

St. Paul says, "Be thou an example to them that believe in word, in manner of life, in love, in faith, in purity." Again I submit that a tobacco smoker cannot be an example in manner of life, of purity. St. Peter says, "Dearly beloved, I beseech you as strangers and pilgrims abstain from fleshly lusts which war against the soul." Tobacco is surely a "worldly lust." St. John says, "Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us that we should be called the sons of God—and every one that hath this hope in him, purifieth himself even as he is pure." Again I submit that if the tobacco smoker wishes to be a son of God, he must first purify himself. Again, the Head of the corner stone, our dear Lord and Saviour, says, "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." This is our standard; if we live up to it there will be nothing the matter with the Episcopal Church. DAVID L. WITMER.

The British Labor Program

To the Editor of THE CHURCHMAN:

I have read with interest the Peace Message of the Joint Commission on Social Service of the Protestant Episcopal Church, in which it urges the Church at large seriously to study the program of the British Labor Party and apparently considers this program as likely in the near future to form the basis for reconstruction policies. The resolutions of the British Labor Party adopted at their conference in London in June, 1918, are doubtless available to all your readers, or would be furnished by the Joint Commission on Social Service. It is to be noted that it forms the basis of an appeal by the British Labor Party; that it is on its face and essentially in the nature of an appeal to the voters of Great Britain; that it comprises trade unions as well as socialist societies, and that its resolutions were primarily framed for the purpose of increasing the representation of that party in Parliament. The first question then that emerges is, to what extent the Social Service Committee of the Protestant Episcopal Church, or the Federation of Churches of Christ in America are warranted in dealing with the document as one of religious significance, and of giving it even qualified, let alone enthusiastic, commendation, in advance of its adoption, to the members of our Churches.

I pass over the earlier resolutions and only state that the gradual building up of a new social order planned by the party is expressly stated to be to prevent a return to "the anarchism of individualism and profiteering of competitive capitalism of pre-war time," and their first resolution is concentrated upon the "creation of a vigorous, courageous, independent and unfettered political party." The "increased production" is to be obtained through "socialization of all industry." It demands the restoration of all trade union rules and customs relinquished for the war period and a provision for prosecution of employers failing to restore trade union customs, also the limitation of arbitration settlement to the war period. It demands "unemployment insurance for those temporarily out of work through government subvention," abolition of the House of Lords, equal political rights for the sexes and complete adult suffrage, and Home Rule for Ireland.

Now whatever be the merits of these demands, and however much we may sympathize with them, they do not appear to be matters for the consideration of or commendation by ecclesiastical bodies. Particularly in this country, where the separation of Church and State has been so continuously struggled for and adhered to in the main by the American people. Perhaps educational reform and temperance reform, Nos. 15 and 18, of the program might properly fall within the sphere of the Commission on Social Service. But No. 19 on the retention of railways and canals in public hands, the expropriation of the stockholders on equitable terms, the question of the nationalization of electrical supply or of coal, iron and mineral mines, with expropriation of all interests on equitable terms, or otherwise, is hardly a matter for Church intervention. No more is the nationalization of life insurance business, nor a scheme for distribution of all food stuffs through the agency of the Government.

Then we come to No. 25—immediate conscription of accumulation of wealth with exemption for fortunes below £1,000, and a graduated scale of rates for larger totals—the most socialistic plank in the whole platform.

I apologize for quoting so at length from this paper, but I have done it for the purpose of eliciting from THE CHURCHMAN or from some of its readers, what it is in these resolutions that justify the characterization of the program as "The one great religious utterance of the war."

With the theory and ultimate practice of a Christian socialism we are all in sympathy. The words quoted by the Lord Bishop of Oxford as differentiating between property for use and property for power are highly significant of this attitude. But to endorse a political program which has for its primary object the control of property for use and for power by the man who has it not, after expropriation of such property from the man who has, requires more argument to make it convincing as a Christian or religious program than is contained in the Peace Message from the Joint Commission.

Wheat Bubbles In a Bowl of Milk For Any Hungry Hour

Puffed Grains are the most enticing grain foods in existence.

They are bubble-like grains, airy, thin and flaky, puffed to eight times normal size.

They are crisp and toasted, fragile and flimsy, almond-like in flavor.

But Remember This:

Puffed Grains are also ideal foods from scientific standpoints.

The Puffed Grain process was invented by Prof. A. P. Anderson, formerly of Columbia University. And the purpose is to fit whole grains for easy, complete digestion.

After applying a fearful heat, the grains are steam exploded by being shot from guns.

Every food cell is blasted. More than 100 million steam explosions occur in every kernel.

Thus digestion is made easy. Puffed Grains never tax the stomach. Every atom feeds.

Such foods are more than breakfast dainties. They are ideal all-hour foods. Let children have them—all they want—whenever they are hungry.

Some New Novels

AN interesting story, written in Mr. Benson's charming style, is An Autumn Sowing (By E. F. Benson. Doran, $1.35). The characters are vividly portrayed. A prosaic business man has steadily climbed up the ladder of local prosperity. He has taken for granted his commonplace domestic life with a hopelessly stupid wife and uninteresting children. He himself has but one spiritual passion—that for beautiful books, and no one in his middle-class home shares that enthusiasm with him. In the autumn of his life he looks about for the first time and takes stock of his happiness and finds none. Just at that critical moment he engages the services of a charming and cultured young woman as his secretary. They fall in love with each other and his Autumn Sowing commences.

But because both the man and the woman are of strong character their love is free from the soil of sin; and though his love is taken from him it leaves him with a new sympathy and kindness. An Autumn Sowing is a novel far above the average and it is written with a master's hand.

Amid the whirr of the wheels and the rattle of machinery of the spinning mills Mr. Phillpotts develops a story of intense love and hatred. The Spinners (By Eden Phillpotts. Macmillan, $1.60) is not a pleasant story. An utterly selfish man, a girl ruined in body and soul, a son bred in hatred of his father. Every sinister circumstance of their lives moves on to an inevitable tragedy. The story is skillfully told by an experienced novelist and holds the attention of the reader. From the opening scene in the grave-yard, where the disinherited son refuses to attend his father's funeral, to the closing scene, where the illegitimate son kills himself after murdering his father, the story goes on its sombre way with nothing to lighten its sin and sorrow.

Less sombre, but equally unpleasant and far less skillful, is The Point of View. (By Martha Gilbert Dickinson Bianchi. Duffield, $1.50).

It is a story of a man and woman of New England ancestry who are far enough away from their Puritan forebears to have changed their point of view to one of degenerate dilettanteism. They are very artistic and musical and critical and highly cultured—the lady in fact is a "purple rose." Some chapters of the book are descriptive of the Middle West, whose less cultured, but more useful and wholesome life is contrasted with the effete East, the reader will think—though the author evidently does not intend it so—to the great advantage of the Middle West. Through that western life the hero pursues his self-conceited and snobbish way and returns to New England to his "purple rose" and finally, one is glad to say, they find something useful to do in war-stricken France.

An altogether charming book is Our Admirable Betty. (By Jeffery Farnol. Little, Brown & Co., $1.60). It is a romance of the eighteenth century. A fine old major, a veteran of the French wars, finds renewed youth and love when Lady Betty comes from London jaded with the town life and takes up her residence on the other side of the red wall that divides their orchards. The London gallants follow her to the country and there is a great play of wit and elegance. The villain also comes and there are hair-breadth escapes and an abducted Lady Betty and a gallant rescue. There are drinking bouts at the inn and cheating at cards and a thrilling duel in a darkened room. All the elements of a fascinating romance are present and withal it is wholesome and fresh and altogether interesting. It is certainly one of Mr. Farnol's best books and one is grateful to him for having given the reader so much pure pleasure.

The Pirate of Jasper Peak (By Adair Aldon. Macmillan, $1.35) is a story of thoroughly alive adventure. A boy whose father judges him too young to go with him to the war in France, goes to spend the time of his father's absence in far away Minnesota and falls into adventures which would make the life in the trenches tame. And the boy bears himself through the dangers of Indians and pirates very bravely and unselfishly. It is an exciting story for boys or grown-ups.

Another diverting Cape Cod novel by one who knows how to divert is Shavings (By Joseph C. Lincoln. Appleton, $1.50). Like all of Mr. Lincoln's stories, it is full of quaint humor and likeable folks.

In A Daughter of Jehu (By Laura E. Richards. D. Appleton, $1.50) the plot is so slight that it is almost non-existent. The characters are so "little town" that they bore you to tears. The whole book is so deadly sweet that it makes you feel ill. An excellent and harmless story for people who are mentally undeveloped.

The first fifty pages of The Garden of Survival (By Algernon Blackwood, Dutton, $1.25) are discouragingly earthy, but the remaining hundred soar to ethereal heights in describing an experience which leads the teller of the story to believe that those who have lived conscious of and sensitive to beauty, as the highest appeal that can be made through our physical senses, are after death "benevolently active." A fascinating story which leaves the reader wanting to compare notes on it with other readers. Incidentally it deals a mortal blow at spiritualism.

There are only three people in Colette Baudouche (By Maurice Barrès, translated by Frances Wilson Huard. Doran, New York, $1.50)—Colette, her old grandmother, and a young German professor. In the two women the loyalty, sentiment and spirit of captive France are personified. The love story is but a silver mist behind which burns the fierce fire of Alsace-Lorraine's mute hatred of the conqueror. Although the book is a ten year old classic in France, Madame Huard's sympathetic and sensitive translation brings it now for the first time to English readers. The recent freeing of the "lost provinces" gives an added poignancy to this exceedingly subtle portrayal of a bit of French history.

Heart's Haven (By Clara Louise Burnham. Houghton Mifflin, $1.50) is a sweet and simple love tale which quite "outglads Pollyanna." The author's usual Christian Science thesis is rather awkwardly superimposed.

Harbor Tales Down North (By Norman Duncan. Revell, $1.35) is a series of short stories of the Labrador coast, told by a writer with a keen sense of the mingled hardship, beauty and pathos that underlies the life of those whose business it is to go down to the sea in ships. These nine brief stories run the emotional gamut from farce to tragedy, oftentimes within the limits of a single story. They are convincing pen pictures of a highly interesting folk into whose thoughts and lives we enter with unflinching zest. The book contains an appreciation of Mr. Duncan by Dr. Wilfred T. Grenfell.

A whimsical book full of surprises and hearty laughs with a wholesome philosophy of living is Mr. Squem and Some Male Triangles (By Arthur Russell Taylor Doran, $1.00). Mr. Squem is a decidedly refreshing creation, the sort we thought nearly extinct, who clears the atmosphere whenever he arrives for the extremely subtle people who possess rather finely spun ideas of life, especially religion. The "Triangles" are not quite up to Mr. Squem, but they are interesting enough to make you read the book through to the end.

Three American Novels

THE BELL RINGER (Houghton Mifflin Company, Boston, 1918. $1.35) is a romance of New England as it was a few generations ago with its humor, pathos and touch of the supernatural which were so characteristic of its village life. The hero, ringer of the meeting house bell, is an inarticulate poet and mystic who can only express himself through the bell, and the heroine, who hears the message of the bell and understands, is a cripple, so it is a story of the renunciation of love, beautifully told and humanly felt.

Anyone who has been along the coast of Maine must have felt the romance of the old shipyards, where until a few years ago, the wooden ships were built, the best schooners in the world lying idle most of them since sails were crowded out by steam. The Call of the Offshore Wind (Houghton Mifflin Company, Boston, 1918. $1.50) is the story of the owner of one of these shipyards who goes to sea as captain of a vessel in order to support himself and keep alive the few flickers of life that still remain in the ship building business. Then the war comes and again the yard hums with life and new ships are launched as fast as they can be built.

The monotony of the Nebraska corn-fields is the setting for My Antonio (Houghton Mifflin Company, Boston, 1918. $1.60) a story of the settlers of the West, foreigners most of them, of all nationalities, becoming Americanized, by being literally rooted in the earth, growing with their own fields and developing with the prosperity which they create. The book is as simple and vigorous as the broad landscape, the figures standing out vividly human, new types in a new field of American literature.

Atlantic Mutual Insurance Co.

Atlantic Building 51 Wall Street, New York
Insures against Marine and Inland Transportation Risk and will issue policies making loss payable in Europe and Oriental countries.

Chartered by the State of New York in 1842, was preceded by a stock company of a similar name. The latter company was liquidated and part of its capital, to the extent of $100,000, was used, with consent of the stockholders, by the Atlantic Mutual Insurance Company and repaid with a bonus and interest at the expiration of two years. During its existence the company has insured property to the value of $30,949,773,989.00. Received premiums thereon to the extent of $312,671,550.90. Paid losses during that period $152,928,388.68. Issued certificates of profits to dealers $96,523,710.00. Of which there have been redeemed $90,801,110.00. Leaving outstanding at present time $5,722,600.00. Interest paid on certificates amounts to $24,494,668.95. On December 31, 1917, the assets of the company amounted to $15,041,590.25.

The profits of the company revert to the assured and are divided annually upon the premiums terminated during the year, thereby reducing the cost of insurance.

For such dividends, certificates are issued subject to dividends or interest until ordered to be redeemed, in accordance with the charter.

WOULD ANNOUNCE PEACE FROM CITY OF JERUSALEM

Movement for World Consecration of Peace Launched in Richmond

A movement has been instituted known as "The Movement for A World Consecration of Peace" the purpose of which is to request the Peace Conference to proclaim the fact of peace to the world, at the moment of final ratification, by prearrangement, from the City of Jerusalem; to name the world peace significantly the Peace of Jerusalem; and to declare the day on which this Peace of Jerusalem is proclaimed an international thanksgiving day, on which all peoples of all countries and all beliefs shall in their homes and customary houses of worship offer thanks to God.

The movement has been endorsed by leading clergymen in this country and in England. The Bishop of Bath and Wells says:

The ratification of peace should be known significantly as the "Peace of Jerusalem." What this might mean for the whole world is beyond one's power to measure. But such a peace would have a sanctity no other place could give it, and we might well believe it would bring the world nearer to heaven.

Bishop Tuttle says:

An excellent and most apposite suggestion that the "City of Our Peace," Jerusalem, should be the city to herald first the peace.

Others to commend it are Bishop Lloyd, Dean Berryman Green and Mr. Robert Gardiner. The movement has been discussed at considerable length in Virginia and a number of ministers and business men have come out in favor of it. They are taking up the matter and pushing it actively. The secretary of the movement, the Rev. E. L. Woodward, The Plains, Virginia, in speaking of the plan says:

O Jerusalem, that bringeth forth good tidings, lift up thy voice with strength.—Isaiah xl:9.

It will rest with the Peace Conference at Versailles to determine the place and the official manner of making known to the world the actual moment of peace.

Herald that moment to all the earth, first from Jerusalem, through General Allenby, or another equally well chosen for the surpassing honor, and the dramatic and historic impress upon the spiritual imagination of the expectant peoples will be profound.

EVENING SUN FINDS SOLDIERS' PAY DELAYED

Quotes Churchman on Soldiers' Grievances; Says No Pay Is Worst

The Evening Sun based a recent editorial on the article recently written for THE CHURCHMAN by the Rev. Eliot White entitled "Are We Neglecting Our Wounded?" In commenting on "soldiers' grievances" it quotes the instance cited by Mr. White of the young fellow who had worked hard that his sister might remain in school and then had been so disappointed because the pay he had allotted to her did not arrive and she had to leave school and go to work, and says:

This concrete instance gives point to the news from Washington that the affairs of the War Risk Insurance have been badly mishandled and that much red tape has interfered with the delivery of regular pay to the soldiers themselves. At present in New York some 200 veterans of Château-Thierry are being entertained at various clubs because their pay vouchers are lost; many others are walking the streets without a dollar in their pockets. In some cases as much as four months' pay is due them.

Congressman McFadden of Pennsylvania has introduced a resolution calling for special Congressional investigation of the War Risk Insurance Bureau; this is all very well, but the living men need their monthly pay. The War Department accountants are greatly hampered by the swift shifting of units at the front, but the Q.M.D. should be able to make some emergency issue of funds to meet the crying need of the moment. Meantime every doughboy who finds himself "strapped" in New York is exposed to a kind of hardship which is particularly difficult to endure.

OAKLAND MEN MAKE PARISH CANVASS IN POURING RAIN

Increase Pledges by $1700 as Result of Personal Effort

OAKLAND, CALIFORNIA.—The wisdom of Bishop Nichols in proposing and planning for a concerted effort to emphasize the principle of stewardship in the support of Christian work was fully justified by the results obtained in Trinity Parish. Today, the parish church finds itself possessed of a pledged income for local support of $3158.60, and for missions and benevolences, $729. This is an increase of $1690.88 over the pledged income reported in the circular sent out December 1.

This result was achieved after an educational campaign conducted by means of sermons and letters, sent out during a period of two months. It was achieved as a result of the careful thought and planning of a group of men, who willingly gave several evenings to the consideration of the whole subject. Very important is the fact that it was achieved by a personal canvass made by seventeen men on one of the rainiest afternoons of this season.

THE REV. THOMAS DAVIES DIES OF INFLUENZA

The Rev. Thomas Davies, rector of Christ Church, Marlborough, New York, died suddenly in Charleston, South Carolina, on December 23. He had been ill five days with Spanish influenza, but his condition was not considered serious.

Mr. Davies was a Canadian by birth but had for many years been connected with the American Church. He was a graduate of the General Theological Seminary, where he also taught for awhile. From there he went to Hasbrouck Heights, New Jersey, and some two years ago became rector of Marlborough, New York. In the momentous days through which the nation has passed, Mr. Davies was a beacon light in the community; a leader in every movement for civic reform and beloved and followed by the people regardless of Church affiliations.

He was preeminently a scholar, in the true sense of being able to express his profundity of thought in simplest clearest terms. The call of the class room was always strong and last fall he obtained leave of absence for a year in order to fill the chair of history at Porter Military Academy, Charleston. It was there that, in the prime of life, the epidemic claimed him.

regimental service. Headed by the field music and twenty-five officers of the staff and line two hundred men marched into the church in column of squads and took part in the services that had been adapted to fit the occasion.

Another interesting thing about the religious life of this widely scattered regiment is its standard of ten-minute sermons. Because he believes that an elementary message is the one that reaches the soldier, he has placed a ten-minute limit on his talks and a thirty-minute limit on his services. As a result the men are always glad to attend, and they take a real message away with them every time.

Through the kindness of the Church Periodical Club, Chaplain Baldwin has been able to stock a small library at each of the sixty-one camps. From the Church War Commission of the Diocese of New York he has received a moving picture machine which he transports from camp to camp, sometimes showing two or three pictures a day at places quite distant from each other. The War Commission has also furnished fifteen phonographs, which the chaplain has placed in the most lonely barracks of the line. Records, over a thousand of them, have been distributed at all points where there is a machine. The chaplain is continually distributing something, for which purpose he sometimes drives over two hundred miles in a day.

THE REV. ALBERT LEONARD MURRAY, D.Litt., rector of St. John's, Cedar Rapids, Iowa, has by error been listed in the Church annuals as rector of Cedar Falls parish. Dr. Murray has never been in Cedar Falls nor in any way connected with the parish and would like the credit of the remarkable developments there to be accorded the Rev. J. S. Cole, secretary of the Diocese, who has been in charge of Cedar Falls for some years. St. Luke's, Cedar Falls, has been rebuilt and the parish has taken on new life and recently entertained a largely attended deanery meeting.

THE REV. GEORGE McCLELLAN FISKE, D.D., has been elected rector emeritus of St. Stephen's Church, Providence, Rhode Island. His address is 450 Brook Street, Providence.

THE REV. W. E. GLANVILLE, Ph.D., began work as rector of the Church of the Holy Innocents, Baltimore, on Sunday, January 5.

Mr. Sinclair Read the Bible!

The following is reprinted from the current number of Upton Sinclair's:

"The Churchman, organ in New York of what we have called 'The Church of Good Society,' has a merry time with us in a recent issue. We presume to 'hammer Christianity,' yet we don't know the Bible! We attribute the Magnificat to the Virgin Mary, whereas it was said by an old man named Simeon!

"We have had something like a hundred letters about this little slip. At first we regretted it, but when we saw how happy it made our correspondents, we were tempted to make some more slips. The blunder was owing to the fact that we got our religious education in the 'Church of Good Society,' where we heard the Magnificat sung every Sunday without the name of the author being mentioned. For the benefit of the Churchman we will state that we have read the Bible through five times in Latin, three times in Greek, and once each in German and French, to say nothing of the many times we have read it through in English. Also we have recently published a book, of which a copy was sent to the Churchman; it is called the 'Profits of Religion,' and it proves not merely that we know the Bible, but also that we know the Churchman. We hereby respectfully challenge the organ of the Church of J. P. Morgan and Company to review 'The Profits of Religion,' and to quote some of the pungent things that we have said about it."

[NOTE—The book to which Mr. Sinclair refers is already in the hands of Dean Hodges, of Cambridge, for review. The dean of Cambridge can be trusted, we think, in the handling of the magnum opus of Mr. Sinclair's to break through the censorship which J. P. Morgan and Company exercise over the Episcopal Church.—EDITOR.]

For Country

MAJOR WILLIAM E. McCOMB, chaplain, has returned after a varied experience for seven months in France, first as regimental chaplain of the 107th infantry, then as senior chaplain of the division (the 27th), and later, after the fighting was ended, for the month of November as senior chaplain of the Savoie and Grenoble leave areas with headquarters at Aix-les-Bains.

So many new chaplains were coming to France that the major requested that his work be turned over to some of them and that he be allowed to return, as he had spent most of the last three years in the service.

The major is enthusiastic in his praise of the conduct of the 27th Division and of all the American soldiers.

He hopes to return to regular ministerial work at Easter.

AT THE NEW YEAR PARTY of the Men's Club of Grace Church, Brooklyn, on Tuesday night, December 31, the Honor Roll was unveiled. It contains 96 names, including 1 major, 1 captain, 9 lieutenants, 2 ensigns, 6 sergeants and 3 corporals; 44 are in the Army, 41 in the Navy, 7 in the Aviation Corps, 2 in the Y. M. C. A., 2 in the Red Cross. Two have died in service, and 6 have been wounded. A souvenir booklet, a copy of the Honor Roll, was presented to each one present.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT

AMERICA has produced many millions of American citizens, but only two typical Americans. Lincoln by universal consent was an American. So was Theodore Roosevelt. We know of none other. A popular instinct, swift but infallible in its processes of judgment, grants this rarest of laurels to but few who are called to be servants of the whole people.

It takes more than force of intellect, more than popularity, to make the typical American. It requires what Lincoln and Roosevelt possessed in so generous a measure, vigorous mentality, mellowed and tempered by graces that appeal to the nation's heart. We doubt whether any other man in American history has won an admiration so vivid with affection as that lavished for nearly a quarter of a century upon Theodore Roosevelt. No one else known to us in modern history has so thrilled by his words and deeds the soul of the youth of all lands as did the ex-President who has just died. This is a tribute none will question. It is a tribute, too, which gives food for reflection to those who study the spiritual forces that mould history.

Mr. Roosevelt possessed certain qualities of statesmanship which the historian of the future will find it difficult to assess, because his influence was far more one of personality than of policy. Such influences get absorbed in the character and life of the time, but they leave no monuments that record precisely their worth. The student of documents will wonder, we suspect, wherein lay the magic of Mr. Roosevelt's hold on the imagination of his age; but men of spiritual understanding will see that his work for America went deeper than mere statesmanship can ever go. He galvanized into new life by the sheer magnetism of his character the whole American soul.

When Mr. Roosevelt entered upon his public career, America was not in the heroic mood. Our politics were unclean; our best citizens were afraid of soiling their hands and reputations with politics; our business ethics were shifty and mean. He taught young America what it means to be a gentleman in a democracy. He taught American business what it means to be decent. His service in pulling the American soul out of the mire into which it had plunged after the Civil War is incalculable.

We wonder whether Mr. Roosevelt, to whom it always seemed so natural to face life in a high-hearted way, knew what it meant to American fathers and mothers whose sons were in France to have our ex-President bear his sorrow over the death of his son, just as he did. In the bereavement of this typical American home there was felt to be something vicarious. It swept the sacrifices of the war out of the zone of tragic things up into the tonic heights of chivalry.

At times, Mr. Roosevelt's impetuous opinion shocked those who wanted to see him always at his finest; but no one ever doubted that what he spoke, he was willing with a valiant disregard of self to defend. When his biography will have been written, it will, we suspect, be felt that of all men in public life he was most lavishly negligent of self-interest; for he was too keen a student of politics not to have known that there were safer courses than those of fierce battle that he chose again and again to pursue.

In the cable message which he sent from Trinidad, in answer to the question whether he would become a candidate for the presidency in 1916, he made a characteristic reply: "It would be a mistake to nominate me," he said, "unless the country had in its mood something of the heroic; unless it feels not only like devoting itself to ideals but to the purpose measurably to realize those ideals in action." The Republican party was not, however, in the heroic mood; neither was the nation as a whole, in 1916. It was an hour of timid and calculating counsel.

It is an interesting problem in psychology how a man like Mr. Roosevelt, who lacked the facile gifts of the orator, contrived to thrill by his words the whole world. Perhaps the secret of this power lay in the quality to which we paid homage at the beginning of our tribute to him. He was always an American by sure instinct. Americans like to know what their leaders mean and intend. Mr. Roosevelt never for a moment left us in doubt. Right or wrong, his words were never of double or evasive meaning. He never asked his fellow citizens to follow him in the dark. From the beginning to the end of his career, he walked in the blaze of a radiant publicity. We loved him because he permitted us to know him, and he led us to think that even the humblest of us is worth knowing and loving. He has abundant reward for this open-hearted Americanism, for he carries to his grave the vivid affection of more men, women and children than has any other American who has earned the gratitude of his countrymen.

THE WEEK

Chronicle and Comment on Current Events

DEAN HODGES' ANNIVERSARY

ON Sunday, January 12, the congregation of St. John's Chapel, Cambridge, will quietly celebrate the twenty-fifth anniversary of the beginning of Dean Hodges' service to the congregation. This simple announcement of fact invites reminiscence and memories which plunge deep into the history of the Episcopal Church for a quarter of a century. During those years of service Dr. Hodges has become to Christians of every name in America what publishers like to call "a household word." He has earned the title, so coveted in the world of letters, by gifts of spirit as rare as they are practical in the dealership of a theological school. Dr. Hodges' popularity outside of our own communion, as well as within it, is not due wholly to the wide circulation of his very human writings. He has helped all of us to discover a fellowship in the Gospels wider than the boundaries of any Church. People may differ from him, but they always trust and love him. This is praise not easily earned by conspicuous leaders of opinion. But the dean has worn his laurels with so little self-consciousness that he has seemed to yield to none of the temptations, besetting those pivoted on high places, to whittle down his convictions. His humor, which is by no means a negligent asset in his abundant store of grace, is always kind, but his rapier thrusts cut deep when his sense of fair play and justice is offended. It was so like him to come forward early in the war to the defense not of a pacifist bishop's opinions, but of his rights. During these twenty-five years the dean has made some signal contributions to the Episcopal Church not only in his writings and by his administration of a great school, but in the many comradeships which have served as bonds of unity among different schools and temperaments in the Church.

TWO UNIVERSITY ADDRESSES

IN his two addresses made before faculties and students of foreign universities, President Wilson has been singularly happy in applying the university ideal to affairs of state. At the Sorbonne, when he stated it to be one of the purposes of his political career to apply the university ideal of truth to the affairs of statecraft, he made a confession which would have been greeted eight years ago in American political circles with derision. The practical politician, even one so splendidly equipped with courage and sagacity as Clemenceau, might well take counsel of this university ideal. But more significant still was the President's reference to the science of government made in his address before the Royal Academy of Sciences in Rome. "While perhaps," said the President,

"there is no science of government, there ought to be, I dare say, in government itself the spirit of science, that is to say, the spirit of disinterestedness, the spirit of seeking after the truth so far as the truth is ready to be applied to human circumstance. Because, after all, the problem of politics is to satisfy men in the arrangement of their lives, is to realize for them, as far as possible, the objects which they have entertained generation after generation and have seen so often postponed."

"The problem of politics is to satisfy men in the arrangement of their lives." How shockingly academic and true!

THE YEAR THAT LIES AHEAD

WHAT a wonderful time to be alive, if one really is alive—alive with the abundant life defined in our Gospels! For the men of good will who want to make the world a cleaner, happier, healthier, more beautiful place to live in, the year that lies ahead is crammed to overflowing with expectancy and promise. If we had not become sated with surprises we should all be standing on tiptoe, impatiently waiting for the verdict from Paris, on which hangs the fate of the world for perhaps centuries to come. In whatever political mood American citizens find themselves as regards the policy of our President, none of us can fail to be thrilled by what is going on in Europe, day after day, when eager hands of the leaderless millions are stretched towards the President of the Republic that lies across the seas. He has uttered words during recent months which have sown mighty hopes in the hearts of the plain people of the world. There is food for anxious thought among the statesmen of Europe in the fact that their humble fellow-citizens look to a foreigner for deliverance from burdens that have been intolerable for ages among the homes of the poor. The soldier's profession is unpopular just now among all classes of men except those whose homes have not been touched by war or who have not seen service under fire. Frenchmen, Italians, yes, Englishmen, in larger numbers than we know, are looking to America's President to lift the burden of conscription and armaments from the race. Can it be done? Day by day Mr. Wilson is making the fight of his life, yes, the greatest fight that it has ever been given a statesman to wage in behalf of a cause that touches the happiness of hundreds of millions of human beings on the globe. We wish him well. If he loses, democracy has lost the greatest battle of the ages and its finest opportunity.

WOMEN AND PEACE

IN response to an appeal from one million French women, the women of the United States are signing a petition to be presented to the Peace Conference which demands two things: that "every officer, soldier or civilian of either of the Central Powers or any of their allies, who shall be accused of any sexual offense against a woman in the course of the war" be tried before an international tribunal and on conviction be punished; and that "all women so injured by a despicable enemy be treated and regarded, not as shamed, but as wounded in war." The avowed purpose of the appeal is to prevent the violation and enslavement of women and girls from becoming "by force of precedent a permitted custom under the laws of war." A little more careful study of history, however, reveals the fact that since the days when Helen was carried to Troy and when the Romans found their wives among the Sabines, the violation and enslavement of women has gone hand in hand with the killing of men. As to the necessity of establishing by proclamation the fact that the wives and daughters of Belgium and Northern France are not shamed but wounded in war, the tenderness of women and the chivalry of men have already covered with a cloak of honor those who have suffered worse than death at the hands of a gross and brutal foe.

The value of this appeal to the Peace Conference lies not in its immediate purpose. It lies in the promise given that hereafter women will take a hand in preventing the possibility of the recurrence of years of carnage and desecration. This, we venture to believe, the women of the world can accomplish even though the Peace Conference fail. Perhaps it was an instinctive distrust of the potency of treaties and leagues and parliaments of nations, a desire to conserve strength for the more fundamental and surer way, that prevented the women from insisting upon representation at the peace table.

Woman understands the bitter cost of war as man never can. Long after the suffering of the soldier is a memory, his medals and his feats the subject for reminiscent glorying, the woman is scrubbing floors to pay the taxes or building up the places made waste by the war. The time to be a pacifist is after the war is over. The women of this generation have earned the right to be pacifists. But the after-war pacifism must be a militant force with sufficient daring and imagination to organize the women of the world into a mighty league that shall say, and say with power to those entrusted with the government of nations, "No war without our consent!"

CHINA TO GET OUR BREWERIES

Poor old China had to take opium because it was profitable to grow it in India and elsewhere; now it looks as if she would have to take our beer because it isn't profitable to produce it any longer in America. We quote from a clipping which has been sent to us from San Francisco:

A general exodus of brewing capital from the United States to the Orient was foretold in a statement by Rudolph Samet, president of the California State Brewers' Association.

"We are looking to China as the best place to locate," Samet said. "I am leaving in a few days for that country to arrange for the construction of a $2,000,000 plant for the Rainer Brewing Company. Other breweries are making similar arrangements."

The Brewers' Association, Samet declared, decided to make no organized protest against President Wilson's executive order suspending the manufacture of beer, the Sheppard prohibition amendment to the agricultural appropriation bill or against the proposed prohibition amendment to the federal constitution.

If American brewers would be content to give the Chinamen merely beer, our fears would not be unbearable; but what has made the brewing business in this country so obnoxious is that the brewers were wholesale, very wholesale, saloon keepers. They were not content with brewing good beer; they were greedy for the big profits of the corner saloon; and to keep the saloon going they had to go into politics; they felt it part of their business to fight nearly every decent law that might curtail their profits, and they yoked themselves with all the foul underground influences that keep our cities morally and physically corrupt.

What a fair field for the practised art of the brewer the Orient presents and what an easy mark the corrupter will find in the Chinese government official! What a market for bad whiskey and all that goes with it China with her teeming millions offers! There is still plenty of virgin soil for the liquor men to cultivate.

A PERSISTENT THEME

THERE was something more than imagination lacking in the make-up of the clergyman officiating in the great debarkation hospital, filled with wounded, most of whom had landed only three days before Christmas, when he asked the men to sing "Onward Christian Soldiers" and preached on the ethical necessity for America's entrance into the war and the ignominy of a peace without honor. It seemed pretty evident that the legless, armless, bandaged men in the seats had reckoned the cost of liberty and had paid the price. These boys were still far away from home; they were sick and wounded. Very few of them had had opportunity to hear from their families in time for Christmas. They wanted, as they said, "to forget it all"—the dirt and misery and the extent of that price. The story of Bethlehem, the song the angels sang in the fields and the music of the old carols would have found a ready response in their tired hearts.

The preacher closed by exhorting the men to be religious. He didn't explain what religion meant—except that it involved being clean and playing fair. Had he kindled in them a glow of love for the Great Companion who had "kindly come to live with them below," they would have understood.

"CORN!"

IN the Peloponnesian War the starving Cretans sent an embassy to the Greek mainland to ask for succor. The Laconians did not understand their eloquent pleas, and sent them away. Next day they returned with empty sacks, and spreading them out said the one word "Corn!" and the Laconians understood.

Today hundreds of thousands of Greeks in Asia Minor are repeating to America that same cry.

The Turks have ruined their business by boycott and confiscation. Conscription, exile, starvation, robbery, murder, every indignity which the Turk could devise has been practised upon them. Over a million and a half have been deported. 600,000 remain homeless and starving in Turkish territory or in the Aegean Isles, Saloniki, Athens and other places to which they have escaped. 40,000 orphans have been left helpless and uncared for. Of the 300,000 refugees, 140,000 have been either fighting or engaged in work behind the lines.

These are things which in the multiplicity of terrible facts that crowd the pages of our daily newspapers have not been fully appreciated. The Relief Committee for the Greeks in Asia Minor is carrying corn to these people.

SATURDAY NIGHT MEDITATIONS BY A LAYMAN

The Mystical Companionship of Jesus

BY WILLIAM H. JEFFERYS, A.M., M.D.

XI. The Tryst of the Mystical Communion

"Abide in Me!"

"For God's Bread is He Who comes down out of Heaven and gives Life to the world."

"Sir," they said, "Always give us that Bread."

"I am the Bread of Life," replied Jesus, "He who comes to Me shall never hunger, and he who believes in Me shall never, never thirst."—St. John, 6: 33-35.

This is the Bread and Wine of the Household of Reality. God is Light, has Light in Himself. We shine, but the light is of God.

God is Life, has Life in Himself. We are alive, but the life is of God.

God is Love, has Love in Himself. We love, but the Love is of God.

OUR LORD'S trysts seem to have their introduction in the plainly understandable working with Him. There follows from that the Inasmuch Way, the first step, as it were, into the Fairyland of His Presence, the Kingdom that is not of this world, the Kingdom of Eternal Love. We followed His mind then through the paths of the awakened soul seeking Him, and we found Him along every Love Way of life. And we see the souls of the followers growing in likeness to Him, becoming His love echoes, growing into His Spirit, as it were, and so fulfilling His mission, to find Him at the adventure's end—with them eternally.

There is a wonderful day in the earthly life of our Lord, when, realizing that the moments are short and that it is expedient that He go hence, He does that perfectly natural thing, which so many men do, or try to do, or plan to do. At the hour of His betrayal, realizing fully what the morrow is to bring forth, firstly He gathers His followers together, and in the most exquisite ceremony imaginable, He takes water, kneels in the beauty of God's humility, and washes their feet. St. Peter cannot stand it. He resists—"Thou shalt never wash my feet"; but Jesus says, "Except I wash thee, thou hast no part in Me." This was the Apostles' Baptism, the sacramental tryst of the "Come unto Me." It represents, as focussed by our Lord's mind, the point of union or grafting into Him. It is intimate; it is personal. It is at the portal of Love's home.

After supper He gathers around the table with His chosen and dearest ones, and taking two other commonplaces of life, the bread and the wine, He establishes the other great sacramental tryst which the Church calls, "The abide in Me," the Supper of our Lord, the feast of the mystical Communion with Him, "the feast of Love," which represents the abiding in the vine and the feeding of His branches. It is Love's family table. The conditions are perfectly specific. They are commanded. The very words of institution are preserved. It is "Do this!"

mandment I give you, to love one another. That as I have loved you, you also must love one another. It is by this that everyone will know that you are My disciples, if you love one another." St. John 13: 34-35. Weymouth says in the foot-note to verse 34, "Some read 'In order that you may love one another,' and if we adopt this reading then the New Commandment is the Lord's Supper itself." If it indeed be that the Supper of the Lord is the New Commandment, "in order that we may love one another," the result is not to weaken, but to greatly emphasize the Communion and to bind it even more positively upon the Church as the sine qua non of her being the society of His fruit-bearing disciples. It should be ample ground for self-examination on the part of Protestant neglect and under-emphasis of the Sacrament of our union with Him, and not less so to Catholics, who largely make what should be the focus of our union, actually the stone-wall of our pharisaism.

The Lord's Supper was instituted to be the focus of our practice of our "Love one another," and we whose unity it was to bind in Christ and whose disciple love it was to witness, have made of the great, "As I have loved you" of Jesus, the very partition wall of our disunion, denominationalism and inefficiency.

There are exceptions, but for the most part, the positive convictions of the various Christian bodies are founded on true experience of God; and most of their denials, though in the form of denial of belief, are actually the result of lack of experience. Speaking merely as a layman and for my own part, I greatly desire the fellowship of the widest possible reach of Christian experience. It is not a question of tolerance, it is a question of craving and I am deeply resolved that whenever and wherever the privilege of fellowship in the Holy Communion is offered me by any group of sincere followers of Christ, I will gladly accept that hospitality, and this resolve is not based on any looseness of conception, but on the conviction of the full sacramental purpose and possibilities of the Feast of Love. For this very reason I will never allow the Supper of the Lord to be made a wall of separation between my soul and that of any other disciple of Christ.

All life is to Jesus, sacrament. Every outward and visible is a sign, an utterance, a voice, an expression of the Spirit. "It is expedient for you that I go hence." "I will not leave you without Comfort." "I will come unto you." "This do in remembrance." It is a tryst. "Come, let us go hence."

"Except I wash you, you have no part in Me." "This do in remembrance of Me."

Nothing is further from my thought than to enter into a theological discussion. My great desire is centered on arriving at something very practical, which we,

as fellow disciples of the Living Christ, can make every day use of in this matter of supreme importance to us. I mean in the matter of living Communion with Him. You and I can recognize easily enough that there are Christians, so-called Christians, between whom and our Lord the channels of communion are so frail and faint that they are all but undiscernible. There are Christians whose whole Christian life seems to consist of sitting in pews once in a while, when it is convenient, with whatever soul they may have, not bent on worship or expecting anything, but bent on criticism of everything, of their neighbors, or the service, the sermon, the minister, even of Jesus. But the most casual study of our Lord's mind on the subject of discipleship shows practically nothing in recognition of that type of so-called Christians as disciples. When we think of St. John, or of Mary of Bethany, we think of a figure seated at the feet of Jesus, drinking in His every word and look, trying to fathom the mystery and the wonder of His soul, and the glory of His mind, trying with the whole being to see what He sees and hear what He speaks, when He says that the purpose of God toward men, the meaning of God's love, the possibility of doing His Will is living-in-communion-with-Him; and then in going out from His Presence, as the Virgin Mother did, keeping all these things in the heart. This is the type of Christian whose faith has that supreme quality of which our Lord made so much—faith, the eyes and ears of the Spirit.

It is the sacramental way of life. Such do not see in a wooden cross two sticks fastened together at right angles, but rather the outward and visible sign of love unutterable; such see in the water not an unnecessary and easily to be dispensed with form, but the oath of allegiance, the naturalization papers, the outward approach to the inward reality of the fellowship of Christ; such see in the bread and wine not the remembrance that Jesus is dead, but the very focus of all the light of the Morning Star of the Resurrection—until He comes again.

The Holy Communion—the common table of the disciples—where Love is centered—is designed to be the home circle of the family of the New Commandment—who love each other, as Jesus loves us.

HAIL JESUS!

The peace and holy silence of the hour,
As mystic music, lift our soul to Thee.
Humbly we kneel before Love's mystery.
Hail Jesus! Thee we utterly adore.

And all our trembling being yearns to speak,
Yet ecstasy chokes still the voice of prayer.
Come! Come to us, great Christ! Come very near.
For Thee, Beloved, in earth and Heaven we seek.

For Thee we long, O Living Christ. Thou art
Our one Desire. Come live in us, O Love!
Feed Thou each hungering one, Thyself, O Love!
Hold Thou our cup, and fill each thirsting heart!

Amen!

CONSTANTINOPLE

BY THE REV. PERCY DEARMER, D.D.

THE most crucial part of the peace settlement will be that dealing with the relics of the Turkish Empire. And this because of popular ignorance about the Near East, and the absence of a sound public opinion. It is, for instance, only about a year ago that Mr. Lloyd George spoke of Constantinople and Thrace as "the homeland of the Turkish people." No doubt this amazing remark synchronized with some secret attempt to detach the Ottoman government from Germany; but it has been precisely such efforts—directed to Austria as well as to Turkey during the war—which, had they been successful, would have led us to betray the very cause for which we are fighting, the cause of liberty, which is in fact the cause of the oppressed nations.

To speak of Constantinople and Thrace as the homeland of the Turk is like speaking of Alsace and Lorraine as the homeland of the Prussian. The population of Constantinople itself has never shown more than a minority of Turks; the population of Thrace was mainly Greek, till after the Balkan war of 1912, when the Greeks were most brutally driven out of their homeland.

More, Constantinople is really the mother home of our Christian civilization. Human nature being snobbish, historians in the pre-scientific days never gave her the credit for her great work, because she had fallen before the Turks in 1453, and was no longer successful. Modern historians, however, have made reparation for Gibbon; and the story of what we owe to Byzantium can be read in such books as Dr. Cunningham's Western Civilization. When Europe had been over-run by the Vandals and other German tribes, and civilization was almost erased from Scotland to Sicily, Constantinople held out. She was for nearly a thousand years the storehouse in which all that was best in ancient civilization was presented, till the times at length changed and new nations had arisen ready to receive her treasure. During the darkest of the Dark Ages, when scraps of science occasionally dribbled into the West with Arab names, such as "algebra" and "alchemy," it was really from the Bosphorus that the science came, together with some that was brought (like the so-called Arabic numerals) from the Sanskrit pundits of India, and some that Jewish physicians carried with them. The West was spoon-fed from the East. That intense intellectual activity, which makes the Thirteenth Century the greatest in history, owed its origin to Constantinople and its homelands.

Science began, and a new philosophy derived from it; but though it came through Spain, it was not Moorish in origin. The Arabs originated little or nothing; but they acquired much, and were the main carriers for a while of a science which was Greek, of medicine which was Greek, and of Greek philosophy brought from the sturdy remnant of the Eastern Empire by the southern route through Spain.

The impetus of the crusades, which opened up an extraordinary amount of commercial activity and led to the formation of innumerable free cities, with Venice at their head, holding "the gorgeous East in fee," was also due to the discovery which our forefathers then made of the glories of Constantinople and of the then still flourishing cities of Syria. Roman Law itself is really the Law of New Rome, as codified by Justinian, the builder of St. Sophia, which William Morris declared to be the finest piece of architecture in the whole world.

When at last after a heroic resistance the ancient city was taken by Mohammed II, the knowledge—which had been lost in the West but had never been lost in the metropolis of the East—was spread abroad again. And from the ruin of Constantinople and the dispersal of its people in 1453, the Renaissance sprang up—bringing a new art, a new science, and because that science included astronomy and Greek, a new theology and a new philosophy.

Verily Constantinople is the mother of us all.

And is this peerless city, so nobly and so strongly set upon the inland sea, to be kept in barbarism, merely because the Turks made her what she is four centuries and a half ago? Is St. Sophia to continue a mosque?

In the middle of the war, the Allies agreed perforce to hand the city over to Russia, whose people had always dreamed of holding "Tsarigrad," the mother-city of the Russian Church. Russia now says she does not want it—at least Kerensky's government said so; the anarchists doubtless agree in that, if in nothing else.

It would not have been an ideal arrangement. The Dardanelles are, for commercial purposes, the mouth of the Danube; and the power that can close the Dardanelles can not only strangle Rumania, and starve whatever other nations will lie round the Black Sea, but can also vitally affect the Serbia, Jugoslavia, Hungary and Austria of the future (with whatever other peoples will be brought in touch with the Danube by the great canals that will be made), and of course the Ukraine and the rest of Russia. Besides this, no one can foretell the future of Russia; the only prophecy it is safe to make is that Russians will not do what anyone expects. We should not entirely rule out the possibility of a revival of imperialistic Russia; and such a power, with Constantinople in its possession, might be the terror of the Mediterranean, of Central Europe and of Asia. The story of Prussia might be repeated by the next generation in Russia. We hope and expect not; but it is unwise to build the future merely on our hopes and expectations.

The only state which could incorporate Thrace without territorial dislocation is Bulgaria. She badly needs a southern port, being really dependent on the Black Sea and the Dardanelles—for Dede Agatch is no port, as I can testify, who have landed there. The possession of Constantinople would bring her infinite glory. But generosity to your enemies does not include giving them what belongs to someone else. Bulgaria did her best to wreck us in our hour of greatest need; and Thrace is not inhabited by Bulgarians. Constantinople would have become German, if Germany had not gone mad in 1914. And a very bad thing it would have been for the world.

There remains Greece. But she is hardly strong enough to hold the pearl of the East against all comers. Nor is her territory likely to be contiguous with Thrace, unless Bulgaria is to be punished by losing the not particularly Bulgarian strip of country along the Aegean. If the people of Enos and Dede Agatch preferred to be Greek, Bulgaria would thoroughly deserve to lose them.

Greek the language and civilization of Constantinople ought certainly to be; and it will probably be the real religious centre of all the Eastern Churches. But politically it should be a free city (as Saloniki, Fiume and Danzig in Europe will be) and a self-governing state under the guardianship of the League of Nations.

Only, we should not put all our eggs in one basket. Suppose the League of Nations fails? We must face that possibility, since former attempts have failed. To guard against the danger, it seems to me as an Englishman that the United States should assume a special interest in the metropolis of civilization, and should be her guardian in the last resort.

In any case, the war will have failed if Constantinople remains in the hands of the tribe that ruined her in 1453.

NOVEMBER THE ELEVENTH

BY ALLEN TUCKER

Victory, flowers, glory eternal,
Cheers, rejoicing, peace enflamed,
Think of the ones to whom we owe it,
Think of the maimed.

With the sky all blue, and the sun all golden
Voices roaring like the sound of wind,
Think of the men who must live in darkness,
Think of the blind.

Flags and banners, tossing triumphant,
Streets streaming with colour, blue, white and red,
Think of those who gave this to us,
Think of the dead.

BEHOLD ALL THINGS ARE BECOME NEW

BY THE RT. REV. ARTHUR SELDEN LLOYD, D.D.

Old things are passed away. Behold all things are become new. 2 Corinthians, V: 17.

ST. PAUL had seen what the Spirit of God is able to do for a man who has been born again from above, and arguing from this to the fruition of the redemption, he exclaimed, "Old things are passed away. Behold all things are become new." Nor is it difficult for us to understand what he meant, living as we do in this age which begins to shadow forth the wonderful things he dreamed of and to tempt men to think of all things in the light of what the Incarnate One has wrought.

It is from this point of view I would ask you to think of the service to which we have been summoned today, since the consecration of our brother to the office of a bishop in the Church of God seems to mark a definite advance in the development of the Church's life.

All the more suggestive is this act because it comes after long and reverent discussion of the most perplexing and at the same time most grave problem which confronts the American Church, when we think of her as the handmaiden of the nation. In this capacity it is her duty and high privilege to build up in the people such a character as will make them fit to become citizens of a free country, and of all our people none are more worthy to profit by this service than the citizens of African descent.

Perhaps the most interesting detail of the discussion which has ended in the deliberate choice of men for the bishop's office because they are of African descent is that it was opposed chiefly on the ground that it was contrary to the genius of the Catholic Church to allow racial distinctions to influence the choice of her chief ministers. The decision seems to indicate that the Church has recognized that the urgency of the need for help may be more compelling than technical difficulties. If this is true it may turn out to prove a valuable precedent.

Realizing that she confronts a condition which will disappear so soon as the causes which produced it have been removed, she has dared to be guided by the law of love and has determined to try what may be called an experiment, because she believes that by this means she may more profitably fulfil the high service to which she has been called.

It would be our great loss if we were misled by supposing that for the first time the Church recognizes an obligation which has hitherto been ignored. It were more accurate to regard this as the fruit of that sowing which began when God's people had only their faith in our Lord's promise to guide them.

In the days when political bitterness made most difficult any mutual helpfulness between the races which for generations had lived in the happiest relation, it was no less glorious that the strong were constantly solicitous for the weak, than that among the colored people there should have been many whose love for the Church nothing could daunt. For more than fifty years these have labored together to bring blessing to our colored brethren, and the beneficent results have proven what blessing will follow once the whole Church realizes the invaluable service she may render, not only to her own, but to the nation as well, by helping this great body of citizens to learn how to bring up their children so that these may be able to bear their part in the nation's life.

Yet from the beginning there has been one very great obstacle to the best results from this work. Due largely to circumstances, it is nevertheless true that the Church has had small success in gaining the support for the work she did from the people to whom she ministered. The colored people have seemed to be too willing recipients of their brethren's bounty. And it is true for America as for China that the Church can never be regarded as established among the people until those who receive her ministrations are ready to support her institutions. For this reason the Church's apparent inability to establish self-supporting congregations among the colored people has been a constant source of anxiety for those, whether white or black, who were persuaded that the Church could render assistance to our colored population which these could secure from no other source.

Those priests of African descent who have been most zealous for their own race have constantly noted and deplored this and have consistently declared that the difficulty would be eliminated so soon as the colored people were permitted to bear their own responsibility. And what these men have said has been borne out not only by striking exceptions to the rule within the Church, but by the amazing results that have been accomplished by communities of colored people which have cheerfully assumed responsibility for their own undertakings and have carried them to a successful issue.

Those who are best informed with regard to this whole question believe that a solution has been found for the difficulty. They are sure that when thrown on their own resources and in so far as may be made free to direct their own affairs, Americans of African descent will prove their worthiness of the confidence placed in them; and it is pleasant to feel sure this is true.

In no uncertain terms, by the consecration of a bishop whose whole care it shall be to shepherd the flock of his own race, the Church has declared that she has utmost faith in the ability of these her children, and that her purpose henceforth is to treat them as full grown men. While her nurturing care will ever be over them, ready to assist and protect in the day of small things, in this consecration the Church seems to say, "I regard you no more as babes, but as strong men in Christ Jesus, and shall confidently expect henceforth that you will bear your full part in laboring for the establishment of the Kingdom of God." Nor can one question what the answer will be when one remembers the record that the Negro regiments have made for themselves which were called to help save civilization in the earth; or considering this part of our population as a whole when one considers the splendid courage and fortitude with which so large a proportion of Negroes who are Americans have displayed in making for themselves and their children an honorable place in the body politic.

It seems to me that the time in which this consecration has fallen is of most happy omen. We are still giving thanks for that victory which has finally proven that material force is no god for human nature to worship; and in the throwing down of that idol, all those false gods which have everywhere been worshiped are showed to be impotent. With these must disappear many unlovely things which such idolatry has fostered, and which heretofore have been regarded as compatible with civilization. Among these none has militated more disastrously against social development than race prejudice. Hereafter no one will presume to claim that this is not an offense against human intelligence; and yet it will not disappear at once from the face of the earth any more than will the sordidness and self-seeking which are born of the worship of material force. Yet unlike these it has at last been showed to be monstrous, and where race prejudice remains it will be recognized as the mark of lacking development and as the result of ignorance. Like superstition it will still hold its sway over some, but it will hide itself knowing that it no longer can expect to be regarded seriously; and the removal of this evil from the position of respectability which it has held to the great loss of our nation will render much more simple the Church's task of helping to make all the people understand that fundamental principle of democracy which demands that there shall be no unproductive citizens.

Human liberty, because it is of divine inspiration, must have not only a willing but competent defender in every soul who shares her beneficence.

In a democracy, just because its security depends on the readiness of every soul to help realize its ideals, it is abhorrent that there should be one unfitted to do his part.

These things which have been held among us as pleasing theories, have suddenly come to be recognized as facts of such profound importance that no labor is too great, no undertaking too costly which will insure their realization. The whole nation knows what a valuable asset its colored people will become when they have all become responsible citizens; so we may feel assured that this new departure in the Church's policy for helping to develop the social and spiritual life of her children will not need to depend solely on the pious enthusiasm of a few to enable it to be fairly tested, but thoughtful men everywhere will, because they are faithful Americans, generously support this courageous and wise endeavor to meet this most solemn responsibility.

competent to bear their responsibility as citizens of a free country? That is the great question, and the answer will be had when we have found first of all a way to help our brethren to help themselves, and to learn that as free men and citizens they may not desire to have any one carry for them the burden which is theirs by right; and somehow they may be perfectly assured that they will be justly dealt with in all the relations of life. That these things will surely be attained is evidenced by their being already true in fact. What remains to be accomplished is that they shall be such matters of course that there will be no need to state them.

It may be worth while to note that while the whites should help generously to bring these things to pass, it is really a matter which our colored brothers must accomplish for themselves. It is true today throughout our country that there are many colored men who share with their white neighbors all that goes with the name American. When such men suffer it is probably because they are pulled back by the multitude who lack character. This multitude constitutes the problem to be solved. And we have this to reassure us. Every citizen of African descent will surely have all his rights respected as a matter of course just as soon as it is an accepted fact that none remain who are able bodied yet willing to be dependent on the community in which they live, or willing to receive what they have not earned; for it is a law which seems to be instinctive that every man is respected regardless of race who is not only able but willing to do his part towards safeguarding the common interest.

The heart and mind of the American Church are fixed on helping to establish conditions which will at once enrich the nation and bring to her citizens of African descent the full enjoyment of those blessings which are theirs of right, whether as Christians or as Americans. And the Church has that on her side which assures success. First of all, the numbers and character of her colored communicants give her the confidence of every community in which her work is established. Added to this her institutions are of such real value and do such real work that these are accepted as standards by which the work of others may be measured. And as might be expected to follow on the truth of what has been said, her priests and other ministers of African descent bear everywhere a name worthy of their high calling. With such real values already to her credit we may confidently expect this work to go forward with increasing strength, ever accomplishing greater results. It will require courage and fortitude and patience, but these will be possible for us because we know that the work to be done is in accordance with the mind of Him who has said, "I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee."

THIS is a world of promise beyond all the promise of a thousand years, a world in which whosoever is strong in the faith may hope everything that saints foresaw, or martyrs died to bring.—EDWARD STANFORD MARTIN.

WHEN THE SMILE CAME BACK TO ENGLAND

BY A MEMBER OF THE STAFF

WHEN the smile came back to the face of England, I was lying ill in a hotel room in London, but so long as I live I shall never forget the day in which it came.

We had arrived in London at night a week before—a night which was like dreary hundreds of other nights through the long four years of war. But nothing we had read in America had in the slightest way revealed to us the meaning of London's darkened streets. We whirled out of the station in a taxi—out into what at first seemed utter oblivion. As we were rushed along we were conscious of movement all about us. Here and there a faint glow of light fell on the street, so very faint that it was like the flickering of a small lamp. And in this darkness hundreds of people were hurrying along; innumerable taxis and trucks and push carts sped by. And they were all mere forms flitting about in a spectral world. Everywhere, so we were told, shops were open, but everywhere shades were drawn, and there was no sign that business was going forward as usual. As we went about those darkened streets in the evenings that followed, stumbling over curbs, narrowly avoiding being run down by buses, bumping into other people, we learned to understand why so many hundreds of London's population had been killed since the lights were lowered.

Here in these dark streets, with life going on in the shadow, but going on with determination, was the symbol of England at war.

During the next few days there was a round of luncheons and dinners given in honor of our party. We heard, through the fine hospitality of the Ministry of Information, addresses by many of England's foremost men. We heard something of the story of England's gratitude for what America had done in the war; we heard more of England's longing for America's understanding and friendship after the war. But in every address there were things unspoken that seemed more terrible to me than any words can express. It is what Englishmen do not say about the war that grips one with strange fascination, and almost terrifies one with a consciousness of what England has suffered. In every word they uttered one felt a grim determination to carry on—but just beneath the determination which was so plainly seen was an agony unexpressed which nothing, not even the skilled British reserve, could conceal. It seemed to me that the England which we first saw was a community where every heartstring was drawn taut. Every experience of the daily life suggested war, and war meant something very different from anything that we had known in America. "Every family has had its loss"—this was the explanation we invariably received when we spoke of the sombreness so apparent among the people of London.

But there were, of course, many other causes of this agony. I had had no more understanding in America of what the air raids had meant to England than I had had of the meaning of London's darkened streets. From what I had read I had pictured London's population as somewhat indifferent to raids. People, so we were told, refused to take cover. When the German raiders came over they ran into the streets to watch. But they didn't—at least not after the first raid, when the shrapnel from their own defense guns killed those who ran along the pavements or onto the housetops.

From many lips I heard the story of those six nights in one week when, each night at half past eleven, just as people were going or had gone to bed, the Germans came over for their horrible work. It doesn't take much imagination to sense something of the terror that was spread through the hearts of people during those nights. Little children were pulled out of their beds, and old people were hurriedly dressed, and whole families ran down stairs and sat together in the basement or cellar, knowing that a direct hit on the housetop meant death for all. At intervals month after month this thing of hurrying out of bed and down to the basement was gone through with. Overhead was the rattle of the defense guns, and through the sound of their regular fire came the terrifying explosion of bombs, sometimes in the next house, sometimes just around the corner. I was shown one street not far from St. Paul's Cathedral where nearly every building was demolished during one raid. But people said nothing and carried on.

It is not remarkable that there were few smiles in England.

I shall always be glad that I was in London on Armistice Day, in spite of also being ill and in bed. Any American who was there will, I think, always be glad.

That morning I had been marvelling, as I had on the two previous days, at the efficiency of my English nurse. She was doing that day those innumerable but seemingly necessary things which nurses find to do for sick folk, and doing them under the domination of those years of strict discipline which leave so plainly their mark of effectiveness. Every move counted.

Suddenly the air was rent with gun fire. All the maroons (the air raid warning guns) in London seemed to let go at once. The nurse's efficiency broke down.

"Listen!" she cried, dropping things in the middle of the floor. "Peace!" Rushing into the adjoining room she threw up a window. From far below I heard the sound of the multitudes cheering. Sometimes it seemed very near; sometimes far away. As it ebbed and flowed it was like music, like the chanting of some choir. Now and then a bugle call rose above it and died away. In a moment I heard the distant measured tolling of a great bell.

"Do you hear?" called the nurse from her place by the window. "It's Big Ben—ringing for the first time in four years!" That long-silent clock on the Parliament buildings was striking eleven, the hour of peace.

Usually the hotel was very quiet. But now I heard people rushing about in the corridors. Maids were calling to one another the wonderful news.

"Do you mind if I go out for a bit?" asked the nurse coming back into the room. She was smiling as if the coming of peace had brought her a great personal joy. "This will make a big difference in my life," she said a moment later, as she opened the door to go out. I suspected that she was thinking of some English lad at the front, and later found this to be the fact. She was to be married as soon as "her boy" was out of the army.

An hour later she hurried into the room, her face aglow. "The people have gone wild—and everybody is smiling" she said. "Old ladies are sitting on the tops of the buses waving flags and smiling, and old men are going along smiling and almost dancing. The soldier lads have their arms around each other, and they're singing and laughing."

She came over to pin a tiny Union Jack and an American flag above my bed. "It's wonderful to see them smile" she said.

Wonderful indeed! As American friends came in during the subsequent days and told me of the armistice celebration there were two things they always said. Always they spoke of the smiles, and always they said that on that day they had not heard the word "victory," but only the word "peace." No one could doubt that there was joy because of victory, but the thought in the mind of England was gratitude for peace. At last the days of agony were at an end.

One afternoon a few days later I saw the transformation that had taken place in the heart of England, when for the first time I could go out in a motor. We traveled from High Holborn in London to Richmond, that suburb which is so justly famed for its beauty. But far more beautiful to me were the smiles that I saw along the way. I think that it would be impossible to exaggerate the change from what I had seen those first days in London. Along Piccadilly there was a buoyancy among the throngs which was very different from anything that was there before. People walked with a lighter step, and as they hurried along they smiled and chatted with one another with a new freedom. Out along Kensington Gardens (where I was sure Peter Pan must be having the time of his life that day) and along past the picturesque little houses on the road to Richmond I think we saw every perambulator of which London could boast, and it seemed to me that every one was pushed by a Tommy who was smiling as he talked to his wife, who smiled as she listened. On the tops of swaying buses were massed soldiers and civilians and girls in uniform, and I was sure that they were all very happy, for I was sure that every one was smiling.

As we drove back through the dusk of early evening, and I saw for the first time the city's streets under artificial light, I thought of that other night when we had come into the shadow of London at war. I was glad that England could smile.

WHICH LEAGUE?

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

AT the close of the Civil War, when the perplexing problem of reconstruction confronted him, President Lincoln stated his policy thus:

Pilots on our western rivers, in time of fog, are accustomed to steer for the next headland in sight, and from there to the next. In this time I propose to lay my course as far as I can see, and no farther.

Just now, when the whole world is in chaos, a large portion of the community appears to be possessed with a desire to steer for a goal which is far below the horizon, and whose location nobody knows. This goal they propose to reach by means of a device called a "League of Nations." Its protagonists are a president and an ex-president of the United States.

The precise scope and character of the plan in the President's mind is as yet obscure. It has not as yet been announced as defined. The plan of the ex-president has been set forth to its last detail. Are they identical? Are they equally possible? Are they equally desirable? The motives of both are the same. They spring out of the heart sickness at the spectacle of the world's agony during these last years. Hard to assuage, that anguish, hard to prevent its repetition. It demands a common and united action by the nations to this end. But the two plans are not the same. Let us see first what they are.

Thus far the President has not committed himself to anything beyond the necessity of some united or cooperative action by the nations to right existing wrongs and guarantee as far as possible against another such catastrophe. Thus far the allied nations and their leaders are in agreement with him. To this extent the plan is flexible, adaptable and limited. The most powerful nations of the world are already in it. To accomplish it they have pooled their thought and their force throughout the war. They could not avoid going on with their work together if they wished. But the characteristic of this united action is that it envisages the necessity which immediately confronts it,—to arrange terms and conditions for a peace, while as yet there is only an armistice, to help to their feet and steady the steps of the peoples of central Europe and Asia, who now lie prostrate. All reasonable men will wish well to such an association of nations and will sustain the President so long as he stays within the limits of the practical and the possible.

But the other plan differs toto carto. Its title is "A League of Nations to Enforce Peace." It has in mind the vision of a past which never was and a future which never can be. It is a theory in vacuo. But it has about it an air so fair-seeming that it has arrested for the time the imagination of multitudes. It appears so simple, so coherent, so in analogy with customary governmental methods. A league to which each nation binds itself by most formal engagement; a league to whose decisions each signatory nation engages itself to submit; engages to contribute its quota of armed force to compel every other nation to submit; an international tribunal to formulate its judgment; an international army and navy strong enough to enforce its decisions as against any recalcitrant power or powers. Why not?

Its utter and hopeless impossibility might be thought a sufficient reply. Curiously, however, its champions have a way of dismissing the practical difficulties which make it impossible as "details." It is this very habit which marks the scheme as visionary. The doctrinaire always dismisses irreducible facts as "details." But these details are of the very essence of the scheme. First of all, the plan is a league, not an understanding, not a treaty which may be denounced if necessity demands, but a solemn contract, irrevocable, to which the sacred honor of each nation is pledged, let the consequence to itself be what it may. With anything less than such a sacred pledge the whole scheme breaks down. What reasonable, what sane nation, would commit itself to such a pledge?

But still further "details." What "nations" are to be admitted to the league? China? Guatemala? Chile? Poland? Mexico? What proportion of representation shall each have? What shall be the quota of each toward the international army and navy? Who shall command the force? These are not "details," they are the essentials to the structure of such a scheme. Is it conceivable that either President or Senate would ever consent to tie the hands or stifle the soul of the United States by such bonds as these that we have named?

But the real objection to the whole scheme lies much deeper. It is not political or practical, but moral. It is that it moves in a low and sordid plane. It seeks only comfort and ease and cares not for right. It is a league to enforce peace, but has no thought or care to enforce righteousness. It looks to "peace" as the ultimate good of existence. It would buy it or enforce it at any cost. It has for its champion every pacifist, every "intimidist," every conscientious objector, every cloistered professor, professional evangelist, every pro-German, every Henry Ford and Jane Addams,—every member of the crew of the whilom peace ship.

Suppose it to be in working efficiency. Then the last hope and aspiration of every small and oppressed people would be extinguished. For the very object of the whole monstrous machinery would be to secure the undisturbed tranquillity of the world. The whole dead weight of the leagued nations would lie upon any suffering nationality. Would they ever risk disturbing the world's tranquillity for the sake of righting some small people's wrongs? Would they not inevitably judge it better that such people should continue to endure its wrongs than that the dear peace of the world should be jeopardized? Let no one be misled, the scheme is not in the interest of the small nations. It is to guarantee the ease and comfort of the great ones.

It is not strange that the grandiose scheme has cast a glamour over the people. But it has two hopeless obstacles to overcome: first, the stubborn facts of life are against it; second, the all conquering force which makes for righteousness will always bring to naught the devices which look only to peace.

A HOSPITAL CHAPLAIN WHO UNDERSTANDS

BY A MEMBER OF THE STAFF

MANY clergymen will receive during the next few months a letter containing the following words:

The man whose name you will find at the foot of this letter has just been discharged from this hospital and will soon be home again. When he arrives you will not find, I think, that he has undergone any striking spiritual or religious change. He is probably much the same man that he was when he left your community. He has, however, a gift to give—a gift of which he is himself probably quite unconscious but which, if it is revealed to him, will mean much to his home, to his church, to his community, to his country. He is one in whose keeping lies the hope of the America of Tomorrow.

What are you going to do with him when he is there with you again? Will you interpret to him the meaning of his home-coming? Will you help him to understand his great experience overseas, as that experience now affects the life that he shall be called upon to live? Will you challenge him for the gift that is his now to give?

This is just a line from one minister to another, both of whom are committed to the task of remaking America. It is sent in the earnest hope that it will help towards that great end.

Those words are from a letter which Chaplain E. Ashley Gerhard showed me the other day in his office at the Grand Central Palace, New York, now U. S. A. Debarkation Hospital No. 5. It is a letter which will go to the pastor of every wounded boy who passes through that hospital on his way back to the home town and the old life. And after hearing Chaplain Gerhard's plan, and reading the letter, I came to the conclusion that one man has made a scheme for putting soldier boys into touch with the Church which is bound to bear very real fruit.

It is a pleasant pastime for clergymen and laymen to muse on the new meaning that is to be given to the life of the local church with the return of our boys from overseas. I have seen a good many of those boys as they came back to this country, and I haven't been blinded by the "new light that is in their eyes," nor have I seen any disposition on their part to crowd our religious services. It is the sort of thing we would like to have them do, but the cold fact is that they are not doing it. I asked Chaplain Gerhard whether he had seen any evidence to the contrary.

"Why, these boys haven't been thinking of ideals," he said. "Most of them hardly realize what you are talking about when you tell them what they have been fighting for. They think of the war as a horrible, dirty mess. They felt that it was a job that had to be done, and they were glad to help. Now they are glad that it is over, and they want to forget all about it as soon as possible. They have been too close to it to realize clearly the great ideal behind it. And that fact creates the first responsibility of the Church. The Church has got to bring home to these boys what they have done, but also—and this is more important—what they can do.

"I suppose I was put here in this hospital as an officer to look after the executive end of things. But the work I want to do, and the work I am finding time to do along with the other, is that of talking to the boys, and helping them to know what we here in America think of them and all that they have done, and, what is still more important, what we expect of them now that they are back home. I try to help them to see what a contribution they can make to the creation of a finer, better America when they get back to their home towns; try to make them see their responsibility toward the community. I tell them that the greatest promise for the nation is to be found in them. And I find that they respond."

On the night before Christmas the chaplain was out in front of the great building at Forty-sixth Street shaking hands with a new lot of wounded boys just off a transport. As they climbed out of the ambulances he gave them a cheery word and a grip that meant "welcome home." In one of the ambulances there was a chap who made no effort to get out. "What's the matter, old man? Like it too well to leave?" asked the chaplain. "I'm not going in there," said the soldier. "I was married sixteen years ago today and I'm going home without leave to spend Christmas with my family."

The chaplain, being a discerning sort of person, climbed into the ambulance and told the driver to take them around the corner and wait. He told the soldier lad that the best that he could give to America lay in the future. What he had done in France was a great gift, but he was to have the privilege of making an even greater gift in the days to come. His citizenship would count for even more than his soldiership. And was he going to destroy his privilege of making that contribution by so rash an act as taking absence without leave?

Finally the boy told the chaplain he would go into the hospital.

The next day when the chaplain saw the soldier he was glad that he had had that little talk in the ambulance. "Chaplain," said the boy, "I've been thinking about what you said to me last night. I thought I had made my gift over there (one leg was gone) but now I know you are right. I'm going to make that bigger gift when I get home."

On the twelve floors of the Grand Central Palace, the scene of so many interesting gatherings in the past, are 1,500 wounded boys. When the hospital is in full operation there will be 4,000, the majority staying for only 48 hours. The name of every boy who passes through will go on the card index of Chaplain Gerhard, with the name of his church attached. On the day that the boy leaves the letter printed above will go to his pastor. If he had no church connection, a similar letter will go to the mayor, or the village president, or the president of the Chamber of Commerce. So far as possible the chaplain will talk to the boys a bit as he talked to that boy in the ambulance.

I suspect that he is planting seed which any parson can cultivate if he is wise enough to heed what the chaplain says in that letter, and overcome any illusion he may have about new light in soldier eyes.

"Will you interpret to him the meaning of his home-coming? Will you help him to understand his great experience overseas as that experience now affects the life that he shall be called upon to live? Will you challenge him for the gift that is now his to give?"

THE GAME OF WAR

BY MEDORA ADDISON NUTTER

TIN sword in hand and paper cap
Aslant your tousled head,
You play at soldier all the day
Until I snatch you from the fray
And carry you to bed.

A sword beside your strong white hand—
You lie so still, my son!—
A crimson stain upon your breast,
Closed eyes, at last a little rest—
The game is done.

IN CRUCE GAUDIUM

BY MARGARET ELY WEBB

LO, a strange thing has happened unto me—
Grief held me close, so close I could not see,
Beneath the shadow of His sheltering wing.
For one long day my hand lay still in His;
I knew the pain dearer than utter bliss.
Fairer the world for this will be to me,
Yet joy seems but a lonely forlorn thing.
Until He comes again, I cannot sing.

NEWS OF THE CHURCH

SOME NEW YORK CHURCHMEN DISCUSS THE PEW SYSTEM

General Sentiment Favors the Adoption of Free Church

Considerable space was given in the daily papers to Dr. Manning's proposal to make Trinity Church, New York, a free church. People have seemed generally agreed that the pew system is undemocratic and out of harmony with the new time. The more conservative churches appear to hesitate because of the problem of financing the churches. However, where there has been a strong conviction on the part of a rector that free pews is the right system for a Christian church, he has usually carried the day.

What some New York Churchmen think of the problem is indicated in their statements below:

Samuel Thorne, Jr.—The move for free pews is along the line of true democracy. It has been said to be impracticable. I feel that the problem is to be solved, for parishes in the Diocese of New York at least, by the Every Name Canvass which will put the problem up to every individual in a personal way. The pew system has been the means in the past of solving the financial problem, but we have got beyond the day of the rented pew, and the practical way to meet the problem, as has been demonstrated on all sides, is through the Every Name Canvass. Rented pews represent payment for a privilege. The Every Name Canvass, on the other hand, emphasizes the opportunity for service. Wherever it has been used with proper preparation it has solved every problem of financial support. So the old argument is shattered. People who do not wish to give each week can give by the month or year as they wish. The system is thoroughly flexible.

Henry L. Hobart, president of the Church Club.—I am strongly in favor of the free pew system. The majority of church-going people are, I am sure, in favor of it. The question is, after all, a practical one. The financial support of the church, where it is not endowed, is a problem that has not yet been solved, though a solution has more nearly been reached by the envelope system than any other. I think that it ought to be borne in mind that in parishes where the pew system prevails seats are free except at the eleven o'clock service. This is true at Trinity.

The Rev. Charles Lewis Slattery.—I have served two parishes in which the pews have been free and two in which the pews have been rented. The difficulties attached to rented pews are balanced by difficulties which inhere in a free church. I remember one Sunday morning looking down into the congregation at sermon time and seeing the end seats in the six best pews in the church occupied by various members of the same family. In this same parish, where the Sunday school was held immediately before the morning service, the children who came to church did not know where to find their parents and more often than not sat with other children rather than with their parents.

In arguing for free pews we ought not to forget the responsibility which children and grandchildren often feel in occupying the family pew where their forebears have sat. The loyalty to a family tradition is a sanction not lightly to be cast aside.

The real problem in any church is to see that those who are responsible for its maintenance show to all who come a spirit of gracious fellowship and forbearance. Pew owners who come to church early and who invite into their pews strangers who reach the church at the same time with themselves probably do more to demonstrate the Christian welcome of the church than could be accomplished by the word of an usher who bade the stranger sit where he pleased. After a service on Thanksgiving Day a woman was thus invited into a parishioner's pew. After the service the stranger turned to the parishioner with the simple words: "I am alone in New York today and was desolate. Your kindness has made this Thanksgiving Day for me."

Taber Sears, vestryman of St. Mark's.—It is a self-evident proposition that the seats in a church must be free to all. The real question is how to make all contribute toward parish support. The fault of the whole thing lies with the laity, not the clergy. If the laymen would take the initiative, instead of expecting the clergy to do the whole thing, the problem of finances would soon be solved.

BISHOP TUTTLE ROBBED BY ST. LOUIS HIGHWAYMEN

Has Thrills of His Frontier Days as He Loses Old Key-Winder

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.—Bishop Tuttle was given all the thrills of his old days out in the Montana mining gulches on the night of January 2 here in St. Louis. The bishop had been presiding at the monthly meeting of the diocesan missionary board in St. George's parish house. He left the meeting about 10 o'clock and started to walk home, a distance of six or eight blocks, as he frequently does. A few steps from the entrance to Vandeventer Place a highwayman pushed a gun in the bishop's face with the customary salutation. Another ruffian went through the bishop's pockets. The chief loss was the faithful old key-winder watch which the bishop has carried from early manhood, also a gold chain and cross with which many tender memories are associated. He lost what small change was on his person, about $10.

Bishop Tuttle will celebrate his eighty-second birthday this month. He is hale and hearty and a great walker, as he has always been. His dull ears were a bit of an embarrassment to him when the challenge to hold up his hands was first given. After his assailants had released him, the bishop walked on home, where his family telephoned the news of the holdup to the police station. No clew to the bandits has been found.

Dayton Honors Colored Troops

DAYTON, OHIO.—The colored soldiers of this city as well as their fellow-fighters from other parts of the country were honored at a service of intercession held on a recent Sunday afternoon at St. Margaret's Church here. It was the first service of its kind in Dayton and the church was crowded. The choir, in procession with cross, flags and the service flag of the parish hanging from two swords, sang "Onward Christian Soldiers" as the opening hymn.

BISHOP LAWRENCE HAS AN OPERATION FOR MASTOID

Patient Too Weak as Result of Influenza to Take Anaesthetic

BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS.—Bishop Lawrence was successfully operated on at his residence Monday afternoon last for a mastoid abscess. The operation was performed by Dr. Eugene Crockett. Owing to his weakened condition, following several weeks of illness, Bishop Lawrence was unable to go under an anaesthetic. Following the operation the patient was very weak.

As has been previously reported in THE CHURCHMAN, Bishop Lawrence has been confined to his house for several weeks with an attack of influenza. His recovery was said to be slow owing to the strain of overwork incident to the burden of preparing for the special twenty weeks of services which he arranged for his diocese.

Bishop Page Appointed

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

May I be allowed to give notice in your columns that I have appointed Bishop Page of Spokane to be my substitute in the charge of the missionary district of Idaho. Bishop Page has consented to accept the appointment and he will probably be called upon to serve for a year or more.

As an old Missionary Bishop myself, I know how responsibilities will press upon him and how supplies for maintenance must be secured by him.

Will the generous givers throughout The Church kindly send their help for Idaho to Bishop Page at Spokane, Wash., that the work in school, hospital and parishes in Idaho may not be imperiled during the vacancy in its Episcopate?

DANIEL S. TUTTLE,
Presiding Bishop.

St. Louis, Mo.,
January 4, 1919.

New Students at Seminaries

The General Theological Seminary is expecting a number of new students for the second semester. One new student has already arrived, and others have signified their intention of entering in February.

The Cambridge Theological School also expects new students in the middle of the year. As is known, the Government took over all the buildings except the library and the chapel last autumn. The few students have been housed in No. 10 Mason Street and classes have been held in the seminary room of the library. The senior class was to have been graduated in February. The signing of the armistice, however, makes this haste unnecessary. Much uncertainty still remains as to the time when the men may be released from the army and navy, but the school is preparing to go on as usual after midyears.

The New York Training School for Deaconesses also expects a new class in February. The class will not be admitted unless at least six students register. It looks, however, as though full that number would be ready to begin their training for Church work after midyears.

NEW JUNIOR PLAN WILL CENTRALIZE PARISH LIFE

G. B. R. E. and Board of Mission Plan Training of Children

At the last meeting of the Board of Missions, Miss Frances Withers, the Junior secretary, presented what is popularly known as the "Junior Plan." This is nothing more nor less than a scheme for unifying the parochial system of teaching and training the young life of the Church by a week-day extension of the Church School. The Board of Missions enthusiastically endorsed the plan. As is well known, Miss Withers worked with the General Board of Religious Education before becoming Junior secretary of the Board of Missions. She has done a great deal of the work involved in the Christian Nurture Series. This "Junior Plan" is a logical carrying out of the education in missionary obligation which was the purpose of the Junior Auxiliary since its establishment, in relation to the regular religious education of the child through the Christian Nurture Series.

An editorial in the last issue of The Leader explains lucidly the plan and its purpose. A twenty-page document with charts and full description of the plan may be procured from the Board of Missions and forms the basis of the following paragraphs:

What the new Junior Plan means has been made very clear by Miss Withers, who has handed me a new set of charts and directions recently multigraphed by the Board of Missions. It makes a document of twenty-one pages and provides material for the application of the plan in any parochial situation.

In brief, the "Junior Plan" presents the Church with a "parochial system of teaching and training the young life of the Church by a week-day extension of the Church School." The term "Church School" as used in this plan "means the entire system of organized teaching and training of the children and youth of the parish from birth through adolescence." It calls for a parochial board of religious education made up of the many or few officers and leaders of the various organizations, with the rector as chairman. "This board should systematize and co-ordinate the entire plan of teaching and training of the parish, so far as the main features of it are concerned, acting as a clearing house or council of adjustment wherever conflicts of interest or overlapping of functions appear."

Here we have the foreshadowing of the new method of running a parish. With the very best intentions on all sides, the Sunday school, the Junior Auxiliary, the Junior Brotherhood, the Girls' Friendly Society, and other organizations, have been competing for the attention and service of the youth of the parish, until the notion has been planted that the parish was a field in which any organization might find a place if it came with the prestige of numbers and with evidences of success in other parishes and dioceses.

Miss Withers' plan changes all that. The parochial board of religious education becomes a board of strategy; the local community, the diocese, the nation, the world become the field in which the parish shall operate and bear witness. The parochial board utilizes the organizations as means by which the parish expresses its life. The Board of Missions is no longer an organization begging for the heathen; instead, this generation of the Church's youth will be taught to think of the world's needs and their power of prayer and gifts and service to meet those needs. From this point of view they will utilize the Board of Missions as the means by which they can fulfil their responsibility. The Brotherhood of St. Andrew and the Girls' Friendly Society will not be regarded as organizations holding out methods to interest the youth of the parish. Instead they will be seized by the parochial board and made to place all their experience at the disposal of the parish, that it may set its boys and girls to work for a better world. One rector put it clearly when he said: "I don't want the Junior Brotherhood or the Girls' Friendly Society or the Junior Auxiliary to help my children; I want them to help my children to do something."

Here is the new Junior Plan, Church School Plan—or call it what you will—in a nutshell: it means the parish reasserting itself and claiming those functions and responsibilities that will win each child's loyalty to the parish because it enables him to find his best self and win the greatest happiness in world service.

Detroit will provide demonstration of this plan next year at the time of the General Convention. Miss Withers and Dr. Bradner have spent many days in the city and have secured the pledge of five parishes to put the plan into operation.

Intelligence on its details is the essential now, and the new charts and suggestions cast a flood of light on parish organization for those who have eyes to see.

Signor Giampiccoli to Make Address

The annual meeting of the American Waldensian Aid Society will be held Wednesday afternoon, January 15, at half-past 3 o'clock, at Synod Hall. Bishop Greer will preside. There will be an address by the Rev. Ernesto Giampiccoli, B.D., moderator of the Waldensian Church of Italy, on the subject: "The Waldensian Church in War and Reconstruction." There will also be a presentation of pictures of Italy by the Rev. Henry C. Sartorio, curate of Christ Church, Boston, who has recently returned from the Italian front. The Italian children's choir of Grace Church will sing.

Signor Giampiccoli was born of Roman Catholic parents in 1869 in the Venetian Province, Fonzaso, which till lately was in the invaded provinces. When fifteen years old he became a member of the Waldensian Church by the simple reading of the Gospel. He had a very brilliant career as a university student in Florence and later in Geneva and Edinburgh, but chose the humble place of a Waldensian pastor rather than the high governmental position his father meant for him. He was appointed moderator of the Waldensian Church in 1913 and since then has been unanimously re-elected year after year. He is a highly gifted man, being a musician and poet, and has enriched the hymnal of the Waldensian Church with many of the most beautiful hymns that are sung in their churches to-day.

A Correction

Through an error, the advertisement of The Woman's Press, Publication Department of The National Board of The Young Woman's Christian Association, was printed in the Churchman Yearbook without being corrected, in consequence of which the well-known Y. W. C. A. triangle was omitted. It is the desire of The Woman's Press to be associated always with the Y. W. C. A., and for this reason we wish to call the attention of our readers to the unfortunate omission of the colophon.

NEW ENGLAND HAS NEW TRACT FOR ITALIANS

Committee on Various Races in New England Publishes Booklet

The Committee on the Various Races of the Province of New England has just issued a tract for use among the un-churched Italians of whom there are hundreds of thousands not only in this country but in their native land. It is believed that many may be saved from religious anarchy and atheism by bringing them out of their present indifference or skepticism to an attitude of inquiry and attraction toward the Episcopal Church. The text of this tract is in the Italian language, written by the Rev. T. E. della Cioppa, priest in charge of Emmanuel Mission, Philadelphia. It is endorsed by the Italian Priests' Association of the Protestant Episcopal Church, and sanctioned for use in the dioceses of New England by the bishops of the province. A translation into English is to follow. From an advance proof of this translation the following paragraphs showing the unique character of this tract, are selected:

"In America the Anglican Church is called Episcopal because she keeps the holy orders of the ecclesiastical ministry through bishops. She protests against all additions to and subtractions from the Catholic faith. For this reason she recognizes neither the papal authority nor the doctrines and discipline which are exclusively derived from the popes, and consequently she is not Roman."

"In the Episcopal Church every act of worship is performed with great dignity . . . All these services are contained in that book which is known as the Book of Common Prayer and is used at the same time by the officiating clergy and by the people, and in as many languages as the nations or races that may use it. The Book of Common Prayer contains the feasts of the saints and of the Blessed Virgin Mary, for whom the Church teaches only deep reverence, although she does not make any act of worship to them nor prayers to their statues or images. The surplice and stole and other sacred vestments, the cassock of the priest, the altar or holy table, etc., are in general accordance to the ancient form when the Church of our fathers was more pure and simple and followed more faithfully the spirit of Christ."

Every Italian who is no longer attending the papal Church because he is unsatisfied with its discipline and religious practices, ought to come to the Episcopal Church with his children and family, and bring others to it, since in this way he would not renounce the Catholic heritage, but surely improve it, having everything to gain and nothing to lose. Our bishops receive into the full communion of the Church those who, previously confirmed by bishops of the Latin or Greek Churches, make open and sincere profession of the faith among us."

The tract contains the Apostles' and Nicene Creeds, the collects for the Annunciation, St. Michael and All Angels, All Saints' Day, the closing prayer of the Office of Institution, and the "Prayer for a good death." There are also six illustrations: of an altar, a bishop in rochet and chimere, a priest in surplice, a priest celebrating at the altar, a deaconess in her habit, and a boy choir in the chancel of a church.

Copies of this tract may be obtained free in the Province of New England, and at the cost price of three cents a copy elsewhere, from the Committee on the Various Races, Rev. Robert Keating Smith, Secretary, Westfield, Massachusetts.

GENERAL THANKS CHAPLAIN FOR HIS EFFECTIVE WORK

Rev. A. H. Marshall Receives Appreciative Letter on Leaving Hospital

The fact that the work of the chaplains is appreciated by the Government is shown by the following letter received by the Rev. Arthur H. Marshall who at the base hospital at Camp Zachary Taylor ministered to more than twelve thousand men sick of influenza and other diseases and closed the eyes of more than nine hundred who died in the hospital. The letter is signed by the brigadier general at headquarters and says:

I desire in just a few words to express to you my appreciation of the splendid work you have done since you have been in the service as a chaplain. I have had a number of opportunities to observe and know how creditably you have performed the duties which have devolved upon you.

I was particularly impressed with your untiring efforts, your kindness and patience during the trying days of the influenza epidemic at this camp in comforting, consoling and helping the relatives and friends of our soldiers who were victims of this disease. It was due to your efforts and the efforts of the civilian workers under you that practically all who came here during those dark days went away so favorably impressed with the kindly sympathy, the courtesy and spirit of helpfulness which prevailed at the hostess house and the hospital.

Comparatively few people outside of those immediately involved will ever appreciate what you and the other faithful workers at the hostess house went through during that dreadful epidemic but I am sure you must have the satisfaction of knowing that you offered your services when they were most needed and performed the duties which fell to your lot most creditably.

DEAN TANCOCK'S WORK AS CHAPLAIN COMMENDED

Dean Tancock of Trinity Cathedral, Omaha, has been serving as chaplain of the Nebraska Base Hospital. In a recent issue of the Omaha World-Herald the following tribute to the chaplain's work appears in a letter from Major Stokes of the unit:

One man and his work deserves particular mention. This is the work of our chaplain, Dean Tancock. He is beloved by the entire unit and his counsel and advice have been invaluable.

The dean himself in a recent letter describes Thanksgiving Day at the hospital as follows:

We have had a good Thanksgiving Day in the best sense of the word. We had a perfectly splendid Thanksgiving service at 10 o'clock. The hut was crowded to overflowing—many were turned away. On the stage sat all the officers in their regalia and looking supernaturally grand! In the front, standing, were 100 nurses—the rest of the hall being filled with patients. The music consisted of two violins, a flute and a piano. It was awfully fine and everybody sang lustily. I spoke on the "Sacrifices of Thanksgiving." Afterward I visited some of the sick and bedridden.

He concludes his letter with an amusing account of the Thanksgiving dinner. What seemed to strike the men most was the fact that the table was laid with a linen cloth and that napkins appeared at each place!

CHINESE CATECHIST DOES SUCCESSFUL PRISON WORK

HWANGHEI, CHINA.—The catechist of the American Church Mission, Mr. Tsen-Hsiochen, and Mr. Wasson of the L. M. S. Mission, have started an important work here in the local prison. Each mission assumes responsibility for certain days and the official in charge of the prison is in full sympathy with the work done. He is cooperating with the missionaries by preparing a special hall in the prison for preaching. There are about one hundred and twenty men in the prison. As the result of the mission work the whole place has been cleaned up, classes in reading and writing have been started, manual work has been introduced—so far only shoemaking and the manufacture of tooth powder—and regular Bible classes inaugurated. The prisoners, many of whom are in prison because of political offences, are outspoken in their appreciation of the opportunities provided in this way for them.

Chaplains Graduated

LEXINGTON, KENTUCKY.—The following clergy graduated and were commissioned First Lieutenants and Chaplains in the United States Army at the last Training School for Chaplains at Camp Taylor: Shelton H. Bishop, New York City; Clyde B. Blakeslee, Columbus, Wisconsin; John H. Boosey, Meridan, Missouri; John H. Brown, Savannah, Georgia; T. M. Brown, Pittsburg, Pennsylvania; John E. Carhartt, Toledo, Ohio; George C. Dickinson, Oneonta, New York; Goodrich R. Fenner, Uvalde, Texas; John T. Lillard, Bloomington, Illinois; Stephen E. McGinley, Flushing, New York; Jacob H. Oehlhoff, Berkeley, California; Roland C. Ormsbee, Newark, New Jersey; Granville Taylor, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; John Williamson, Lancaster, Ohio.

St. James Has Great Loss

St. James' Parish in New York has lost by death an unusually large number of its soldiers. On the roll of honor of St. James' and Holy Trinity, the parish's East Side Church, were two hundred sixty-six names. Sixteen of these have died in the service, nine from St. James' and seven from Holy Trinity. Of the nine St. James' men, four were from two families, that is, two families lost two sons each, in both cases the only children. The stricken parents are Dr. and Mrs. Harmon A. Vedder and the Hon. Henry Galbraith Ward, the latter a member of the vestry of St. James'.

Old North Church Celebrates

BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS.—Old North Church celebrated the 195th anniversary of the parish Sunday morning. The vicar (the Rev. W. H. Dewart) had assembled for the occasion the Communion silver which was presented to the Church by King George III in 1733. The vicar preached the sermon and Mr. W. K. Watkins, secretary of the Society of Colonial Wars, read an historical paper on "The Boston of 195 Years Ago."

CHURCH MISSIONS HOUSE USED TWENTY-FIVE YEARS

Staff Has Grown from Eighteen to About Ninety

Twenty-five years ago the first of January, the offices of the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society moved into the newly-completed Church Missions House. The service of dedication was held on St. Paul's Day, January 25, 1894, the bishop of Albany—Bishop Doane—officiating in place of the presiding bishop who was unavoidably absent.

For twenty-five years the Church Missions House has not only been constantly in use, but the work in the interests of which it was constructed has so grown that instead of occupying parts of two floors, the offices of the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society now occupy almost the entire building.

The total number of officers and their co-workers twenty-five years ago was seventeen or eighteen; today the total number is between eighty and ninety.

In order to serve the double service of commemorating the completed quarter of a century of service and to answer many enquiries which are constantly being made, a series of short articles will be published in The Spirit of Missions beginning with January, 1919, giving an account of the work which is being done in the Church Missions House and taking the reader from one floor to another through the entire building.

Ordination to the Priesthood

RAHWAY, NEW JERSEY.—On St. Thomas's Day, December 21, the Rev. Vincent C. Bonnländer, deacon, was ordained to the priesthood by the Rt. Rev. Paul Matthews, D.D., Bishop of New Jersey, at the Church of the Holy Comforter. The candidate was presented by the Rev. Henry B. Wilson, B.D., rector of St. John's Church, Boonton, N. J.; the Litany was read by the Rev. H. A. L. Sadtler, rector of St. Paul's Church, Rahway; the Epistle was read by the Rev. Kenneth D. Martin and the Gospel by Dr. Craemer, warden of Seabury Divinity School; and the sermon was preached by the Rev. John F. Fenton, Ph.D., rector of St. Luke's Church, Metuchen, N. J.

New Dean for Albany

ALBANY, NEW YORK.—Canon Albert C. Larned, who is now chaplain with the Naval Militia in France, has been elected Dean of the Cathedral of All Saints by the Cathedral Chapter. He has accepted and will return to Albany as soon as he is released from service. Dean Larned came to Albany as Canon of the Cathedral on Palm Sunday of last year, but was called to service ten days later. He was chaplain of the U. S. S. Georgia and was later made chaplain of the Naval Base Hospital in England. In Paris on the occasion of the visit of the Bishop of London on November 24, Dean Larned took part in the British Thanksgiving service.

Ordination by Bishop Demby

OKLAHOMA CITY.—The Rev. Frank Norman Fitzpatrick, missionary in charge of the Chapel of the Redeemer, was ordained priest on December 23 by Bishop Demby, the Suffragan Bishop of the Province of the Southwest for the colored people.

BISHOP BRENT SPEAKS AT BURIAL OF MAJOR STRAIGHT

Death Powerless to Defeat So Knighly a Man

PARIS.—At the burial of Major Willard D. Straight in the cemetery at Suresnes, December 3, 1918, Bishop Brent said:

"In the army when a comrade is taken, it is the common custom to speak of him in terms of farewell before his body is laid in its last resting-place.

"In speaking of Willard D. Straight, I speak of one who lived a long life in a few years. His native gifts and varied experience equipped him to render distinguished service to the cause and country for which he spent his powers without stint. His organizing genius was exactly what the moment needed. We had thought of him as one of those destined and prepared to make a valuable contribution to the reconstruction of life in the new era that is at its dawn. But it had been ordered otherwise; and he has carried into a sphere beyond this world a personality which will operate there in building up the permanent order for which this world is the training school.

"It would be a lack of faith to think of him in terms of loss only. We shall surely miss the courtly presence of our comrade. But his disappearance from our midst does not mean that a superior force has conquered him. Death is powerless to defeat so knighly a man as he was. It has set him free to operate in wider fields, and the vitality which flowed from his well-directed efforts among men will forever course through the veins of his country. Even though it was not the hissing bullet or the angry steel that closed his eyes in death; even though it was not in the turmoil of battle that he died; he has none the less given himself in behalf of the common cause. He has done the greatest thing that God or man can do—he has laid down his life for his friends, than which there is no greater act of love or service."

JERUSALEM SENDS MESSAGE OF GRATITUDE TO AMERICA

The following cablegram from Jerusalem was received in New York on Christmas morning, unfortunately too late for transmission to the Sunday Schools of America as a part of their Christmas exercises. It is hoped however, that it may be read in many Sunday Schools on a Sunday following Christmas, and accepted as an expression of gratitude from those whose lives have been saved and are now being assisted through the winter by gifts from the Sunday Schools of America.

JERUSALEM, DECEMBER 24, 1918. BETHLEHEM, NAZARETH, JERUSALEM SEND GRATITUDE AND GOOD WILL TO SUNDAY SCHOOLS OF AMERICA. GENERAL ALLENBY EXPRESSLY REQUESTS ME TO CONVEY HIS CHRISTMAS GREETINGS TO EVERY SCHOLAR, TEACHER AND OFFICER, THANKING THEM FOR LAST YEAR'S OFFERING. Instead of giving each other presents we are appealing to all working in Palestine to devote gifts to STARVING HALF-CLAD MULTITUDES OF BEIRUT, TRIPOLI, LEBANON, DAMASCUS, ALEPPO. The first to respond contributing twenty dollars are carpentry and shoemaking apprentices in Red Cross orphanage, Jerusalem, their pay being only thirty cents daily. Moslem, Jewish and Christian WOMEN IN THE INDUSTRIAL WORKROOMS GIVE DAY'S PAY pledging themselves to encourage others. Captain Ergar reports from Tripoli THOUSANDS OF ARMENIAN DEPORTEES TREKKING FROM HAMA ACROSS MOUNTAINS TO THEIR DEVASTATED HOMES in Kessab near Antioch. Funds especially necessary to rebuild roofs, equip hospitals and furnish food and employment until harvest. 600 Armenian women and children deported by Turks to Bagdad arrived by sea Port Said. We are giving them a Christian welcome. Dana, Nelson, released from terrible experience Turkish prison, Constantinople, are here. They refuse vacation and press forward to Beirut immediately to shoulder with Major Nicol immense task of relief. THIS CHRISTMAS-TIDE HUMANITY UNDERSTANDS AS NEVER BEFORE THE BRIGHT PROMISE OF BETHLEHEM AND RED SACRIFICES OF CALVARY.

GOOD ADVICE FOR CLERGY

Washington Layman Sends Them Unique Christmas Message

WASHINGTON, D. C.—One of the most active laymen of the Diocese of Washington sent to the clergy a unique Christmas booklet, the contents of which are given below:

"A pleasant smile—a friendly note—a neighborly visit—a cordial invitation to visit you—these things go far to win the laymen—for laymen, you know, are human.

"The biggest bank's biggest depositor is human. The littlest drug store's littlest customer is human;—you and I are human.

"Let us admit and recognize this fact. Let us keep in touch, let us be friendly with each other; not just at Christmas or on New Year's Day—but all the time.

"Laymen are good fellows, all of them; occasionally a little exacting perhaps, just as you and I are apt to be, but everything considered, they are pretty good chaps.

"They attend your services—they inspire you to nobler deeds—they contribute toward your income—they keep the Church open—for without their loyalty you would have no Church.

"Of course you give your laymen good service, but other Churches offer them good service too. So if they stick by you—stick by them—every single one of them.

"Think of them not as your members, but as individual human beings—men who laugh and scold, who work and play, who have their pleasures and grievances, their moments of sadness, their days of content.

"Think of them as Bill and Sam and Dick—as individual units who help make up the world we live in.

"And who look to you to lead them on the way to Heaven."

Bishop Greer in Hospital

During the past month Bishop Greer has not infrequently been interrupted in his work by attacks of illness which though not serious kept him away from his office and prevented him from keeping his numerous engagements. In order therefore to have a period of complete rest and to have opportunity to undergo special treatment, the bishop on New Year's Eve went to St. Luke's Hospital where he expects to remain until he is able to resume his work again.

DR. McKIM CELEBRATES 30th YEAR OF SERVICE

Receives Testimonial from Men Prominent in National Life

WASHINGTON, D. C.—On the Sunday after Christmas the Rev. Randolph H. McKim celebrated the 30th anniversary of his rectorship of Epiphany Parish in the city and diocese of Washington, a long and notable service, distinguished in its leadership in parish and community, in diocese, Church, and nation. In his sermon at the morning service Dr. McKim reviewed the record. The preaching, the pastoral ministrations, the parochial activities, in the period under review had led to 3,600 baptisms, 2,600 confirmations, the addition of 5,220 persons to the communicant roll, and a total income of $1,500,000. The neighborhood changed during Dr. McKim's rectorship from a residential one to a downtown section, but Dr. McKim kept ahead of the development, and adjusted the work to the new conditions.

The wardens and vestry after the service presented a testimonial to Dr. McKim, testifying respect, confidence and affection on behalf of themselves and the congregation, and stressing the great service to parish, community and country of his fearless and farsighted preaching on national and international issues ever since the German war began in 1914. Special emphasis was laid on the preparedness of the parish in its spiritual and material strength and equipment for the new relations, opportunities, duties and responsibilities arising from the war conditions in the nation's Capital. The testimonial was signed by the wardens and vestry, who include in their body men distinguished in the community and in public affairs, such as Surgeon General Wm. C. Gorgas, Col. George Truesdell, Admiral M. T. Endicott, Col. John Van R. Hoff, Dr. A. R. Shonds, Dr. M. F. Finley, Mr. Nathaniel Wilson, Rev. C. N. Osgood.

Gives Novel Christmas Present

PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA.—The six hundred families, parishioners and pew-holders, of the Church of St. Luke and The Epiphany, were made the recipients of a novel Christmas present each in the form of a book of which the rector is the author, Addresses and Sermons to Students, by the Rev. David M. Steele.

The volume comprises, in its dozen chapters, twelve commencement addresses, orations and baccalaureate sermons, which have been delivered—as the foreword states—in all to as many as fifty institutions and to a composite company, it is estimated, of fifty thousand people. They have been arranged to typify, one each, a dozen coteries of students; among young men, medical, theological and university graduates; and young women, both of boarding school and college age.

Outline of Reconstruction Problems

To help people make a real study of the task before the nation, a study outline in reconstruction problems has been prepared by a number of men and women, each a specialist in his own line. It is published by the Association Press and promoted by the Federal Council of Churches and other national agencies. The outline is suited to the use of all churches, organizations and communities that contain groups of thoughtful people who honestly want to master the forces at work today.

CHURCH SHOULD OPPOSE U. S. MILITARY TRAINING

Zion's Herald Says Army Staff Have Prussian Program

In the current number of Zion's Herald is printed a severe condemnation of the Universal Military Service program of the Army General Staff. In part it follows:

"A measure has been drafted by the Army General Staff which will provide for nine months' training with the colors for every youth in his nineteenth year. Thus the country is face to face with the question of whether or not, as a result of the war, it is to be saddled with Prussianism.

"While Europe is determined that conscription shall be abolished at any cost, a large body of men in positions of influence in this country are equally set upon bringing the vicious system to America.

"The moment calls for most emphatic protest and denunciation of the whole matter by the Christian leadership of the country.

"America went into the war in behalf of a great ideal. She was determined to fight to the last ditch, if need be, for human freedom, and in doing this for the destruction of war. Universal military training is one of the prime requisites of militarism. It was this that gave to Germany the weapon which she could use at a moment's notice against her neighbors. It was this that made Germany a menace to civilization. Shall America, peace-loving America, which has grown mighty in the pursuits of peace, whose population is so largely composed of those who have come here to escape the results of the universal military systems of Europe, now turn to militarism with all its disastrous implications?

"The hope of the situation lies with the Christian Church. Whenever great moral questions have been before the nation, the pulpit has been the bulwark of strength that has made for the overthrow of evil.

"No greater evil can befall the country than for it to become an armed camp."

A CLEVER NEW SWINDLE

Brooklyn Rector the Victim of a Skillful Imposter

The rector of a large Brooklyn parish has issued the following statement for the benefit of CHURCHMAN readers:

"As a victim of the most elaborate ruse he has yet encountered the writer would send this warning to his more sagacious fellow clergymen.

"His telephone rang, and the 'Department of Public Charities' told of a sufferer from tuberculosis who could not be admitted to a public institution as he was a non-resident. The man belonged to Trinity Church, Boston, and Dr. Mann, when communicated with by the department, advised that he be sent to the writer.

"A half hour later the telephone announced long distance, and the victim was told that Mr. Kidner of Trinity, Boston, was speaking. Now the victim knows Mr. Kidner and thought he could recognize his voice among ten thousand. They discussed the case and agreed that the best thing for the man was to enter a sanitarium near Boston, and the victim said that he would see that the member of Trinity had a ticket for Boston that night.

"To cut a long story short, Mr. Editor, the victim is out $7. There is no such 'member of Trinity' and Mr. Kidner never telephoned! Verbum sapienti.

Dr. Alexander Mann, rector of Trinity Church, Boston, sends the following:

"From recent experience I have discovered that a new, ingenious and successful method for swindling the clergy is now in operation:

"The swindler calls upon the clergyman, generally the rector of a large city parish, and declares himself to be a parishioner of Trinity Church, Boston. From illness, or from some other cause, he is temporarily out of money and is anxious to get back home. He welcomes the closest scrutiny into the truth of his statement. During his call, or shortly after, the rector's telephone bell rings and some one claiming to represent the Associated Charities, or some other well-known organization, informs the rector that they have communicated with Boston concerning the truth of his caller's statements and finds them to be correct. Or else the rector is called up on what purports to be the long distance telephone and has a conversation with the rector of Trinity Church, Boston, or one of his assistants, in the course of which he is assured that the man is all right and that if he will advance the necessary funds to send him to Boston the church will repay the money. Later on the rector of Trinity Church receives a letter from the victimized parson, referring to the matter and stating the amount of money given, intimating that a cheque for the same may be sent at convenience.

"I should not think of taking up the space of THE CHURCHMAN with this recital if it were not for the fact that it has been quite recently brought to my attention that this clever rogue is still at work. Rectors of parishes as far apart as New Orleans and Brooklyn have been swindled by him. I send this line in the hope that it may catch the eye of my brethren in time."

G. F. S. Rest Room in Rome

There is in Rome no branch of the Girls' Friendly Society in America, but the English society, which is working there, is just opening a club room to which American members and associates will be warmly welcomed. Miss Muriel Talbot Wilson, 3 Via Francesco Redi, Rome, the branch secretary, will furnish the address of this room to any American visitors. Miss Talbot Wilson is an honorary associate of the American G. F. S. A., and is most anxious to make all members of the society welcome in Rome.

Installed as Dean

HASTINGS, NEBRASKA.—The Rev. Charles Rowland Tyner has been installed as dean of St. Mark's Pro-Cathedral by Bishop Beecher assisted by the Rev. W. H. Mills of Chadron. Bishop Beecher preached the sermon of Institution. Dean Tyner recently returned from France where he saw much fighting on the Western front while with the 1st Division, 18th Infantry.

Berkeley Alumni to Meet

The New York Alumni Association of the Berkeley Divinity School will be held at Brown's Chop House, 1424 Broadway, near Fortieth Street, on Tuesday, January 21, at 1 o'clock. Bishop Fries and Dean Ladd will be present. Important matters are to come before the association. All alumni in the city at the time will be welcomed.

Ordination

CONCORD, NEW HAMPSHIRE.—Gustave Samuel Girardet was ordained deacon in the chapel of the Holy Angels, Bishop's House, by the Rt. Rev. Edward M. Parker on Thursday, December 12. The Rev. Dr. Howard F. Hill presented the candidate and the bishop was the preacher.

CHAPLAIN IN LORRAINE FINDS GERMANS FRIENDLY

Say They Are Glad That the Monarchy Has Fallen

From Lorraine Chaplain E. R. Laine, Jr., of Christ Church, Springfield, writes to THE CHURCHMAN as follows, under date of November 28:

"I reached France and this regiment just in time to be in the closing action of the war (the Argonne). The 58th Infantry has been in action continuously since last June and is badly cut to pieces. When the armistice was signed we settled down to live in some dug-out in the St. Mihiel Sector. Later we were chosen as part of the Army of Occupation to go into Germany and have been on the march ever since. We entered Lorraine on the heels of the retiring German army.

"I was billeted over last Sunday with a wealthy German engineer in D—. His only son, a German lieutenant, fell in the campaign of 1916. They were thorough Germans but were kind and very courteous to me, calling me Herr Feld-Pfarrer. The mother showed me the picture of the son and wept bitterly. She said, 'He was only a lad and never loved the Army, but he loved the Fatherland and died for it, not for the Emperor.' The father said, 'I love Germany but I never liked the Emperor. Four years and a half of war and all Germany has is debts and graves. She is ruined (caput).' France and England they disliked, but seemed to trust America. The father said of President Wilson, 'He was our enemy, but of all our foes he alone do I trust.' They spoke of the different attitude of the American Army to the war saying, 'We could not really hate you but we did not understand you.' They told me the story of the years of the war. Even the richest reduced to great privations. Every home with its dead—the fallen ones. They were glad the monarchy was gone but wished the 'moderates' and not the 'Socialists' could form the new Republic.

"We left there and are now billeted in a small town, largely French."

ERIE CLERGYMEN MEET

Interesting Papers on Religious Co- operation Read at Meadville

ERIE, PENNSYLVANIA.—"Sympathetic Religious Education for our Brethren of other Communions," was the plea made by the Rev. George Sutton, curate of St. Clement's Church, Greenville, Pennsylvania, at the meeting of the Archdeaconry of Meadville, which had its autumn session in St. Mark's Church here on December 10 and 11. Mr. Sutton preached the archdeaconry sermon; and as he has lately been received into the Episcopal Church from the Presbyterian ministry he spoke with full knowledge and conviction. He stated there was a lamentable lack of knowledge of the Church and its teaching. It was supposed to be part of the Roman Church, or with a dividing line so tenuous no one could find it. If we would only get in closer touch with our Christian brethren in a sympathetic way they were ready to listen and to receive instruction. In the debate that this subject occasioned, the Rev. Bruce Reddish, rector of Trinity Church, New Castle, said: "Come into close contact with the ministerial association in whatever city you are. You will receive a lot of benefit. You will find the Lutherans especially in great sympathy with the Church's position; and all will give you a sympathetic hearing."

The archdeaconry opened with the report of Dr. Aigner, president of the Standing Committee, upon the condition of the missionary work of the diocese. He stated that every mission station except one was filled and conditions were encouraging.

Wednesday morning the Rev. Bruce Reddish, civilian chaplain at Camp Lee, gave a very interesting account of his experiences in camp. He found the work very necessary, and well worth while. The personal and hospital work were of the utmost importance. He stated there was a lack of sympathetic co-operation on the part of the Y; and he found great difficulty in obtaining a place to hold Communion service for the boys of the Church. One would infer from his remarks that some of our Episcopal chaplains are holding undenominational Communion services. His description of a prayer meeting which he was asked to hold with a Methodist brother and which began with the hymn called "Dixie," while reverent held the rapt attention of all present.

The morning session of the archdeaconry adjourned to the Hotel Lawrence where the delegates were guests of the Rotary Club and the Board of Commerce at luncheon given to Lieutenant Wierzbicki who spoke about his native France and the work of the Peace Conference.

In the afternoon the dean led a discussion on "Missions and the Apportionment." It was decided to send a letter to the senior warden of each parish; and to make every effort to pay the diocesan apportionment in full as a surprise to Bishop Israel.

SPECIAL CLERGY RATES

FOR RELIGIOUS WORKERS

The following information for the benefit of the clergy was given out from the United States Railroad Administration office, Washington, D. C., under date of December 9, regarding special rates for clergy and church and charity workers.

Beginning with January 1, 1919, a special rate of one-half the normal one-way passage fare will be granted to clergymen and other classes engaged exclusively in religious duties who may qualify under the rules as beneficiaries. The reductions will be accorded by means of clergy fare certificates, issued by bureaus maintained as follows:

Mr. Eben E. McLeod, Manager, Western Clergy Bureau, Transportation Building, Chicago, Illinois.

Each certificate will contain requests available for one hundred trips and will be good over all railroads under federal control, and also such non-federal control roads as may desire to participate. The certificates will be valid in any part of the country, regardless of where issued. A bureau fee of one dollar will be charged for each certificate. Blanks for use in filing applications will be obtainable from the nearest local ticket agent on or about December 15, or at the office of the Rev. Andrew D. Stowe, chairman, the Transportation Bureau of the Episcopal Church, 519 Oak Grove Street, Minneapolis, Minnesota.

The Church and the League of Nations—

I indicated some weeks ago the steps which were being taken to express the Christian view of the League of Nations. We have now a manifesto, signed by the archbishops, and by a strong array of Free Church leaders, the Roman Catholics at present standing out, though there is no reason to suspect their want of sympathy. The document takes it for granted that the principle of the league is now accepted both by political leaders and by public opinion. But "agreed measures are sometimes the hardest to pass." There will be counter-forces of weakness and selfishness and baseness. Men and women of good will must be on the watch; they must apply the "steam," the perseverance and the vigilance, needed for success. As Christians we must claim that war shall cease. "Love is the only constructive principle of common human life," and all forms of selfishness must be subjected to the strong and wholesome control of duty towards the general interest, and of common loyalty to the Kingdom of God. The Church is entrusted with spiritual weapons in whose efficacy its faith believes. Prayer, individual and corporate, will work great things.

Death of Dr. Percival—The former Bishop of Hereford has not lived long to enjoy his retirement at Oxford. After about a year there, he has passed away in his eighty-third year. He will be remembered rather as a conspicuously successful schoolmaster, rather than as a bishop. But, as I said at the time of his retirement, he was a man of great personal charm, which even his bitterest critics—and he was always surrounded by them—were ready to admit.

No Meeting of the Representative Council—

At the very moment when it was of the utmost consequence that the Representative Council should meet, so as to formulate the demand for Church reform to be presented to Parliament, we find ourselves in the absurd position that the council cannot legally be convoked. It will sound curious in American ears, but there is unfortunately a law that the dissolution of Parliament automatically dissolves the Church convocations. The Church has at the present moment no convocation members: it will have to elect them afresh after the new Parliament is constituted. And as the council consists of the Convocations of Canterbury and York, together with the Houses of Laymen, meeting as one body, it cannot be convoked. As the Challenge indignantly points out, the case for deliverance from bondage is made all the stronger by this state of affairs. The deliberative assemblies of the Church, no matter how urgent is the business which they may have to discuss, are at the mercy of the political situation. Few people doubt that the prime minister is right in calling for a General Election at this juncture, but why should it have the effect of gagging the Church?

The New Secretary of the S. P. G.—

To a bishop succeeds a bishop, and by all accounts an excellent one. It may be hazarded that Bishop Montgomery has had some hand in the appointment of his successor, for the Bishop of Madagascar (Dr. George Lanchester King), who succeeds him is one of his many friends. Dr. King is not very well known in England, for the best of reasons: he has stuck pretty constantly to his diocese for the last nineteen years. He is said to be a man of great statesmanship and tact, a scholar, and pre-eminently a man of prayer. He was ordained in 1884 to a northern curacy, and was known in those days as "one of Westcott's men." Bishop Westcott was at that time Bishop of Durham, and keenly advocating the cause of foreign missions. Mr. King was one of those who placed themselves unreservedly in the bishop's hands for service abroad, and so it happened that only five years from his ordination he was sent to Madagascar as bishop, where he has decidedly made good. He is unmarried, but his sister has always worked with him, and she is already well known at S. P. G. House. Altogether, S. P. G. may congratulate itself on finding one who will carry out the plans of the great man who has retired from its service.

Enthronement of the Bishop of Coventry—

On Thursday, November 21, Dr. Yeatman Biggs was enthroned at St. Michael's Church Coventry, which now becomes the cathedral of the new diocese. A chill prevented the bishop from celebrating the Holy Communion early, as he had intended to do. But he was well enough to proceed with the ceremony in the afternoon, which was attended by a large body of clergy. Coventry turned out in force, and great interest was manifested. The ceremony of enthronement was performed by the bishop's great friend, Dr. Greig, Archdeacon of Worcester.

Y. W. C. A. Serves 350,575 People

During the first ten months of 1918, the Young Women's Christian Association at headquarters in New York served 350,575 people. This is a larger number than the census of 1910 gives the population of the District of Columbia; one-half the population of Maine; nearly one-half the population of St. Louis, and twice that of Richmond.

Chimes for Christmas

EDGEWOOD, RHODE ISLAND.—A chime of bells made by the Menecly Company was presented to the Church of the Transfiguration on Christmas Eve by Mrs. Cleora N. Hall in memory of her parents, William Lankford Hopkins and Elizabeth Smith Hopkins.

Sally Stuart Memorial Opened

KYOTO, JAPAN.—Since Kyoto is "old Japan" it seemed very fitting that the religious service held for the opening of the Sally Stuart Memorial, the new dormitory of St. Agnes' School, should fall on October 31, a joyful day for all Japanese school girls, since it is the Emperor's birthday. The St. Agnes' girls met first in the old academic building, where they sang the national anthem and heard the imperial rescript read by the principal, the Rev. Mr. Hayakawa. Then they proceeded to the assembly hall of the new building, where a short opening service was conducted by the Japanese clergy of the city. The bishop is absent in Siberia, where he is serving with the Red Cross, so the Rev. P. A. Smith acted in his place.

PHILADELPHIA

Mr. Richmond Becomes a Baptist—Baptist ministers were amazed recently to learn that the Rev. George Chalmers Richmond, suspended from the ministry of the Episcopal Church for two years, is planning to enter the Baptist ministry. Mr. Richmond announced that he had been invited to preach in a Baptist pulpit in the city.

There is a problem involved in Mr. Richmond's renunciation of the ministry of the Episcopal Church. The canon states: "If a clergyman declare, in writing, his renunciation of the ministry of the Church (which Mr. Richmond has done), the bishop shall first pronounce sentence of suspension for six months, and if the renunciation be not withdrawn within that period, he shall then pronounce sentence of deposition."

Many are wondering whether a man suspended, as Mr. Richmond is until October 16 next, can be suspended higher or further in that same period. Several prominent Baptist ministers have been advising the man concerned in this unusual case: They say that he may become a minister in their body, inasmuch as the charges against him had no bearing on moral conduct.

Parish Remembered by Bequest—Calvary Episcopal Church in Conshohocken, the Rev. Mr. Moorhouse rector, has been left $10,000 by the will of Mrs. Mary H. Wood of that place. A square of ground for a public park (with a fund of $100,000 for maintenance) together with gifts to hospitals and homes in Conshohocken, Norristown and Philadelphia, give further proof of the public spirit and genuine charity of the late Mrs. Wood.

The Bishop Urges Every Member Canvass—In a recent letter to all the clergy, Bishop Rhinelander urges and approves the diocesan undertaking of the Every Member Canvass. He says: "I am more and more convinced that we have before us a very wonderful and unique opportunity for the extension of the Kingdom. I believe that all our people will answer the call to service if we can have faith enough and love enough to make the appeal to them in the right way. It is a very large undertaking, and it will need especially the spirit of co-operation and perseverance."

He suggests the giving of notice of the plan and purpose of the campaign, explaining it, and praying for it; keeping in touch with the movement through the executive secretary and committee; by enlisting the interest and help of all parish organizations; and expresses a desire for suggestions.

CHICAGO

Reviews Work of Churches—In the Chicago Tribune's review of the year 1918 the Rev. W. B. Norton has an interesting article on the work of the Church in Chicago during the past year. As in the lives of its individual members, so in the life of the Church, the war has been the most important factor; amount of service rendered to the country has been the one test by which individuals and groups of individuals have been judged. The Chicago churches have not been behind in war work. They have given chaplains and lay war workers in large numbers. They have afforded centers for Red Cross work.

They have aided preeminently in interpreting the issues of the war in terms of righteousness and justice. As an item of special interest Mr. Norton notes the Red Cross work at St. James's Church, where a large number of men have given their evenings to the making of boxes in the basement of the church for the shipping of Red Cross supplies.

The effect of the war on the state of the churches in general, Mr. Norton says, "has been the postponement of building enterprises, a decrease in Sunday School attendance, and a light increase in church membership. On the other hand, the spirit of giving induced by the many patriotic drives has resulted in an increase of hundreds of thousands of dollars to the benevolent offerings of the churches. The widespread reach of the influenza epidemic has had a demoralizing effect on the churches."

Holy Cross—Immanuel Mission—The Church Visitor of the Holy Cross-Immanuel Mission announces that the Rev. Walter B. Reed will assume charge on January 1. For some years the two missions, Holy Cross and Immanuel, have been working near each other on the South Side. The congregation of Immanuel was Swedish, and the service was held in the Swedish language. Both missions have been without a priest in charge for some time. This spring they combined planning to hold their services in English in the building belonging to Immanuel Mission. Mr. Edwin V. Griswold has been lay reader in charge since the combination, and the mission has grown under his guidance. The Rev. Mr. Reed has been in charge of St. Ann's Mission, Morrison, Illinois, for something over a year past. The people of Holy Cross-Immanuel are looking forward to his coming, and promise him enthusiastic support.

Girls' Friendly Society Opens New Building—The Chicago Lodge of the Girls' Friendly Society formally opened their new building at 54 Scott Street with a reception on the afternoon of New Year's Day. Just three years ago they opened a dormitory for young women on Ohio Street, with accommodations for thirty-five. The venture proved so successful that last May the directors felt justified in increasing the scope of the work, and it was moved into the new building, which has accommodations for sixty. The house is already full, and there is a long waiting list. Accommodations may be had as low as four and a half dollars a week, which includes two meals on week days and three on Sundays. There is a large assembly room on the ground floor, where service is held every Sunday morning. It is near Lincoln Park, just one block from the Lake Shore Drive, and within easy walking distance of the loop.

The Providence Day Nursery—On Friday, December 27, the Happiness Players, the older children of the House of Happiness, which is connected with the Providence Day Nursery here, gave a nativity play to which the Sunday School children of the city and the friends of the settlement were invited. The Providence Day Nursery is situated near the Stock Yards, and ministers to some three hundred children who live in its neighborhood. The nursery itself cares for sixty babies every day. In the House of Happiness, which is a social center for the older children, there are clubs and social activities of many kinds. There are two resident workers and over twenty others who come in for all or part of the time. The money with which the House of Happiness was built was given by the infant class of St. Paul's Church, of which Mrs. W. H. Benton is superintendent. The building is a monument to her untiring energy and devotion.

Memorial Service at St. Paul's Church—On Sunday, December 29, a memorial service was held at St. Paul's Church for Lieutenant Thomson Burr, an aviator, who was killed while flying in France. Judge Landis and the Rev. H. W. Prince, of the Church of the Epiphany, made addresses.

CHARLES L. STREET.

COLORADO

Notes—The Diocesan Council will be held on Wednesday, February 5, owing to the adoption of the new fiscal year. Parishes and missions are requested to meet two-thirds of all apportionments before that time.

When a prominent layman died towards the end of the past year it was found that St. John's Cathedral had benefited by a bequest of $10,000 and St. Luke's Hospital, Denver, by $2,000. The layman was Joseph Thatcher, president of the Denver National Bank and one of the directors of the bank. It was found that a similar bequest of one-half the same amount was made by E. A. Peters, who died about the same time.

Trinity Memorial Church, Denver, was changed into a mission on January 1, under the name of St. Andrew's. It was the decision of the diocese that the church situated on Glenar Place was better adapted to mission and settlement work than to work as an independent and struggling parish.

PITTSBURGH

Missionary in China—The Rev. John Gillespie Magee, a missionary of Nanking, China, has been spending some time in Pittsburgh on his first vacation home. He is more particularly interested in developing a work especially for young men employed in the new business section of Nanking. Mr. Magee hopes to provide there a means for the conservation of young manhood, much of which is the product of our church, schools and colleges in China, by furnishing a centre to which they can not only go themselves, but from which they can help other young men. About $25,000 is needed for the schools, chapel and hostel. One generous Pittsburgher has offered $10,000 of this amount, providing Mr. Magee raises the balance. About $20,000 of the whole sum needed is in sight, all subscribed in this diocese. Mr. Magee was raised in Calvary parish, Pittsburgh, and his missionary stipend is furnished by its congregation.

Bequests Received—St. Luke's Church, Georgetown, by the will of the late Miss Anna B. Ditmore, one of the oldest residents of the town, has received two bequests, one the sum of $6,000 a trust fund, the income of which is to be used for the payment of the rector's salary; and the other a trust fund to be called "The Anna B. Ditmore Expense Fund." This latter is the residue of the estate after the payment of a bequest of $2,000 to a relative. St. Luke's Church is one of the oldest parishes in the western part of Pennsylvania.

Mortgage Paid—During the Advent season an extraordinary effort was made in St. Stephen's parish, Sewickley, under the leadership of the Rev. Dr. McIlvaine, to raise a sum sufficient to liquidate the mortgaged indebtedness upon the church, which amounted to $28,000. When the offering was made on Christmas Day everyone was delighted to find that the sum named had been oversubscribed by almost $8,000. With part of the surplus it is hoped that some memorial will be erected for the soldiers and sailors who have gone out from the parish to serve their country.

Annual Meeting—The annual meeting of the Diocesan Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary, which was to have taken place in November, will be held on January 21, in Calvary Church, Pittsburgh. Bishop Thomas of Wyoming will be the chief speaker of the occasion. JANE CUDDY.

TEXAS

Candle Light Service at St. Paul's, Marfa—The Christmas festivities at St. Paul's, Marfa, began on Christmas Eve at 5:30 p. m. with a "Candle Light" service in the church. This service was designed for the children of Marfa and the church was crowded to the doors. The only illumination was candle light, and this, with the masses of Christmas trees and holly festoons and red carnations, gave the little church a very Christmas appearance. The Rev. Clarence S. McClellan, the rector, told the children the "Story of the First Christmas Tree," and conducted the services, which consisted of the service for Christmas Day and many of the old Christmas carols.

At midnight there was a celebration of the Holy Communion. Again the church was illuminated by candles and again the church was crowded. There followed a program of ancient English Christmas carols sung by the choir and many of the officers and soldiers from Camp Marfa. Christmas cards reproducing the old Italian masters' conception of the Nativity were given to all present and also a candle, which each person lighted from one of the altar candles, and carried into the night. As the congregation left the church on Christmas morning shortly after midnight Sergeant Frank Singals played "Silent Night" on the cornet from the church tower.

On Sunday following Christmas there was a patriotic service for the soldiers from Camp Marfa and to each man, through the generosity of the Church Periodical Club of New York City, a Christmas gift was presented.

MICHIGAN CITY

Successful Canvass—A very successful Every-Member Canvass was carried out recently in St. Paul's Parish, La Porte, (the Rev. Dr. F. J. Barwell-Walker, rector), by 22 workers. The same evening during the service the rector announced pledges totalling more than double those for 1918, and more have come in since.

The Christmas services were well attended, and the communions made fully up to normal, while the offering was about 50 per cent better than last year. At Vespers on the Sunday after Christmas Mr. Walker made the interesting announcement that if all pledges were paid during 1919, and the various other agencies maintained the usual level, the parish would be able to pay all its expenses for the year, the amount now deficient on Diocesan Missions, and take up every note at the bank (which had accumulated before his time), while the year would finish with a comfortable balance in hand although no special effort to raise money in other ways be made.

RHODE ISLAND

Tower Dedicated—On Sunday morning, December 29, the new tower of the Church of the Transfiguration, Edgewood, was formally dedicated by the rector, the Rev. Levi B. Edwards. The tower contains a set of chime bells, ten in number, the largest weighing 3,000 pounds. They are from the Mencey Bell Company, and rank among the largest sets in the diocese. The tower and the chimes are the gift of Mrs. Clara N. Hall as a thankoffering for the completion of twenty-five years as a communicant of the parish.

Rood Screen Dedicated—A rood screen was dedicated at St. Peter's Church, Manton, on Sunday morning, December 22, by the rector, the Rev. Alva E. Carpenter. It is of carved wood, and is the gift of Mr. Alfred B. Peirec, in memory of Mr. Arnold Watson Essex, a vestryman of the parish. It was designed by Mr. Wallis E. Howe, of Clarke and Howe, and the work was executed by Irving and Casson.

A Christmas Eve Reception—Christmas Eve was observed at St. Paul's Church, Pawtucket, by a reception through the evening under the auspices of the Men's Club and the Men's Bible Class. At 11 p. m. an impressive musical service was held in the church, preceded by an organ recital. And at midnight there was a choral celebration of the Holy Communion.

Silent Mission Services—The Silent Mission for the Deaf is maintaining two services each month at Grace Church, Providence, under the care of the Rev. G. H. Hefflon. On Sunday, December 29, after the Holy Communion, there was a Christmas festival in the parish house, with distribution of gifts. JOSEPH M. HOBBS.

HARRISBURG

Ordinations—On Friday, December 20, Bishop Darlington ordained to the diaconate Mr. John H. Schwacke, headmaster of Yeates School, Lancaster. He was presented for ordination by the Rev. George I. Browne, rector of St. John's, Lancaster. At the same time he ordained to the priesthood two deacons: Rev. Joseph Herbert Bond and Rev. Clayton E. B. Robinson. They were presented by the Rev. H. B. Pulsifer, rector of St. John's, Marietta. The sermon was by the Rev. John Frederick Virgin, of the staff of St. Paul's, Harrisburg. The Rev. Mr. Schwacke will remain in charge of Yeates School, the Rev. Mr. Bond will remain in charge of St. Andrew's, Tioga, St. John's, Lawrenceville, St. John's, Mansfield, and St. Joseph's, Mt. Pleasant.

Clerical Changes—The Rev. James Hart Lamb has accepted a call to Christ Church, Coudersport, and will take up his work there in the near future.

The Rev. Frederick J. Compson, of the Diocese of Illinois, has accepted a call to St. John's, Huntingdon.

On account of ill health the Rev. George O. Eskins has resigned St. Paul's, Mannheim, and Hope Church, Mt. Hope.

The Rev. Charles Harris, Jr., has resigned St. John's, South Williamsport, and accepted an appointment to Grace Church, Riverside; St. Mark's, Northumberland, and All Saints, Selins Grove.

The Rev. Joseph Hinks has resigned

Trinity Church, Renovo, and accepted a call to the Diocese of Bethlehem.

A New Rectory—A rectory has just been completed at Riverside. It is of wood with concrete foundations. It is not only completed as a building, but it has been completely furnished with furnace, range, carpets, pictures, beds and bedding, tables, chairs, china and glassware, coal in the cellar, all ready for the occupancy of the newly appointed minister who will be in residence in a very short time. The rectory is a memorial of Mr. Lemuel E. Wells. LE ROY F. BAKER.

MINNESOTA

Annual Meeting of Church Club—The Epiphany-tide and annual meeting of the Church Club will be held in Minneapolis on Thursday evening, January 9, 1919, at Donaldson's Tea Rooms. The Rt. Rev. Dr. James White, Bishop of Kansas, and the Rev. G. G. Bennett, rector of St. Paul's Church, Minneapolis, addressed the meeting.

Dedication of Window—A most interesting service was held in St. Mark's Church, Minneapolis, on Sunday morning, December 22, in connection with the dedication of the great west window, the gift of the late Mr. and Mrs. George H. Christian. The window was designed and executed by Mr. Charles J. Conic of Boston. The description for the window from his own pen was given on the program used at the service.

Ban Lifted—After many weeks the ban imposed upon day schools and Sunday Schools in Minneapolis as the result of the influenza has been lifted. The health authorities prohibited all Sunday School festivals and gatherings of children. At St. Mark's Church, Minneapolis, this difficulty was overcome by holding their festival out of doors. A large spruce tree on the lawn of the church was decorated with electric lights and Christmas ornaments and around this the children gathered and sang their Christmas carols.

Ordination—On Saturday, December 21, Bishop McElwain advanced to the priesthood the Rev. Charles W. Baxter, the Rev. Edward F. Cray and the Rev. Iam Robertson. The Litany was read by the Rev. John W. Bagot and the sermon was preached by the bishop.

Indebtedness Cleared—At the seven o'clock service at St. Luke's Church, Minneapolis, on Christmas Day the men of the church placed in the offering as a Christmas gift to the church pledge cards representing a sum of money more than sufficient to liquidate all the indebtedness of the parish. The whole campaign for the pledges was organized and carried out in less than seven days.

Advisory Board—To assist and advise in the work of church extension in the Twin Cities, Bishop McElwain now has an advisory board consisting of representatives from all the parishes. The board has been organized and is already taking an active part in the work of church extension.

GEORGIA

Rector Leaves—The Rev. William Johnson, rector of the Good Shepherd, Augusta, closed his work there on the last Sunday of the year, and on January 5 enters upon the rectorship of St. Mark's Church at Brunswick in this diocese. Mr. Johnson has been ten years at the Church of the Good Shepherd, having done a splendid work, and leaves with the sincerest regret and good wishes of his congregation.

The Rev. H. H. Barber, of New York, will temporarily take the work at the church of the Good Shepherd during the winter months, as the vestry are not yet ready to call a rector.

Takes On Another Mission—The Rev. W. W. Webster, of Hawkinsville, has had added to his field the prosperous mission of St. Matthew's, Fitzgerald, which is vacant due to the removal of Rev. J. W. Bleker.

Ban on Services Removed—Practically every church in the Diocese of Georgia was closed from six to eight weeks during the influenza epidemic, the time varying in the different places. The quarantine has been entirely removed in Augusta, but in Savannah there is still a limit as to the number and length of services.

The Bishop's Visitations—Bishop Reese has been spending some time making visitations in South Carolina for confirmations for Bishop Guerry, who is still in France, and will not return until some time in Lent.
G. SHERWOOD WHITNEY.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

An Interesting Experience—The Rev. Wm. Porter Niles, rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Nashua, had an interesting experience on Christmas Eve. By special invitation he attended Vespers at the Greek Church of the Annunciation, where the new bishop of the Greeks in America, the Rt. Rev. Alexander Rodostolon, formerly Archbishop of Xanthi, was making his first official visitation. Mr. Niles was conducted through the throng of Greek men to the pulpit where the bishop was singing the service and was given a place beside the bishop, later being a guest at the bishop's right hand at a banquet at the home of a Greek layman. The same night by special invitation Mr. Niles was present at the midnight mass at the chapel of St. Joseph's Orphanage and was later invited to address the children in the hall, where they sung their carols. With his own service Christmas morning the rector had taken part in services of the Roman, Greek and Anglican communions within twelve hours.

NEW MEXICO

Monthly Service in All Missions—The Rev. Clarence S. McClellan, Jr., B.D., rector of St. Paul's at Marfa, and head of the Episcopal Missionary District of the "Big Bend," has established in this large district of 32,000 square miles a monthly service at all the mission stations, of which there are ten, and weekly services at Alpine and Marfa. At the latter place there is the Church Headquarters for the District and three services are held by Rev. Mr. McClellan each Sunday.

VERMONT

Plans for Bishop's Anniversary—Plans are being matured for the observance of the twenty-fifth anniversary of Bishop Hall's consecration which took place on the Feast of the Purification, February 2, 1894. The rector of each parish in the diocese will be asked to mark the day in his own parish, the Feast of the Purification falling on Sunday, by an address making special mention of the bishop's signal ministries in the diocese during this period. At the annual convention in Burlington on February 5 a special anniversary service will be held.

The Rev. Mr. Randall Dead—The Rev. Edward Herbert Randall, a retired priest of the diocese, died at Poultney, Vt., on Saturday, December 28, 1918. The greater part of Mr. Randall's ministry was spent in Poultney, where he was rector for thirty-five years, from 1869 to 1904. The earlier years of his ministry were spent in Randolph, Vermont, and Pawtucket, Rhode Island. The burial took place at St. John's Church, Poultney. Bishop Coadjutor Bliss officiated, assisted by the Rev. Joseph Reynolds of Rutland, the Rev. R. W. Magoun, of Bellows Falls, and the Rev. Benjamin L. Ramsay, of Granville, N. Y.
G. R. BRUSH.

WESTERN NEBRASKA

Christmas at St. Mark's Hastings—Owing to the ban being placed on children's gatherings the Church School of St. Mark's Pro-Cathedral was unable to have its annual Christmas entertainment. However, the teachers purchased gifts and had them distributed to the various homes.

The annual midnight Christmas service was held as usual. After being under the ban for weeks the people were hungry for the service and a large congregation gathered at the late hour to make their Christmas Communion. Owing to the illness of Bishop Beecher, Dean Tyner gave the Christmas message.

Influenza Prevents Services—The influenza has been very severe in Grand Island and only two services have been held since September. However, as the law allowed 12 people to congregate the rector solved the problem somewhat by celebrating Holy Communion at 8 a. m., and then remaining in the church until 12 o'clock to give the Sacrament to those communicants who might come.
C. R. TYNER.

NEWARK

Dr. Hadley in His Former Pulpit—The Rev. Dr. Henry H. Hadley, rector of St. Paul's Church, Syracuse, occupied his former pulpit last Sunday morning in St. Paul's Church, Newark. The parish is without a rector, the Rev. Roland C. Ormsbee, Dr. Hadley's successor, having resigned last month in order to serve the country as an army chaplain.

Over 3,500 Names in Service Record—The war service record of the diocese, prepared by John G. Crawford of Montclair in the form of a very large, loose leaf book, covered with khaki, contains the names of more than 3,500 men and women who have entered the service of the country. The names are entered by parishes and are followed by data concerning the place and time of service of every person represented and by other items of interest. On Christmas Eve Mr. Crawford wrote in the one hundredth name in the list of those who have lost their lives in the country's cause.

Union Hill Learns of Former Rector's Death—Word reached Union Hill last week that the Rev. Gilbert M. Foxwell, formerly rector of Grace Church, had died from pneumonia December 22 in Camden, Maine. Mr. Foxwell was forty-four years old. He is well remembered by his Union Hill parishioners whom he served for several years, beginning in 1903, six years after his graduation from the General Theological Seminary. Mr. Foxwell went from the Newark Diocese to Gethsemane Church, Minnesota, and from there to his last charge in Camden. His health had been failing for several years.
GRACE MCKINNEY.

IOWA

The Christmas Season—The Christmas festival was observed in the diocese this year with special happiness. People seemed to feel that out of the world's suffering joy has come with renewed meaning. Except in cases, therefore, where the war or illness had brought local sadness, there was an unusual note of thanksgiving. Choral services were quite numerous; a number of parish churches had midnight communions, and almost every Sunday school observed the great festival in a special way.

In Des Moines St. Paul's choir gave Horatio Parker's "Holy Child" the evening of the Fourth Sunday in Advent; and on Christmas Eve sang carols in various parts of the city. St. Luke's had a service and festival for the children Christmas Eve; a midnight Communion, which began in fact an hour before midnight, and two Communions on Christmas Day. St. Mark's had an especially well attended festival for the Sunday School. The weather was ideal; snow covered the ground, the air was clear and not too cold.

New Rectory Opened—On December 13 an open day was held at the new rectory of St. James' Parish, Independence. Refreshments were in charge of the Daughters of the King both afternoon and evening. The whole parish is rejoicing in their new acquisition.

The Sunday School Festival was held on Christmas Eve and in spite of the severe snowstorm the commodious parish house was filled with a very merry crowd of parents and children. The Christmas Day services had a larger attendance and more Communions made than for some years past.

New Church at Work—St. John's Parish, Cedar Rapids, a new organization of which Dr. A. L. Murray is the first rector, has accepted plans for a new building which will be a community building with a large church auditorium, which will be used for a few years until a church will be built. The new parish has inaugurated a Woman's Bible Lecture Course which the rector conducts every Wednesday at 3 p.m. The rector also conducts a Children's Story Hour the same days at 4 p.m., when Bible stories are told. Several denominations are represented in the attendance. The School of Religious Education of the parish has adopted and paid in full for the care of five French orphans and made an Advent offering for the children of Bible lands.

LONG ISLAND

Community Christmas Service—Members of the Baptist, Methodist, Presbyterian and Congregational churches in the neighborhood of St. Paul's Church, Brooklyn, with their Sunday Schools, joined in one service on Christmas afternoon, on the invitation of the rector of St. Paul's.

Special music was arranged, which included Evensong and Christmas carols, sung about the crèche.

The crib was a genuine one from Brittany, and under its thatched roof stand quaint little figures, carved by Lang, representing those at the manger at the birth of our Lord.

Christmas Eve at St. Ann's—Christmas Eve at St. Ann's was beautifully kept, with a celebration of the Holy Communion at half-past eleven preceded by a procession of lights, with the singing of Christmas hymns and carols.

The rector, in an open Christmas letter, urges his parishioners to let their Christmas offering be the paying off of their missionary apportionment and diocesan obligations.

"Why not," he asks, "give our Heavenly Father a Christmas present of a credit balance instead of a debit at the end of the year?"

To do this he suggests the giving of Liberty Bonds, and says: "I cannot well preach without practising and intend to place one of them on the altar on Christmas Day, simply as a trifling outward expression of my own thankfulness for victory and peace."

Patriotic Service at Holy Trinity—At the Church of the Holy Trinity, Brooklyn, a patriotic service was held on the Sunday night before Christmas to assist the Christmas Roll Call of the Red Cross. Sergt. Alex Coubrough of the Anzacs, and the rector were the speakers.

Children's Festival—At the Church of the Incarnation, Brooklyn, the children held a festival on Christmas morning, at which they presented their offering for the Brooklyn archdeaconry.

The Men's Club of this church held an entertainment the Friday before Christmas, the price of admission being a toy; enough were collected to provide one mission school, which otherwise would have had nothing, and to send out in several other directions as the needs were presented.

Junior Auxiliary—The Juniors of St. John's Church, Flushing, shipped on Monday, December 16, a Christmas box to the Colored Orphan Asylum, of Folkville, Virginia.

Under their auspices Miss Ruth Kent, missionary in China, will lecture on the Chinese missions. The lecture will be illustrated by stereopticon views, and the proceeds be given to the Chinese Hospital.

Within the year the children of this Sunday School have given over $200 for the extension of the work of Christ's Kingdom, a notable increase, as compared with their work of former years.

MARY E. SMYTH.

BOSTON

The Twenty Weeks—Copies of the second booklet of the series and entitled "A Call to Service" by the Bishop have been distributed to all the parishes of the diocese. This is the sixth week and the reading and prayers cover the period from Epiphany to Quinquagesima. In a letter to the clergy, wardens and members of the special committees the bishop asks that advantage be taken of the annual parish meeting to bring the people together in a really social and democratic manner. The bishop writes:

"First, as to the parish business meeting. The parish is, or should be, a democracy. No democracy is healthy wherein a little group of people meet and re-elect themselves. May it not be possible to have a really representative parish meeting of those who have the right to vote?"

"It will be a business meeting. Hence it should be prompt. Reports should be well prepared and made clearly, the treasurer's report, properly audited, should be presented, and it ought to be printed and distributed to the people. We do not appreciate enough that the strong support of the parish is dependent upon the knowledge which the people have of the details, financial and otherwise, of the parish life.

"Again, if feasible, all societies might meet and report upon their work and the treasurers present their accounts properly audited. By amendment to the Canon last spring, treasurers of societies are to present their reports to the parish treasurer, who shall see that their reports are audited as the parish treasurer's report is.

"Then again, it is an opportunity for bringing socially all the people of the parish together. Experience shows that a meeting, partly business and partly social, is likely to be a failure—they want to be kept separate. There might be a prompt business meeting, say for one hour, and then a social meeting, or they could be on separate evenings. How about a New Year's reception to the rector, his wife and the parish officers?"

"The point that I want to make, however, is that the people of our parishes are entitled to a full knowledge of what is going on in the parish, and that the officers will be wise to do everything in their power to inform the people as to the financial as well as other problems and details of the parish. The dominant note of our parish meetings should be not that—We need more money, how shall we get it?—that drives people away; but if we all turn to, we have got plenty of work and opportunity. Let us see how we can make the best use of them in the coming year."

The bishop suggests that the clergy preach on the League of Nations as an appropriate subject for the opening Sunday of the New Year.

Watch Night Services—The usual watch night services were held at the Cathedral, with a sermon by the dean, at the Church of the Advent with a sermon by Dr. Van Allen and at Trinity with a sermon by Dr. Mann. All the churches seemed to be crowded to capacity and there seemed more of the note of devotion than usual. On Boston Common there was a huge gathering under the auspices of the War Camp Community Service. At the passing of the Old Year there was a moment for prayer and then the singing of familiar hymns.

NEW YORK

Meeting of the Clergy—A conference of the clergy was called by the bishop of the diocese on the evening of January 2 to discuss what the Church should do to welcome the returning soldier. Bishop Greer is at present in St. Luke's Hospital, and in his absence Bishop Burch, who was introduced by Dean Robbins, presided at the conference. Dr. Stires was the first speaker. He recommended that parish service clubs be formed for the returning soldier in order to utilize the spirit and discipline achieved by the war. He thought the men would welcome such a club and the opportunity it would afford to talk over with each other and with sympathetic friends experiences "over there."

Dr. Thayer, the headmaster of St. Mark's Church, Southborough, emphasized the need of the nation's using the discipline of loyalty the soldier had learned during the war. In a picturesque way he described what the Bishop of Massachusetts was doing in the way of preparedness for the returning soldier. The Twenty Weeks is the most exacting demand ever yet made by a bishop upon his diocese. Every Churchman is asked to do three things: say one prayer a day besides the Lord's Prayer, read eight verses of the Bible, and attend church once on Sunday. Dr. Thayer said, "Bishop Lawrence is going at this program as though he were managing a Pension Fund campaign."

The last speaker was Dr. Percy Silver, rector of the Church of the Incarnation and for many years chaplain at West Point.

Bishop Courtney's Funeral—It would be hard to find anyone who was more universally beloved than the late Bishop Courtney, whose death in New York on December 29 was reported in last week's CHURCHMAN. His funeral was held in St. James' Church on New Year's afternoon. A great number of the clergy of the diocese, including the rectors of nearly all the large parishes, marched with the choir in their vestments. Bishops Lines, Stearly and Thomas were also present, as were a number of ministers of other communions, as well as representatives of the Church Club, the British Schools and Universities Club, the Sons of St. George, the Loyal Legion, the Seamen's Church Institute, the Churchmen's Association and many other societies and boards of which Bishop Courtney was a member. The service was read by Bishop Burch, Dr. Crowder, Dean Robbins and the Rev. James V. Chalmers. The interment was in Trinity Cemetery.

In speaking of Bishop Courtney, a layman of the diocese said: "He died in the midst of his work as he wished. There never was a more faithful member of any association than he. He seldom missed a meeting of a board or committee of which he was a member. He always raised the tone of a meeting to his own high level. He was very decided in his opinions, yet always a delightful person with whom to work. Over all that he did he shed the radiance of his beautiful Christian spirit."

Death of Mr. C. A. Griscom—The Chapel of the Comforter has lost from pneumonia one of its strongest supporters and most faithful laymen, Mr. Clement Acton Griscom, who died in New York on December 30. Mr. Griscom was born in 1868 of a family distinguished in American history. His father was the founder of the Red Star and American Lines and first president of the International Mercantile Marine Company.

Mr. Griscom was a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania. At the time of his death he was connected with a good many business enterprises in New York. Intimately acquainted with European conditions from the outbreak of the war in 1914, Mr. Griscom urged the necessity of America's entrance into the conflict. He was active in all civic improvements. He was a member of the City Mission Society, treasurer of the Chapel of the Comforter, and one of the founders and chief supporters of the Open Door Mission on Hunson Street, which has helped many thousand men to repair the wrecks of life.

One of Mr. Griscom's sons, Lieutenant Ludlow Griscom, is serving in France, and the other, the Rev. Acton Griscom, ordained to the priesthood during the December Ember Days, is on the staff of the Chapel of the Comforter.

Crucifix Stolen—A highly prized crucifix belonging to the Church of St. Mary the Virgin was stolen from the high altar last week. It was finally found by detectives in a second-hand art store on Sixth Avenue. The dealer had acquired it for $2, although its real value was about $1,000.

Dr. Stires' Anniversary—Dr. and Mrs. Stires are celebrating their twenty-fifth wedding anniversary. They will have two "at homes," one for the members of the parish and one for the clergy of the diocese and their wives. Both will be held at the rectory. Dr. Stires married Miss Sarah Hardwick in Augusta, Georgia, on January 11, 1894. They have four sons, the eldest of whom served in the ambulance service in France until he was sent home wounded. He then entered the army and was at Camp Taylor when the armistice was signed.

Welcome, Soldiers!

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

May I be allowed to say that St. Stephen's College will gladly welcome back all its students who have been in war service on the same scholarship terms as before? Also, that the college will be glad to receive returning soldiers who desire to commence or resume academic studies.

Change of Name

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

The war has given us a new nation. A nobler conception of America has come to quicken our social, æsthetic and religious life. The animosities of 1776 and of the 60's have been replaced by a sense of racial solidarity.

Our Church should be instinct with the new national spirit. One hundred and forty-three years ago it was the Church of England. Then the colonies became states and the colonial Church was reorganized in rather untoward circumstances. America, as we know it today, was undreamed of. The dispirited clergymen and laymen who sought to bring order out of confusion in the Convention of 1789 thought the words Protestant Episcopal would define the Church's position. The name was adopted. So the Church of England for the first time in history, was left in the daughter Church without a suggestion of national quality. We may be a minority Church, perhaps considering some things we have done, we deserve to be; but we are false to our spiritual mother and very unworthy Americans, if we go on forever with a sectarian label, not formally nor nominally recognizing the land where our altars are reared.

Dropping the words Protestant Episcopal from the title page of the Prayer Book and elsewhere, leaves the name "The Church in the United States of America." The difference in position between the mother Church and the daughter Church is aptly shown by the substitution of the preposition "in" for the preposition "of." The objections of indefiniteness, inconvenience and incompleteness would not be realized in practice since the old name would be retained in legal documents. This grandly simple name, "The Church in America" would witness to our descent, our national spirit and our belief in the oneness of the Church.

God's Will for Sick Children

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

I have just received the following letter from a fellow student I have not seen since seminary days, who is the rector of a church in the Middle West. It contains a personal testimony which calls for a wide circulation:

Your name greeted me in two "ad" pages of the Spirit of Missions today, and I feel moved to send you a line of affectionate greeting, and to tell you that I am wholly a convert to the cause you are forwarding to free us from the dreadful taint of Calvinism. Last week we nearly lost our little five-year-old girl by pneumonia. Our prayers during the critical time were wholly framed by complete faith that it was not God's will that she should die, but live, and all He could bring to bear was working to save her. If she had gone, I am sure there would not have been a shred in our minds of the idea that it was His will, but rather the opposite. All this new (and old) point of view seems to me to necessitate a revision of what we all have been accustomed to call the Almighty of God. As I see it now, it is rather in posse than in actu. His Kingdom has not yet come, completely, though His victories are many and increasing, and will increase, probably, just in proportion as we recognize the real status and give ourselves more wholly to advance His cause. I say these things boldly now to the people in anxiety and in grief.

The writer places his finger on the cause that has worked such harm in giving us distorted teachings with regard to sickness and God's will.

It is a form of Calvinism and is not based on Christ's teachings, but upon Hebraic theology. It is not true Christianity. Prayers for the sick cannot avail until the mind is clear upon the subject of God's will. Then intelligent prayer may be offered, supported by a real faith. When every clergyman wrenches himself from the Hebrew theology with which the Church has overloaded her prayers and teachings, it will be easy for him to glimpse the truth expressed by the writer of the above letter. When that happens the ministry of healing as Christ practised it will be restored to the people.

Health

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

Your issue of December 14 contains a letter from a Boston clergyman discussing a "mutilated communion," in which he speaks of Christian Science as an exaggeration in "its exaltation of health to the highest level." Please permit me to point out that Christian Science instead of exalting physical health rather regards it as the natural result of right thinking, that is to say, the recognition of the truth about God and man. Therefore physical health becomes rather an incident to what may be termed spiritual well-being, the understanding of man's true state as the child of God which constitutes per se that knowing which Jesus so emphatically declared "shall make you free." Christian Science holds, however, that a necessary and intrinsic phase of discipleship of Christ Jesus is healing the sick, the restoration of physical harmony as a result of spiritual regeneration. Mrs. Eddy states the case with perfect clarity on p. 150 of Science and Health, "the mission of Christian Science now, as in the time of its earlier demonstrations, is not primarily one of physical healing. Now, as then, signs and wonders are wrought in the metaphysical healing of physical disease; but these signs are only to demonstrate its divine origin—to attest the reality of the higher mission of the Christ-power to take away the sins of the world."

The Lectionary

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

I read with much interest your recent editorial in regard to the new lectionary, urging caution against undue haste.

Your advice is exceedingly wise. Although the lectionary has been before the Church for some time, it is clearly far from satisfactory. This is evidenced by the many separate lectionaries that have been put forth in recent years, one by the Board of Religious Education of the Diocese of California, quite recently a brief lectionary by the Woman's Auxiliary to be used in connection with the Advent Call, and now the Church is getting an admirable lectionary put forth by the Diocese of Massachusetts. These lectionaries are all tentative, but indicate the widespread need in the Church for a plan of Bible readings especially adapted for the development of the spiritual life. May it not be that the plan on which the new lectionary is devised is not along the right lines, but that there is a crying need for something of a different character?

Of course it may be said that the Church lectionary is for the purpose of public worship, and not for private devotion. Nevertheless, the mere fact that we have an office of Family Prayer in the Prayer Book, indicates the expectation of the Church to minister to the various needs of her children. Why should not the Prayer Book contain the sort of lectionary that will give our people the largest degree of spiritual help?

On Intinction

I intrude on your space to say how much I value Dr. Slattery's article on the "Administration of the Chalice," in THE CHURCHMAN of December 14, a subject on which many have been concerned in the recent epidemic. Whether the decision of the Roman Catholic Church as a matter of expediency were one to be followed in other churches is a question of wide reach, but Dr. Slattery's suggestion of a way of declining the cup in individual cases, I think represents the action of the Church long before the Council of Constance in 1415.

In the Summa Theologica, Aquinas says (Q. 74, Art. 1):

If there be fear of harm, it is not necessary for all who take Christ's Body to partake also of his Blood, as will be stated later.

The later text, after declaring that the priest must consecrate both elements, then goes on (Q. 80, Art. 12):

But on the part of the recipient the greatest reverence and caution are called for, lest anything happen which is unworthy of so great a mystery. Now this could especially happen in receiving the Blood, for if incautiously handled it might easily be spilt. And because the multitude of the Christian people increased, in which there are old, young, and children, some of whom have not enough discretion to observe due caution in using this Sacrament, on that account it is a prudent custom in some churches for the Blood not to be offered to the reception of the people, but to be received by the priest alone.

If, however, avoidance of the risk of infection is to depend solely on the scruple of the communicant, there are the supposable cases of such partakers, quite unaware of their own condition, imperilling others. Here comes in Dr. Slattery's wise suggestion of counsel and instruction to communicants. The older theologians maintained that this sacred mystery may be partaken through the Bread alone, as the Bread, signifying Christ's Body, includes also the Blood. If, therefore, for the reasons you mention, the communicant abstains from the cup, his observance really does not fail in real obedience to the eucharistic rite. If this were distinctly recognized it would relieve many perhaps now burdened with scruples as to the common cup.

The New Books

From Australia

THE SILVER SHADOW, THE GOLDEN MILESTONE, THE LUGGAGE OF LIFE. The Abingdon Press, New York. 1918. $1.25 each.

Mr. Borcham lives in Australia; he also lives among life's supremacies and greets the world with a high hearted goodwill. His sympathy is contagious. His humor flashes like the morning light. He is enough of a realist to grasp a transcript of life and enough of an idealist to see the universal truth enshrined. Like Stevenson he loves a paradox. He has the insight of A. C. Benson but not Benson's obviousness. He is an artist in exposition and knows how to preach without a preachment. He is philosophical but not in the same sense that L. P. Jacks is philosophical in his clever essays.

Borcham conveys his thoughts more by imagery and suggestion than by logic and argument. Oliver Wendell Holmes would have enjoyed greatly Borcham's "Hat-pins and Button-hooks" though the determined Wendall Phillips might have thought Borcham's "Back Moves" inculcated bad strategy—but Mr. Borcham does not try to interpret life from one angle or by one rule.

We commend to Dr. Van Dyke the essay on "Our Trysting Places." It is "after his own heart," and we feel sure that Dr. Crothers will greatly relish "Sermons and Sandwiches." We are confident that G. H. Morrison, who wrote "The Return of the Angels," will pardon us when we say that Borcham's "When My Ship Comes Home" reminds us of the Welling-ton Church sermons.

Thackeray we feel sure would be annoyed with some of the essays as for instance "The Convalescent" in which the Australian praises mediocrity. We imagine that Mr. Chesterton would give Thackeray a sly wink knowing well that both he and Thackeray would enjoy "The Undertaker"! Reminiscent of David Grayson are the essays, "Spring Cleaning" and "The Glory of the Doorstep."

It is not adequate to say that Borcham proclaims a gospel of beauty, while it is true that if he painted the Crucifixion one would behold not a tragedy but the glory of sacrifice. Rather his message is the interpretation of the universal truths that find expression in familiar things and meets Ruskin's demand that art and moral ideals be one. No one is a greater artist than he is a thinker. When Sidney Lanier remarked that Edgar Allen Poe did not know enough to be a great poet, Mr. Poe, had he had opportunity, might have asked Lanier what he meant by knowledge. Borcham has a style that harks back to Solomon's idea of knowledge. The knowledge that Borcham gives is that which cherishes more than facts; it has feeling and is not a thing apart from life. Here is Borcham's delightful attraction. He has found what Dr. Maltbie used to call "liberation through ideas." He has liberated ideas because he finds them free in life and forth he goes and gathers them into fragrant bunches and to America the Abingdon Press brings them and Americans will be grateful. We have room for F. W. Borcham for he's just such an one as Bliss Perry did not have in mind when he used the phrase "non-descript gelatinous rhetoric," and he is just such an one as Brandner Matthews considered successful when he remarked that "no writer ever succeeded who had not ingenuity, compression, originality and a touch of fantasy." A. L. M.

The Bishop of London

RAYS OF DAWN. By A. F. Winnington Ingram, D.D., Lord Bishop of London. The Morehouse Publishing Co. Milwaukee. 1918. $1.35.

The Bishop of London is always real, always simple, and always helpful. He has the wisdom and the courage to deal only with essential truths, and possesses the all too rare faculty of making these truths intensely vital to our every day life.

One cannot read any of his books of sermons without feeling that he has gained a firmer hold upon the eternal verities. Rays of Dawn is no exception to the rule. It contains fifteen sermons and addresses, nine of which were delivered in connection with the National Mission of Repentance and Hope, three of which are grouped under the general title, "The Hope for the Future," and three under the title, "The Brightness of Dawn." The last three sermons, "The Blessedness of Seeing by Faith," "Easter, the Victory of Freedom," and "Following the Star," are particularly strong and beautiful.

Most of the sermons deal more or less directly with the war and questions which grow out of it, and are fine examples of what a Christian prophet's message should be in the great crisis through which we are passing. The following quotations serve to reveal the spirit of the preacher, and deepen our gratitude that London has such a bishop.

Get love, and the humblest who loves becomes a power; he will have a share in the final victory, for if one thing is certain, it is the Triumph of Love. As certainly as the resistless tide rolls at last on the reluctant dunes on the beach, so love at last conquers the world, and as certainly as the great sun struggling through the mist rises at last, so certainly will love suffuse the earth with light.

Let us thank God today for the splendid valour of our youth, the unselfish service of our women, for the light of hope which has never failed us yet, for the coming into the war of the great Power in the West; for the brightness and unselfishness which lights up the otherwise dreary watch in the trenches or on the sea; for the fortitude of our mourners and the courage of the desolate; and let us pray, as we have never prayed before, for the spirit of our fathers, which once before (in the famous words of Pitt) saved their country by their exertions and Europe by their example.

Catholicity

CATHOLICITY. A TREATISE ON THE UNITY OF RELIGIONS. By Rev. R. Heber Newton, D.D., G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York and London. 1918. $1.50.

In a thoughtful and interesting article in the last number (September, 1918) of the Constructive Quarterly, "Christianity as the Climax," C. C. J. Webb, M.A., of Magdalen College, Oxford, discusses the relation of Christianity to other religions, concluding that "the main line of religious development is—that which centres in the Christian Church." Christianity is not merely a growth from the seed which our Lord sowed in Jewish soil, but into the stock that sprang from that seed there has been a grafting from other religions, and there yet will be more grafting. Substantially this is the thesis of the book before us, although somewhat differently expressed. The doctrine of the Incarnation, the heart of the Christian Catholic creeds, Dr. Newton finds to be "not merely the contents of the Christian consciousness, but the contents of the human consciousness as historically evolved in the processes of the ages." It is to this that all religions have been pointing, toward this they have been groping, and the Man Christ Jesus "will stand forth forever as the sacred shrine of man's hope and faith, the mercy seat of the loving God." So the concluding chapter, "The Issues," which is a most eloquent sermon. This is both orthodox and catholic, but he who reads the first chapter only, and does not go on to the end, is likely to class the book as subversive, calculated to discredit Christian rites and doctrines by connecting them with heathenism, and to shock and offend the devout believer.

At his death Dr. Newton left several books more or less complete and ready for publication. The first of these posthumous volumes to appear was The Mysticism of Music (1915). This present volume is the second, edited like the first by F. Maurice Newton, but "with no changes of material," and but very slight "changes in arrangement." J. J. P.

A Reminder of War

THE FOUR HORSEMEN OF THE APOCALYPSE. Translated from the Spanish of Vicente Blasco Ibanez by Charlotte Brewster Jordan. E. P. Dutton and Company, New York. 1918. $1.90.

In a crisis we dedicate ourselves to large ideals, to our nation or even to a league of nations, but there is danger that we may forget, now that peace is here, much that we learned from the war. There are signs that the spiritual development of which we heard so much during the war, is being retarded and that in many other respects we are forgetting what we fought for and are selfishly returning to our pre-war individualism, nationally as well as personally.

A certain Puritan divine advised his hearers to walk daily in their winding sheets, a grim but undoubtedly effective reminder of death. In much the same way we must keep before ourselves the memories of the war, even of its horrors, in order to keep ourselves steadfast to our ideal of making future wars impossible. This book is a reminder of all that war means. It is less personal than Mr. Britling, dealing more with the development of a group than with the experiences of one individual, but it has the same psychological intensity. There is no strictly religious reaction, in the sense in which Mr. Britling discovered God, but through this awakened patriotism and sense of duty, the individuals devote themselves to ideals which are essentially Christian. The two main characters are a father and son, the father a Frenchman who has spent most of his life in South America, the son an Argentinian leading a dissipated life in Paris, an idol of society and the leader of its tango.

Then the war comes and the family and all their friends are caught into the maelstrom, the son fights in the French army and the father in his castle on the Marne goes through all the horrors of that first German occupation.

It is almost two books, a war novel, and a magnificent description of life on a South American cattle ranch. It is the contrast of the combination of these widely separated existences which give it the breadth and variety so characteristic of this world war, and its world wide results.

A Translation of the New Testament

THE SHORTER BIBLE, THE NEW TESTAMENT. Translated and arranged by Charles Foster Kent, with the collaboration of Charles Cutler Torrey, Henry A. Sherman, Frederick Harris, and Ethel Cutler. New York. Charles Scribner's Sons. 1918. $1.00.

The first ninety-seven pages of this work are devoted to the Synoptic Gospels, divided under the general heads of "The Life" and "The Teaching" of Christ. Fifty-three pages of selections from Acts follow, and then eighty-one pages from St. Paul, forty-nine pages from the non-Pauline writings, and finally twenty-nine pages from the Fourth Gospel (which is also used to some extent in the Synoptic section). The general arrangement is, consequently, chronological. The principle of abbreviation has been primarily the omission of matter that would be repetition, and after that the omission of the more highly technical passages, such as the bulk of Colossians 2. In addition the editors have dispensed with other sections, sometimes with obviously good reason (as in the case of Romans 16), but sometimes for reasons that are not apparent (as in the case of the great hymn in Ephesians 1). Theological and "modernistic" tendencies, however, have been resisted firmly; the abbreviation has been performed for literary and not doctrinal reasons. A tendency to excise eschatological matter is hardly an exception to this principle.

The result is readable. And this was the end the editors desired to attain. Past any doubt the New Testament should need no abbreviation, but it is also past doubt that the New Testament is not well arranged for study, and that it needs manuals of introduction and commentaries for its proper understanding. The merit of a book like the present is that it accomplishes the purpose of introduction by its method of arrangement and by its titles, so rendering special "helps" needless for the immature student. And so it may prove in many cases a stepping stone to a Book, that otherwise might be respected—but not read.

The translation is into modern English, with a tendency to fall into very modern American (e.g., "grafting" on p. 41), or at times to be rather pedestrian ("through the evidence afforded by this service you lead men to praise God for the fidelity of your allegiance to the teachings of Christ and for the generosity of your contributions,"—p. 189). "I assure you" is weak for the "Amen, amen" of St. John's Gospel, and to render ευχαριστίας by "giving thanks to God" is pointlessly prolix. "The divine Wisdom" for "Logos" is startling, but perhaps not so bad as it seems at first sight. On the other hand, such headings as "The Democracy of the Kingdom" (p. 76), or "A Living Wage for All" (p. 85) are not only too "modern"; they are positively misleading.

Mystery Religions

THE MYSTERY RELIGIONS AND THE NEW TESTAMENT. By Henry C. Sheldon. New York. The Abingdon Press. 1918. 50c.

The weakness of this informing little manual lies in the fact that it is too obviously the outcome of an uncompromising apologetic. That is, it insists that antagonists must always bear the full burden of proof, and it is resolved to accept nothing in which there is any margin of doubt. And this attitude is maintained with respect to all forms of Christianity with which the author is not in sympathy, as well as to the questions of apologetics that arise in connection with the mystery religions. None the less, the style is always interesting, and a large amount of information has been packed into a brief compass.

Perhaps, indeed, the book would have served its purpose better if it had been content to cover a little less ground. The ordinary "lay" reader will find the multiplicity of details somewhat confusing; a better method would have been to devote more space to the description of a single cult, so as to give a clearer picture of what these curious religions really were like.

Studies on St. Mark

SPIRITUAL STUDIES IN ST. MARK'S GOSPEL. By Arthur Ritchie, D.D. The Morehouse Publishing Company, Milwaukee, Wisconsin. Three volumes, 75c. each.

These are companion volumes by the same author of previous "studies" on our Lord's words in St. Matthew, St. Luke and St. John. A full series of the studies on all four Gospels is therefore complete. Dr. Ritchie with evident painstaking care has gathered from widely scattered sources expositions upon our Lord's words as recorded in St. Mark. Such authorities as Swete, Stier, Bede, Isaac Williams, Remigius, Lange, Ambrose, Chrysostom, etc., are drawn upon freely. Upon these expositions he comments in a practical way with "Three Thoughts," following the most part the usual catholic tradition and interpretation. These Studies are in such shape and style as to make them suitable for easy use in meditation and daily reading.

Lectures in East Bengal

LECTURES ON THE INCARNATION OF GOD. By E. L. Strong, M.A. Longmans, Green & Company, New York. 1918. $1.75.

Mr. Strong delivered a series of lectures on the Incarnation to the Oxford Mission Sisterhood of the Epiphany, at Barisal, East Bengal. The Sisters, kindly but not wisely, insisted on their publication. In a subject upon which so many good books exist only two reasons may allow a new book to be printed. One is that a man by scholarship and insight is able to throw new light upon a familiar truth. The other is that a man may be able by skill and eloquence to put familiar knowledge into such attractive and compelling form that those who ordinarily would not read about theology and religion, will delight in making this beginning in the deep things of life. The patient Sisters of East Bengal, one fears, will not read the book as gladly as they listened to the lectures.

The Bible and Shakespeare

THE BIBLE IN SHAKESPEARE. By William Burgess. Thomas Y. Crowell Company, New York. 1918. $2.00.

One thousand Bible truths from the great dramatist and two hundred parallel passages are herein carefully arranged together with studies of Shakespeare's biblical translations, the religious world of the dramatist, scripture themes in Shakespeare, and the ministry of Shakespeare, with a preliminary study of the question, "Was Shakespeare a Christian?" and a concluding study of "Shakespeare and Temperance." The work is library size and well indexed.

Mr. Burgess has without doubt done a splendid service for students of Shakespeare, and has also brought out many interesting biblical texts in relation to literature, but his method is textual and reminds one a great deal of Cruden's or Young's concordances of the Bible. Many of the finest things in Shakespeare that express the spirit of the Bible are unfortunately excluded by the very carefulness of Mr. Burgess's literal, textual method.

For example, no mention is made of that essentially biblical statement of the King in Hamlet when speaking of forgiveness and repentance: "That cannot be since I am still possessed of those effects for which I did the murder." As the words "forgiveness" and "repentance" do not occur in the passage Mr. Burgess does not quote them.

Nothing is made of the choice of the way of mammon, the way of self or the way of venture and loss, as illustrated by the three caskets in the Merchant of Venice. Had Mr. Burgess ventured to be more literary than textual he would have done a greater work. As an exhaustive study of the Bible in Shakespeare by the literal textual method of comparison, this book is a very "last word" and done with an appreciation that would be a credit to Lamb or Hazlett.

A Voyage on the Bear

BISHOP ROWE, who has just returned from his summer visitations, writes as follows under the date of December 8:

Returning from a visitation of the missions at Sitka, Juneau, Douglas, Wrangell and Ketchikan, I proceeded to Nome. Here I was able to hold services on Sunday. Every communicant left in Nome attended the Celebration in our St. Mary's Church.

The United States Coast Guard cutter Bear, upon which I was to sail to the Arctic, through the courtesy of Captain Uberoff, lay at anchor in the open roadstead. Owing to a storm, we could not go aboard until Tuesday night. We sailed that evening and made Port Clarence and Teller the next day. Here the Bear took on supplies for the government schools under the Bureau of Education—coal, provisions, etc. Here also lay our mission supplies of coal and provisions for St. Thomas' Mission, Point Hope. I wished that we could take them with us, but there was no space on the Bear. We had to charter a boat especially for this trip; this charter was made with great difficulty and greater expense, but we DID land the year's supplies at Point Hope finally.

After taking on the government freight and the meat of three reindeer, we sailed for Behring Straits. Here we had to anchor on account of fog. When it cleared we proceeded to the straits opposite the Eskimo village of Prince of Wales. The natives soon, in their oomiaks, came out to the ship. They love to trade. The government teacher at this point is a native. The superintendent, Mr. Walter Shields, told me that his work was most satisfactory.

After a stay of six hours, we again weighed anchor and passed into the Arctic Ocean, and in thirty-six hours made Kotzebue Sound. Here the sea was so high and rough that we lay to for a day, then some of us went ashore. That means a journey in sail launch or cutter of sixteen miles, the anchorage of the Bear being that far from shore. It was near this place that the British ship Blossom was frozen in on her cruise. This is the point where the natives from the interior, from points along the coast and even from Siberia, have been for generations accustomed to gather in the summer and trade with each other. I have seen as many as 2,000 here at one time.

Sailing on Saturday, we arrived opposite Point Hope on Sunday evening, having passed Kivilina without stopping. The people came aboard and, all night long, trading with the ship went on. The Rev. W. A. Thomas visited the ship about 2.00 a. m., and about 10.00 a. m. we went ashore, the Bear sailing soon after.

During my stay at Point Hope the weather was fine. The mission building looked well cared for, and scattered over the tundra in the neighborhood were 1,200 reindeer, under the care of the Eskimos, giving the mission the appearance of a western cattle ranch. These deer, which were given to the Eskimo people originally by the government as an aid to making them self-supporting and independent of fluctuations in the whale catch, are now owned by them and mean a great deal to them—at times, the difference between life and death. I found the people well, not a death having occurred during the winter. They had made a fair whale-killing two weeks before my arrival.

The days were spent in visiting the people here and at Jabbertown, while daily services were held, and attended by the whole population. Fifteen candidates were confirmed, and at another service I confirmed an Eskimo from Noatak, because he pleaded so strongly for Confirmation before returning to Noatak.

As Mr. Thomas insisted that we have a teacher here, thereby releasing him from this work and making it possible for him to travel far and near and carry the Gospel to the hunting camps and pasture grounds of the Eskimo, it was fortunate that I could prevail upon his sister, Miss Virginie Thomas, to come in from Chicago to join her brother. All this had to be arranged by wireless from Nome and from the Bear through Dr. John W. Wood. Happily, it worked out satisfactorily, and Miss Thomas came. She and her brother are probably at this time working their way over the ice and snow, by dog sled, from Nome to Point Hope.

For twenty-five years, approximately, the work of this mission has been done by one lone missionary. He has had to teach school, hold services, visit the sick and minister to them, make winter journeys, fearfully trying, of hundreds of miles, and in addition run his own household affairs. This was really too much. Any one can see that if the work is worth while, which it certainly is, then the staff should long ago have been increased to three—a clergyman, a teacher and a nurse. Less than this is neither economical, reasonable or wise. In fact, another clergyman is needed, who can, twice a year, visit our baptized and confirmed Eskimo at Kotzebue, Shumgnak, Kivilina, Wainwright, etc.

The Bear returned sooner than expected, having been prevented from reaching Point Barrow because of the ice. Owing to the cold winter last year, the ice was very heavy and the season a month late. Mr. Thomas joined me and we returned to Nome on the Bear, visiting Kivilina and Kotzebue and holding services. When we reached Nome, we had four weeks to wait for an ocean steamer, and our services were greatly appreciated during that time by the people, as a whole, of Nome.

A journey up the Yukon could not advantageously be made, so I sailed from Nome to Seattle, leaving Mr. and Miss Thomas there to make their way to Point Hope as best they could.

Holy Communion at Verdun

By Henry Russell Miller

IT is not safe to generalize about the war. It is often said, for example, that intimately viewed it is a bitter disappointment to the seeker after romance. It is all grim business and usually it is a grimy business. Nevertheless beautiful things do happen, even in the war zone. Also, there are those who say it is a hardening business, making men harsh, stern, materialistic, smothering the finer humanities and higher aspirations. Superficially that last is true. But I think—after nine months' living among "the boys"—that it is a surface view only. Beneath the outer crust the deeper currents of men's lives run on, and run perhaps the deeper and stronger for the great task they have assumed. One must, it is true, be at some pains to find this out.

A bishop, who took the trouble to look for it, was able to tap one of these deeper currents. He came, having temporarily laid aside his priestly raiment for the uniform of the Red Triangle, bearing a treasure of messages from home for the boys in France, and also not forgetting his calling, he came to present anew the old offer of the Bread of Life, to those who might care to listen. He had found some to say that such an offer would find only deaf ears. Let me tell you, without garnishing, a story of him and what he found.

The bishop—he is Thomas F. Davies, of the Diocese of Western Massachusetts—was sent to a certain famous sector. I rather think that to him, fresh from the staid, settled life back at home, that journey seemed sufficiently colorful. It may be that some bespectacled, agnostic Boche professor was at the guns on the other side of No Man's Land, and had wind of the bishop's arrival. For, even before he had reached his objective, he was made acquainted with the whistle and crash of incoming shells.

The first stage of his journey ended at the "Y" hut in ———, a battered village where was billeted a certain Yankee unit. He was in the midst of a series of happy personal talks with the men when the shells began to arrive unpleasantly close. Now when the Boche has your range and you are not in actual combat, there is just one thing to do. Those who could, did that one thing, and remained under cover until the squall had passed. Not all were so fortunate. When they emerged from their abri they learned that one of the "Y" party, the Rev. Henry F. Smith, had been seriously wounded in the thigh and had been already taken to the hospital in a nearby town.

That night, after visiting his wounded comrade, the bishop pressed on, reaching another village where the "Y" was working. In the morning he stood his trick at the canteen, feeding stragglers, until the Boche let loose upon the already ruined village a new shower of shrapnel and high explosives and put a temporary period to the canteen. Then, when that fury had spent itself, he took up his pilgrimage toward his goal—Verdun.

Verdun! I think it must be the best loved spot on the face of the earth, this rock upon which the German tidal wave dashed itself only to fall back broken. Not the muddy plains of Flanders, nor the Somme, nor yet the Marne, but the ancient fortress among the hills of the Meuse must ever stand as symbol of the futility of sheer force and of the might that dwells in the spirit.

Thither had come the Americans. Can you quite grasp the significance of that simple statement? Two years before, over our morning coffee, we had watched a fateful struggle. We had thrilled at the spectacle of French valor, shuddered, wept perhaps, at thought of those reddened hills and streams. But, keen as was our sympathy, we saw and heard as from afar off other men—of another and different world—fighting out their own issues. It may be that after all it was not very real to any of us over there. We are no longer afar off. We too were at last drawn into the crucible of war. This world has become our world. And the presence of thousands of khaki-clad soldiers, gathered not for defense but for attack and a just vengeance testifies that this Verdun of France has become our Verdun; made ours by good American blood dripping and flowing out on those hills just beyond.

Here came the bishop. And he was made welcome. There is no doubt of that. He, standing for the clean, gentle things of life, was made welcome by men whose task it was to do harsh, terrible things. Follow him, you who love the colorful, down into the citadel theatre, a hundred feet underground, and get the picture of the Yankee preacher, in the very heart of the heart of France, and his eager audience of young compatriots.

He devoted that brief hour to the messages he had brought from the home land. And they drank that in; for there is no homesickness like unto that of the Yankee soldier in France. But there was something else they needed to hear, wanted to hear—the other message he had brought. They wanted to hear about God; and so keenly felt was that need and want that some of them told him about it—no easy thing for a soldier.

He did not forget that. Obviously it is not wise to hold large congregations within

An Inspiring Example

In a sermon at St. James' Church, New York, Sunday, Jan. 5, by the Rev. Frank Warfield Crowder, rector, the following tribute was paid to Bishop Courtney:

"Were it not gratuitous, I should like to pay a tribute to his beautiful character, his widespread influence and his illustrious career. It would be a happiness to me to bear testimony also to the delicate courtesy and the unvarying consideration he has shown me ever since I came a stranger among you, and he gave the shepherding of the flock into my care. But that was something naturally to have been expected of him by all who knew him. So I simply point to his life as an inspiring example. He was a burning and a shining light, and you rejoiced for a season in his light. Now that he has slipped below your horizon he has left on your lives a beautiful afterglow, which is a reflection of his own beautiful life. As I think of him in the important perspective of the few days that have elapsed since he was taken from us, the qualities that impress me most among his rare virtues were his loyalty and his steadfastness—his loyalty to his friends, his Church and his God, and his steadfastness in the way of duty despite its difficulties and often despite weakness and weariness of body. Let us imitate his unswerving devotion to duty and the service of God. To-day would have been his eighty-second birthday had he been spared to us. Let it be in each soul here the birthday of a new resolution to be more loyal and steadfast in the Christian life.

By the pastor of the Brick Church, New York City —CHRISTIAN INTERNATIONALISM By William Pierson Merrill

Deals with the Church's present responsibility to educate the world in the great principles underlying international order from the Christian point of view. Defines internationalism. Traces the growth of the spirit of inter-racial sympathy and brotherhood. Shows the connection between democracy and internationalism. Sets forth the proposals that have been made for world organization, presents the difficulties and the problems and indicates the solution. Finally, makes clear the domestic and national readjustments necessary for international agreement. .50

Another Addition to a popular series —GOD'S RESPONSIBILITY FOR THE WAR By Edward S. Drown

Why did God permit the war? If He is good, did He not want to prevent it? If He is Almighty, could He not have done so? Can we continue to believe in God, the Father Almighty? These are the questions discussed in this terse and vigorous volume. $1.60

"God's Responsibility For the War" is one of the 60 cent series of handbooks. The authors now represented are Lyman Abbott, Robert E. Speer, Henry Churchill King, W. H. P. Faunce, H. G. Enelow, Donald Hankey and William DeWitt Hyde.

THE CHURCHWARDEN returns this week to the columns of THE CHURCHMAN in the twelfth of his series of "Reflections" which have been published from time to time in recent years.

THE BISHOP OF CALIFORNIA has done more for the development of the Church's work among seamen than anyone else in the House of Bishops. He, together with Bishop Potter and Bishop Lawrence, brought the responsibility for such work before the Boston Convention in 1904, and he has championed the cause of the sailor ever since. There has been a Seamen's Church Institute in San Francisco since 1893. This has lately taken on new life under the able management of the Rev. Charles P. Deems whom the bishop called to the San Francisco work about two years ago. Bishop Nichols is the president of the Seamen's Church Institute of America, an organization created by General Convention in 1913 for the purpose of co-ordinating existing institutes and creating new work where the need for such work was shown.

YET when people ask me if I think that wars will cease to be, I always say that I do, because the evil things in this world do get knocked on the head. The dragons and basilisks and cockatrices have become extinct, and most murderers get hanged, and most lunatics get locked up; and men are coming more and more to see that certain evils that afflict life are not inevitable, and are not the will of God, but are simply the result of obsolete and stupid ways of thinking and of governing.

THE OLD CHURCH CHIME & OTHER BELLS

It ought to be possible for the mind of man, which made the steam engine, the submarine and the aeroplane, and conquered the Black Death and yellow fever and typhus fever, to devise some means of living, nation with nation, without this periodical slaughter known as war. It won't be easy to devise any such means, men being what they are, with the instincts for war deeply rooted in their hearts, or easily put there by their rulers; yet the mind of man can do most things, if he can only get the will to do them.—From The War and the Future, by John Masefield.

the range of the enemy's guns. But during the next two days Bishop Davies went about from place to place in the Verdun neighborhood, and in all brought to more than 2,000 men both his messages. And in the evenings, when the day's work was done, the little "Y" group gathered in their half-wrecked house, and by the light of a single candle were led by their guest in evening prayers.

Out of these evening gatherings came a beautiful thing. The wish was expressed that, before he left, Holy Communion should be administered by Bishop Davies. A suitable place was sought, and was found in the ruined cathedral of Verdun, a chapel and altar of which were still in a fair state of preservation. Consent from the military and ecclesiastical authorities was easily obtained, and the hour was set.

The service as planned was for the "Y" group only. But word of it got abroad, and when the hour set was come there were gathered, not the "Y" men only, but Red Cross workers and soldiers until the chapel was full. And there, while the guns boomed and the enemy shells shrieked an answer, those homesick Americans broke bread and took of the cup.

And there is more yet. For when the service was ended, lo, another group had gathered without the chapel, soldiers who had heard the word too late and were disappointed not to have been included. So, for these, a second time that Sunday afternoon there was celebrated in the chapel of Verdun the death of Him who is alive forever more. And at the close there filed by the bishop a line of men who, speechless, could tell only by hand grip or moistened eyes the thing that was in their hearts.

THE CRISIS

THE Octave of Prayer for Unity (January 18-25) called by the Committee on World Conference falls at a critical hour in the world's history. The news that comes from Europe is, at best, depressing. We do not hear all that is going on in Russia, Germany and Poland. We do not even know what lies just beneath the surface of life in England and France. What we know looks grave to those who believe that revolution is a costly means of progress. At the very beginning of the war there were many warnings that we were witnessing the breakdown of European civilization. We can find abundant reason for that belief to-day. Europe needs peace and peace at once. In saying this we are taking counsel of a terrible fear—the fear lest lovers of a Christian peace have delayed too long the healing counsels of good will among men. As we look around us to-day we can see no hope for saving civilization other than the hope expressed in the Prayer for Missions in our Book of Common Prayer. Only in the good will, as we find it in the Gospel of Jesus Christ, can we find a solvent of class bitterness. Europe stands on the verge of anarchy. It is not love that is ruling their hearts, but hatred and fear. Only one power can save civilization. That is the power of love as we find it in Christ Jesus.

It is the hour for unity among Christians of every name. It is the hour of unselfish counsel and the passionate will to sacrifice everything, that the spirit of brotherhood may seize the hearts of men. We can never build a new world-order in a grudging spirit. We of the Churches may well heed the call of the Committee on World Conference. Unity is the work of love. The world needs every atom of such healing force in its life to-day. May there rise a mighty cry to the throne of God from American churches during these next seven days that God will cleanse and direct our thoughts and desires!

EDUCATION AND HEALTH

WE are informed that a bill to constitute a ministry of health has actually appeared in Parliament. The English Challenge exclaims: "At last." It was the influenza that finally suggested to makers of laws and the guardians of nations' well-being that the health of a nation is of as much consequence as taxes and commerce. Possibly one of the good fruits of disarmament, supposing we get it, is that there will be time and money for the minor luxuries of existence like health and education.

Our governments at Washington have not been much engaged, God be praised! in the armament business, but they haven't found much leisure to discuss the education of our people or their health. In the Secretary of the Interior's last report, released a fortnight ago, he gives us some depressing facts about our illiteracy, and the Public Health Service in informing us of the threatened return of the influenza tells us that since September 15, 350,000 have died of the epidemic. We have lost less than fifty thousand soldiers abroad in the war, but we have lost a third of a million lives here at home by an epidemic. And yet there has been no coordinated and systematic effort to prevent the epidemic, and the whole question of the nation's health is left to the disordered intelligence of the several states. Education and health, what a platform on which to go before the people! But it appears to contain no elements for enthusiasm for politicians. Only the socialists seem to regard these material concerns.

England at last is to have a ministry of health. Some months ago THE CHURCHMAN commented editorially on Dr. Mayo's recommendation, in his annual address before the American Medical Association, that one of our great physicians should sit as a member in the Cabinet. If Leonard Wood could do what he did in Cuba, perhaps another such gifted patriot might render equal service to us here at home.

But America has not only neglected the bodies of its citizens, it has, as appears in Secretary Lane's report, woefully neglected their minds. It was not till we began to hear murmers from the draft boards, that the question of illiteracy came to the surface of our easy going public opinion. Professors, college presidents and educational conventions could shriek themselves hoarse about our indifference to education, but just as soon as it was whispered that thousands of our recruits could not understand their officers when the command "right about face" was given, or couldn't read their questionnaire, then the Government began to get busy. This is what Mr. Lane finds to be the state of the case:

In 1910 there were 5,556,163 persons more than ten years old who could neither read nor write any language. There are now 700,000 men of draft age, and presumably registered, who can neither read nor write English or any other language. More than 4,600,000 illiterates are 20 or over. Half of the illiterates are between 20 and 45. In "this enlightened nation" these scattered groups of illiterates, these islands of ignorance, make a state, a nation, of more than 5,500,000, more than a twentieth of the whole population. The percentage of illiterates ranges from 1.7 per cent. in Iowa to 29 per cent. in Louisiana. According to the census of 1910, the percentage of illiterates over ten in the continental United States was 7.7; of native white illiterates born of native parents, 3.7; of native whites of foreign or mixed parentage, 1.1; of foreign-born white, 12.7; of Negroes, 30.

Of our people in the rural districts, for whose benefit the federal government and the state governments spend millions of dollars annually in disseminating information about farming, 3,700,000, or 10 per cent., Mr. Lane tells us, cannot "read a bulletin on agriculture, a farm paper, a food-pledge card, a Liberty Loan appeal, a newspaper, the Constitution of the United States, or their Bibles, nor keep their personal or business accounts."

"An uninformed democracy," as Mr. Lane says, "is not a democracy."

"What should be said of a democracy wherein 10 per cent. of the adult population cannot read the laws which they are presumed to know? What should be said of a democracy which sends an army to preach democracy wherein there was drafted out of the first 2,000,000 a total of 200,000 men who could not read their orders or understand them when delivered or read the letters sent from home?"

CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTORS

MOST of the journals which would naturally plead the cause of the conscientious objectors have been suppressed during the war. We do not question the right and the wisdom of the state to exercise such censorship in times of national peril. Conscientious objectors are a pretty thorny problem to deal with. America went Prussia one better in the solution. Our judges, our War Department and prison authorities would have none of England's soft-hearted, easy-going methods with these undesirables. Where England gave one or two-year sentences and set her conscientious objectors and political prisoners at work that would appeal to their finicky temperaments, American judges gave these men from ten to thirty years. We are pretty creditably informed that they have been battered about, manacled to cell bars, kept in solitary confinement and beaten. Two majors in the United States Army have been discharged for severity towards conscientious objectors. If the tale be true that Norman Thomas tells in his letter published last week in the New Republic, any American loving fair play and hating to soil his hands with mediaeval prison tactics, must feel chagrin. There is a report, so Mr. Thomas says, that at Fort Leavenworth one prisoner has gone insane from the brutality in the guardhouse. The Social Service Commission of the Diocese of Kansas can perhaps tell us whether this statement is true.

Just why America should have gone to such lengths of severity and cruelty in its treatment of political prisoners is not clear to some of us. We are a sentimental people and it not infrequently happens that those who shed tears most copiously over Belgian atrocities and over Russian martyrdoms in the days when George Kennen used to relate the terrors of Siberia, will indulge their own passions quite recklessly on any at home whom they despise and hate.

We have not heard one voice among the Churches in America urging clemency for political prisoners. There may have been many such brave protests but they have not come to our notice. Only the Nation and the New Republic have seen matter in this subject for Christian concern and anxiety. The best that the daily press has done appeared in the New York World for December 26: "The question whether in treatment and in time mitigation is due them will have to be studied—upon the merits of each case, as Mr. Baker says—but with a general tendency towards mercy."

THE WEEK

Chronicle and Comment on Current Events

BISHOP LAWRENCE'S CONDITION

BISHOP LAWRENCE on Monday, January 5, underwent a serious operation for mastoiditis at his home in Boston. On Monday, January 13, his condition is as favorable as could have been hoped for; there are no complications and his strength and general state are most satisfactory. The bishop may, therefore, be considered as out of all immediate danger of a grave character. This news brings great relief throughout the Church.

He will, of course, have to take a complete rest for many months. The mastoiditis was preceded by a month's illness of the general nature of influenza. The bishop has, during the last few years, labored incessantly in the various enterprises of which he was the head for the whole Church, in addition to the care of his large diocese. Although he appeared to be well, these labors have undoubtedly told on his strength, which must be carefully recuperated.

CHRISTIANS OF ENGLAND ON THE LEAGUE

LAST week we published Dr. McConnell's letter stating his opposition to the idea of a league of nations. Dr. McConnell has perhaps presented as forceful an argument on his side of the controversy as can be given. We share neither his mood nor his conclusions. We publish in our news columns this week the full text of the "Appeal to Christians," the manifesto which was sent out by the Churches in England. We cannot escape the inference in reading what Christians in England are doing on the subject of the League of Nations that either the American Churches see no moral issue involved in the present controversy or that they are timid about proclaiming their convictions. The Churches of America have not spoken.

FOR UNITY

THE "informal report" of a "private conference of women on church unity" held last summer at South Byfield, Massachusetts, has recently been printed. Some twenty-five women, prominent in church work in their own communion, met together in a quiet country house for three days conference on common faith, need for union and existing differences. "There was candid exposition of the divergent positions of the different communions—freedom of expression back and forth, inquiries and answers. No one tried to change another's position. Each frankly tried to understand the other." The analysis of the discussion which is avowedly a sketch only and in no way complete, does not throw any new light on long controverted points. The plan of the conference and the spirit that pervaded it, mark a distinct forward step in the road towards organic union. The conference was in no way official; those who gathered were of the laity and being women, had no voice in the legislative bodies of their various communions. Its object was to create a demand for church unity rather than to formulate a basis of organic union, and to create a spirit of good will among Christians of different communions. In other words the problem was attacked from the bottom, in the rank and file, rather than at the top, by the high command.

We understand that these women are about to gather again for another period of study and prayer together, and that some of them hope to establish other study groups who will meet from time to time for a similar purpose.

THE CONVICTION OF VICTOR BERGER

THE conviction of Victor Berger upon documentary evidence clears the air. We hope that he will not be permitted to take his seat in Congress. Men who sit in Washington to make laws must, at least publicly and in their writings, show a respect for law. Men like Morris Hillquit and Mr. Berger have a right to their opinion that society, as at present organized, is fundamentally unjust and vicious; they have a right to think what they please about their moral right to hinder the nation in war-time and to help the enemy. But if these men choose to violate the law of the United States, they must be punished. The Government still possesses power to enforce the law. Consequently Mr. Berger ought to go to jail rather than to Congress. If Mr. Berger and his fellow-sympathizers gain a sufficient control of public opinion to make a new set of laws, then perhaps the rest of us will go to jail or get our throats cut in good Bolsheviki fashion. We are still, however, a people under the control of law. So let us enforce it. Mr. Hillquit's whine about a capitalistic court is a pretty shabby piece of logic. Why don't these men take their medicine like the pioneers of opinion they claim to be? They defied the law. Why not be willing to suffer for their opinion? These modern pathfinders are not built after the style of the good old religious martyrs.

TOWARD EFFICIENT FINANCE

ALL churchmen and parish treasurers in particular will be gratified at the announcement in our news columns this week that the Standard Cash Book for small parishes and missions is practically ready for distribution. The book is the result of many months of work carried on through the office of the Church Finance Committee, of which Bishop Lawrence is chairman. Mr. F. F. Bartrop, the secretary of the committee, who is an expert accountant, has been in constant consultation with parish treasurers and clergymen throughout the Church, with the result that the Cash Book represents the best that business men and churchmen could give from their practical experience in handling church finance. With the adoption of a uniform fiscal year, a standard parochial report form, and now a standard cash book, it begins to look as though the care-free days of cigar-box banking in the Church were on the wane. Perhaps within another year it will be possible for someone to determine within a few hundred dollars, instead of a few millions, what the annual income and expenditure of the Episcopal Church in America really is! We sincerely hope that parish treasurers will have enough energy and curiosity to buy the Standard Cash Book.

ST. STEPHEN'S COLLEGE SCHOLARSHIPS

THE Women's Guild of St. Stephen's College at Andale-on-Hudson is making an appeal for scholarships, which cost $450 per year. During the current year St. Stephen's College has been one of the colleges selected by the United States Government for the Officers' Training Corps. The coming of peace has brought to the minds of many the subject of suitable memorials to our sons who have given their lives for the cause. It is suggested that scholarships are very appropriate memorials, because thereby young men are trained in the high standards of American citizenship to take the places of those who have fallen. Subscriptions are invited by the Women's Guild, which earnestly presses this matter upon the attention of the Church.

BIRMINGHAM ON THE CHURCH AFTER THE WAR

HOW thoroughly awake some of the bishops of the Church of England are to problems of reconstruction will be evident upon reading the little pamphlet entitled The Church after the War, by the Bishop of Birmingham. Bishop Wakefield has endeared himself to American churchmen during his visit to this country. Some of us recall on a recent occasion with what delicious humor the bishop avowed his mighty resolution never again to wear the apron and the gaiters, however shocked his archdeacons might be. To him the apron and gaiters are a symbol of something which must be eliminated from the English Church. We wish we had space to quote more at length from The Church after the War. Here is a passage that will bear upon problems which we in America must face:

The laity are disturbed by some of the unbusinesslike methods in the government of the Church. The freehold of the incumbent which enables a man to remain in charge of a place to which he is utterly unsuited, for the whole of his life, is an absurdity.

The absence of any age limit for retirement; the lack of provision for pensions—these, and other things, strike the average man as unfitting to a great institution.

Why should it be impossible to have some power given to the authorities, perhaps to the bishops, to change, under certain circumstances, men from one sphere of work to another?

Why should it not be possible to amalgamate country parishes so that a man should not be compelled to minister to a hundred or two people when he might be dealing with two or more parishes, and thereby let loose a clergyman, and perhaps money too, for some over-populous district.

Again, the use of the laity in church services might be made a more real thing. The permanent diaconate would enable intelligent and able men earning their bread in some business or profession, to give useful help in worship; the administration of the chalice; the taking of the Litany; preaching under certain defined rules; done by laymen such-like work would immensely ease the labors of the clergy and would increase church efficiency.

Time must be found, if the clergy are going to be preachers of any power, for their study of every-day problems; time to read must be discovered. A danger of the present day is that absorption in the "serving of tables" prevents men from thinking and studying, with the result that the sermon is very often mere talk.

One result is that there are too many sermons of party or quasi-party character. The extreme High Churchman brings everything round to the Blessed Sacrament of the Holy Communion, or to penance, and he adopts, now and again, a superior manner in his utterances which is irritating. He reads the church papers which happen to fit in with his ideas, and he sometimes reads very little else. The Moderate Churchman expresses himself generally in a somewhat complacent manner, and he does not take always a very serious view of the teaching of the Church. The Low Churchman, so-called, is too apt to live upon one or two central doctrines, and to be more on his guard against Roman error, and more self-confident of his own absolute hold of the truth, than he is in winning tenderly souls through a deep and easily discoverable sympathy.

SATURDAY NIGHT MEDITATIONS BY A LAYMAN

BY WILLIAM H. JEFFERYS, A.M., M.D.

XII. The Morning Star

The Tryst of the Accomplished Mission

"I will surely come again."

"And this Good News of the Kingdom shall be proclaimed throughout the whole world to set the evidence before all the nations; and then the end will come." St. Matt. 24:3; 25:13.

NOTHING is farther from my intention than to put forth a millennial theory. I acknowledge gratefully that "Of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels in heaven, but My Father only." Yet there is nothing plainer in all our Lord's teaching than the sequence: First, The expectation of the Incarnation. Second, Its focus in terms of time. Third, The going to the Father. Fourth, A period of man's induction into a relationship of spiritual union with God while yet in the flesh, as in a mirror and with blurred outlines, which may be called the Sacramental Way. Fifth, The Consummation of Reality, shall we say preceded or initiated by "the coming again" to a prepared kingdom where all the nations of the earth shall be His, and He shall reign supreme.

In every case where this tryst of the Second Coming is predicted by our Lord Himself, He emphasizes, whether it be to the individual, or to the Church, or to the world, that it will be suddenly and unexpectedly, and warns us to be ready. (St. Matt. 24:27.) The impression one gets, from a careful comparison of the various expressions of this promise by our Lord, is that the time question does not figure very prominently in His mind, whereas the being condition figures very much so. It is how He finds us, rather than when or where. Sometimes it is so much so as to make one think that He is focussing time at a point, a critical point in the life of man, when he will either be ready or he will not be, which, made composite of the race, would represent something in the nature of a projection of the infinite in terms of time, or perhaps of the general in terms of the particular. If this does not mean anything to you, at least do not let it bother you. Some day we shall understand. If you do understand it I believe it will help to clear up a number of common difficulties. We often think that death, as it were, seals the book for the individual. Maybe it does, or maybe the book is sealed at that critical point when the soul finally chooses or refuses to know God. A man may never see the stars if he wills to keep his eyes glued to a spot in front of his toes. Jesus, Himself, says not to cast pearls before swine. It is not an injustice to a hippopotamus to believe that it does not figure to inherit Eternal Life.

The part that really matters and concerns you and me is that Jesus says, "Let not your hearts be troubled. Trust in God. Trust in Me also. I am going to make ready a place for you; and, if I go and make ready a place for you, I will return and take you to be with Me, that where I am, you also may be, and where I am going you will know the way." "I am the Way." "No man comes to the Father except through Me." "Some day I will come again, and you, on certain conditions, will see Me face to face." See Me clearly and know Me in Reality.

What are these conditions? We might refer to many words of our Lord on the subject of personal preparedness, the wise and foolish virgins, for instance. Let us not fail to appreciate that this is an important matter in our Lord's mind that we should be ready. If I must choose one word, and only one, I will say "obedience" is the rock foundation of it all. It is the foundation upon which that structure must be reared, to which even St. Paul had not yet attained, but to which all that he had was irrevocably devoted. Upon obedience is built the power to love, and upon the power to love the keeping of the trysts, and upon that the companionship of Jesus, the way to the recognition and knowledge of God. No soul is ready for the coming of the King until through obedience, complete response to Christ, it has attained the power to love, through which it shall know God and love Him.

It is not a question of years for you or for me, not necessarily so. The thief on the cross lived in those hours the whole of the Christian experience consummated in Jesus's words, "To-day shalt thou be with Me in Paradise." [In Reality.]

For the Church I cannot but see that the conditions are the same. As regards her obedience, isn't it characteristic that the last words of farewell are a reiteration of the commandment to teach the world to love? It is so perfectly natural that Jesus in folding across His face the veil of the Spirit, should give us the commandment that should be our part in the Tryst of the Accomplishment. It is certainly a fact that He does so. St. Matthew (24:14) remembers that He said before the Crucifixion, "This Gospel of the Kingdom shall be proclaimed throughout the whole world, to set the evidence before all the Gentiles, and then the end will come." Is it any wonder that the Church maintains, at least in theory, that the normal Christian is a missionary, because it is her keeping of this great Tryst that the Gospel should reach every man to the ends of the earth? But let there be no mistake. It was His Gospel of His Kingdom, not any other gospel under heaven, that He appointed to be preached to all the nations, and "the charter of His Kingdom is love, and its citizens are lovers."

There are many secrets kept in the heart of God; others, like the new name within the white stone, are spoken of only between the Morning Star and the soul. The hour of the coming is known only to the Father, but a great deal of the circumstances, and the conditions the Judge will look for, and how He will judge, are well known to us and we are permitted to discuss them. A friend once asked me, "Do you believe that Jesus will return to the earth again?" and I said immediately, "Yes." But he was thinking of the physical form of Jesus and I was thinking of Jesus the Reality. I cannot but feel that the current so called millennial expectation would prove a heart-breaking disappointment; that physical conditions make it unlikely; that we are again asking for the sign, when the very object of the Incarnation and the Resurrection was to lead us to the Reality beyond the sign. That those who remain shall see Him, I have no shadow of doubt, provided they shall keep the trusts of reality which He has established. Several times in His teachings He alludes to the whole subject—"Judge not that we be not judged, for with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged." This is the judgment of reality. It is often quite misunderstood. The misunderstanding leads from an assumption that God has it in for those who judge others, that He is going to get square with them. That is not what Jesus says. He says we are judged by our own judgment of others; as Pilate in his judgment of Christ, utterly condemned himself. We are seen as we really are. It is always so in the Kingdom of Reality.

Suppose, and I do not think it unlikely, suppose the second coming of our Lord is partly in our own hands. Have you ever seen Him come into a particular human life and noted the result? Have you ever seen Him come into a particular parish, and noted what happened? Suppose it is only as the Kingdom comes, that so will the King come! I mean that it may be that He is coming just in proportion as soul by soul, and group by group, can apprehend Him by faith (fulness). "Lo, I stand at the door and knock," is the perpetual attitude of God toward His children. These are not pretty words—they are the law of God—they are the Way of Love.

When Jesus, late in His Ministry, pictures in living words that one far-off divine event when the King of Love shall return, He raises the question, Shall He find faith (fulness) on the earth? And he draws a picture of the Life that is Reality and the death that is death indeed. And the souls of all men draw near, and He says unto these:

"How much have you of love, which is the power of Life Eternal?"

They answer, "But Master we never saw You. How could we know You by faith only?"

And He asks again, "Do you remember?" and the vision of all opportunity passes before their eyes.

"Why yes, we remember," they say.

"And yet, you did it not?"

"No—but."

"It was I. You did not know Me. You refused to recognize Me. Neither do I recognize you. In My Kingdom only love abides."

"And you," speaking to the others. "How much have you of love?"

"So little, Master. We did so little for You; there was China, and Belgium, and——"

"It is enough. Look up and behold the glory round about Me, children's faces by countless thousands, radiant with the light and gladness of Perfect Love. These are they whom you received in My Name. Blessed are you whose love reached unto the world's end. You did not see—but yet you knew. Come you. Come unto Me. I am the Bright and Morning Star. God is love."

The Wrath of the Lamb

BY FREDERIC PALMER

FATHER, who wondrously
Dost opposites unite,
Teach me to know Thy saving love—
Its length and breath and height.

Thy gracious promises,
Thy "Yea," I know full well;
But is that "Nay" a voice from heaven
Which seems a voice from hell?

Help me to understand
And steadfastly proclaim
The exacting love, the yearning hate,
The blest wrath of the Lamb;

To hear with welcome dread
The thunders round Thy throne;
To see behind Thy smiling face
The glory of Thy frown;

To hear Thy stern "Depart!"
Which carries with it still
The gracious welcome, "Let him come!"
To whosoever will.

Let indignation burn
Within my soul alway
Nor slack, since with the wicked Thou
Art angry every day;

But fill me with that love
Which tracks the wandering sheep,
Nor rests, till in Thy sheltering arm
Thou canst it safely keep.

So in my heart may these Blest opposites unite,
And I may show Thy loving hate—
Its length and breadth and height.

TWENTY-FIVE YEARS AT CAMBRIDGE

BY THE REV. CHARLES LEWIS SLATTERY, D.D.

ON the evening of the fifth of January, 1894, the students of the Cambridge Theological School were summoned to hear an address by Dr. Allen on the new dean, who was to begin his work the following morning, the Feast of the Epiphany. Dr. Allen had been an important part of the school from its foundation. The son-in-law of the first dean, Dr. Stone, he had valued the work of Dr. Gray and Dr. Lawrence, who had followed. He warned the students that a new chapter was opening; for the new dean had no former associations with Cambridge: he came as a stranger. Dr. Allen reminded the men of the eulogy of the Unitarian minister, who said of his parishioner, "He was born in Boston, was educated at Harvard, and is about to be buried in Mt. Auburn—what more could be said!" Possibly the school had some of this local complacency; but it was good that a fresh element had been introduced, and Dr. Allen said that the faculty had high hopes for the future under a dean in whose ability every one had confidence.

The students had long before discussed the merits of Dr. Hodges for the post. One of the seniors had lived in Pittsburgh, and told of Dr. Hodges's leadership not only in his great parish, but also in Kingsley House (a social settlement), in popular religious lectures, and in writing for the papers. Another came from New York with the message that Dr. Huntington had said that if Dr. Hodges had done nothing else than write the small book, The Episcopal Church, he would have demonstrated his fitness for the new task. There was pride that the popular rector of one of the chief parishes of the country was exchanging that honorable position for service in the Cambridge School.

The investigation of the new dean continued after he came into residence. No anxious mother-in-law ever watched her new daughter-in-law half so narrowly as those students watched the dean. They were, time and again, in a flurry lest the sacred traditions be disturbed. When some slight changes were made in the chapel services, the students met and appointed three of their number to wait upon the dean and to inform him just how they felt about the old ways. The three delegates presented themselves shyly in the dean's study, expressed their fears,—and, though the dean kindly and pleasantly listened, he said nothing about what he expected to do. There was no evidence that he thought himself King Canute sitting by the fireside. He afterwards confessed that he had believed that he was coming to a radical institution; but that he had discovered it to be the most conservative on the face of the earth. He also confided to his Pittsburgh friends that though Cambridge and Boston never warmed towards you, they sometimes froze to you.

The warming-up process, however, began early. That very winter the students liked his preaching so much that they not only heard him on Sunday mornings in St. John's Chapel, but they followed him about to the churches when he was to preach Sunday evenings. His crisp, clear style was a delight to them, and he had an ingenuous way of illuminating the truth. And they straightway bought all his books.

To the seniors he gave lectures on preaching and pastoral care. He did the easiest and best thing he could have done: he took pages from his own varied experience, though he did not say so. He simply universalized Calvary Parish in Pittsburgh, and said this was the way parishes should be conducted. Though most of his pupils were to minister to very small places, he would say: "Lent is the best time for Confirmation instruction. Towards the end of the season fix upon a day for the Confirmation. The bishop will be glad to come any day you decide upon." When he spoke of Confirmation lectures he gave the very lectures he had given in Pittsburgh—the students took them down with rapt eagerness, knowing instinctively that these excellent lectures would be their lectures, wherever they might go, to the end of their lives. Then he gave advice on thorny problems. "When," he said, "you get an anonymous letter, post it on the bulletin-board, and ask the owner please to take it." Or again: "When you find need to preach for forty minutes, stop in the middle and announce a hymn, explaining that you will finish the sermon after the hymn. It rests the people." It had been a tradition of the school that all the men tie up their sermons as Phillips Brooks tied his. But the new dean advised half sheets of manilla paper, because extra sheets could easily be inserted, and the slight color rested the eyes. Whereupon there was a division among the faithful: there were barrels a-starting with neatly sewed binding and others with loose sheets in envelopes. But the thought and expression of the sermons all bore marks of the dean's own style. Some one asked a student if it were not hard to stand up and read one's sermon to the dean. "Oh," was the answer, "that's nothing; the rub comes when he stands up and reads our sermons to us!"

The dean has been University Preacher at Harvard and many other institutions. He has shown a singular sympathy for undergraduate difficulties. No one knows how many students he has helped face to face, for he will never tell. But one learns from time to time what he has done for one and another perplexed youth. His genius for unravelling complex problems and pointing to the simple essentials has brought men not only into the fellowship of the Church, but into the leadership of its ministry. Only to-day have I heard the grateful tale of a brilliant and widely serving clergyman who said that it was Dean Hodges who made it clear to him in a critical moment of his Harvard career, that he could honestly give himself to the vocation which he longed to enter, but to which the barriers then seemed insuperable.

Twenty-five years have passed this very Epiphany since

Dean Hodges began his work in Cambridge. Long ago he won not only all the men who came under him, but he won all the alumni who knew him only as a congenial friend whom they saw at school anniversaries, at conventions, or in their parishes. The dean has given the utmost of his strength to teach religion not merely in a theological school, but throughout the Church and Nation. He has given the Lowell Lectures on Social Service, and again on the Early History of the Church. He has written Bible stories and Church history stories for children. He has answered, in books, hard questions about theology, the Bible, and the bringing up of children, in a language which the people can understand. He has published volume after volume of inspiring sermons. He never really has taken a holiday, for when he seems to be resting, he is writing a book—but this is his recreation. [He was giving lectures at Leland Stanford one year. As he returned from California he received news of the earthquake which laid San Francisco low. One of the students was heard to say, "How fortunate that the dean was only one day out when the earthquake occurred; for he will be able to finish a book about it before he reaches home."]

He has held the attention of readers as diverse as the subscribers of the Atlantic Monthly and the Ladies' Home Journal. The humor is on every page, but the serious intention is paramount, and everything he writes contributes to the cause of true religion.

Not only the Cambridge Theological School, but Christian people of every name may well rejoice in these twenty-five years of unselfish service to the Kingdom of God.

REFLECTIONS OF A CHURCHWARDEN

Ireland

AS I looked over the congregation, and noticed among them some of my esteemed Irish friends, it occurred to me that the facetious prelate who rules the Roman Catholic province of Boston, Cardinal O'Connell, made a speech in New York a few days before in support of a resolution urging the President to "declare at the Peace Congress that the people of Ireland should as matter of right and justice, be governed only in accordance with their consent, and that the will of the majority, ascertained by a plebiscite of the adult population, be accepted as the sovereign will of the people, instead of the present foreign rule by force." In his speech the cardinal declared that "it is because the people of Ireland have solemnly kept their sacred word, given to their great apostle, to be faithful to Peter's successor as they would be faithful to Christ, that they have felt the heel of a foreign despot mercilessly grinding them down into the very dust of humiliation." He asserted that Ireland "for full seven centuries dominated by a foreign rule, acquired only by force, and even today exercised by force," is as much entitled as any country to call upon the world, and notably upon America, to "reinstale her in full possession of her complete liberty."

The cardinal's chronology reckons seven full centuries of domination by foreign force. That period goes back to about the year 1218. In 1213 King John of Ireland and England resigned his two kingdoms to Pope Innocent III. This appears to be the starting point of the cardinal's foreign rule, although it was not admitted by King John's successors to have been a transaction binding upon them. The fact is, however, that the cardinal ought to have gone back a little farther, say seven and a half centuries; for in 1155 Innocent's predecessor, Pope Adrian VI granted to King Henry II and his successors, the hereditary lordship of Ireland, which they have been exercising ever since, interrupted only by Cromwell's commonwealth, which they violently resisted in supporting their rightful King Charles. Is our ultra-montane cardinal resenting the interference of Pope Innocent and Adrian when he objects to foreign rule?

The kings of Ireland have indeed been crowned as a rule at Westminster because they were also kings of England; but that does not make them foreign kings, any more than the custom of consecrating the archbishops of Armagh by archbishops of Canterbury at Lambeth in the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth centuries made the primates of Ireland foreign bishops. The circumstances that the kings of Ireland were born in England did not make them foreigners. The kings of Scotland since James VI have also been born out of Scotland. Sovereigns, like subjects, can only be born in one place. It is even reported that Cardinal O'Connell and other bishops of the Roman communion were born in Ireland; does that make them foreigners to America?

If a succession of Irish kings for seven and a half centuries does not make them Irish, but still leaves them foreigners, what length of time is necessary to convert foreigners into Irishmen? We know, of course, that they are called invaders; but all Irishmen are invaders. They have invaded the United States, and Canada, and various parts of the British Empire. They invaded Ireland itself. Look at any list of Irish leaders and see how foreign they are: Fitzgerald, Desmond, Emmet, Butt, Dillon, Parnell, De Valera, Skeffington, and many more. But these, we are told were Anglo-Norman names. True, but they came over with the kings of Ireland. Perhaps we shall be told that these ancient invaders have become identified with the sons of the soil, the time-out-of-mind Irishmen, who are recognized by their names beginning with Mac and O; the Milesians. Alas, they also are invaders. Their ancestors came from Scythia, and conquered and slew the primitive inhabitants. Indeed all Irishmen are foreigners. The very name, Ireland, is a foreign name, which invaded the country from Norway.

The great apostle himself, St. Patrick, was a foreigner, an invader, born in Wales, and bearing a foreign name. The cardinal says the people of Ireland gave to this immigrant saint their sacred word to be faithful to Peter's successor. In St. Patrick's time (389-461) there was no people of Ireland. The territory was divided among eight principal kingdoms and a large number of subordinate kingdoms, some of them were pagans. The main occupation of all of them was intertribal warfare. Indeed this habit persisted until long after the line of Pope Adrian's kings had been seated on the throne, and has not entirely ceased yet. At all events, if anybody gave a sacred word to St. Patrick to be faithful to Peter's successor the promise was so ill kept that for more than six centuries there was less conformity to Rome than in any other Christian country in Europe, in spite of repeated efforts of the English Church, and of papal legates, to bring them to a better mind. It was the pressure of what the cardinal calls foreign rule that finally brought about conformity.

Today he appeals to America to "reinstale" Ireland in the "full possession of her complete liberty." The word implies a return to some previous condition. No such condition of independence of the kings of Ireland and their government has existed since the ancestors of those modern leaders whose well-known names derive from Norman or English progenitors came in the train of Henry II or his successors; and when it did exist Ireland was the least civilized part of Europe. What is it now?

The most prosperous part of the British Empire. How is it oppressed? By being left to manage its own affairs with as little interference as the Welsh or the Scots or the English manage theirs; and by having a far larger representation in parliament than any other part of the United Kingdom, in proportion to population. Every Irishman, that is to say, has a larger voice in the government of England than any Englishman has. If Ireland had that complete liberty which the cardinal craves, how would she employ it? The future is forecast in the light of the past. On every occasion when the opportunity has offered to choose between freedom and tyranny the Irish have done what they could for the cause of tyranny. As between Elizabeth and Philip II they chose Philip; as between William and Mary and James II they chose James; as between the allied powers of righteousness and the Teuton powers of evil, they chose the evil, and by murder, plunder, and insurrection did their best to further the triumph of Odin and Thor and their German followers. Having put their money on the wrong horse and lost, they are disappointed and angry. Not indeed without exception: for the Ulster Scots, and elsewhere some who are the children of light, threw in their lot with their king and with the great cardinal of Belgium, with France and the United States, on the side of the angels.

Yet these Irish people are warmhearted, friendly, witty, companionable; a paradox of levity and piety; and our facetious cardinal of Boston, in his fervid and irrational political harangues, is true to type.

SWATTING VENERABLE HEADS

BY THE VERY REV. GEORGE HODGES, D.D.

Mr. Upton Sinclair challenged THE CHURCHMAN to review his recent book, The Profits of Religion. The book, which most of us shall never see, has done us the incalculable service of producing the following review by Dean Hodges.—Editor.

IN one of the rare places in which a gleam of humor shines upon the solemn pages of the Psalms, the writer invites the criticism and correction of the righteous—within friendly limits: "Let the righteous smite me friendly and reprove me; but let not their precious balms break my head." The sentence appears only in the Prayer Book version; neither the Authorized nor the Revised Version will allow it. Since, however, the commentators say that nobody knows what the psalmist meant, this translation may do as well as any other. It certainly touches a responsive chord in common experience. It is what the schoolboy had in mind who described an interview with a master: "I was sorry at first, but he rubbed it in so hard that after a while I didn't care what he said."

So it is with this interesting book of Upton Sinclair's. The writer has addressed himself to the thankless, but perhaps useful, task of taking every kind of current religion and saying everything bad that can be said about it. It is the method which Mr. Sinclair's old friends, the muck-rakers, used with a series of cities. Mr. Sinclair is "the righteous." He confesses it himself: not offensively, but with a quiet regard for the honest truth. "I am a man who has suffered, and has seen the suffering of others; I have devoted my life to analyzing the causes of the suffering, to find out if it be necessary and fore-ordained, or if by any chance there is a way of escape for future generations." He believes that there is a way of escape, if only the Churches may be converted from their immemorial profiteering. And this conversion he undertakes, by using his precious balms to break our heads.

He takes us one by one in turn: the "Church of the Conquerors" (this is the old religion, before Christianity); the "Church of Good Society" (this is ourselves); the "Church of the Servant Girls" (these are the Romanists); the "Church of the Slavers," the "Church of the Merchants" (these are our prosperous Protestant brethren); the "Church of the Quacks" (these are the Mormons and the Christian Scientists and the Holy Rollers); and finally the "Church of the Social Revolution" (to which Mr. Sinclair himself belongs). All our heads being thus broken, we have at least the consolation of sympathetic company.

Mr. Sinclair says that he was a good churchman in his youth, and indeed in his extreme youth was a "little cherub with shining face and shining robes who carried one-half the bishop's train [Bishop Potter's train!] in the stately ceremonials of the Church." Finding him thus manufacturing a bishop's "train" out of whole cloth, as the appropriate phrase is, we easily suspect him of other equally picturesque errors. Dr. F. G. Peabody, who held the Plummer Professorship of Christian Morals at Harvard, will be interested to read about "the Rev. F. G. Plummer, late Professor of Christian Morals at Harvard University." "Prof. Plummer," says Mr. Sinclair, "has written several books on the social teachings of Jesus." These, however, are insignificant mistakes. They were likely to occur as one went "romping down the vista of the ages, swatting every venerable head that showed itself."

The phrase is Mr. Sinclair's own description of his book, and it indicates with fair accuracy what sort of book it is. It plays with tragic facts. It tells a thousand wholesome truths, but tells them in the manner of one who points out a man in a pillory to the derisive laughter of a crowd. No man in a pillory was ever changed by that sort of discipline, except for the worse. He doubts the sincerity of his tormentor, and suspects that what he chiefly cares for is not the reform of an offender, but the clapping of the hard palms of the lookers-on. "We have had a lark together," says Mr. Sinclair to his readers at the close of the book. But the matters with which he deals are too tragically serious for this light-handed treatment. It is like having a lark with the Germans in the streets of a devastated town.

OCCUPYING OUR BUSINESS IN GREAT WATERS

BY THE RT. REV. WILLIAM F. NICHOLS, D.D.

THE Seamen's Number of THE CHURCHMAN of June 15 in its editorial and its contributions from experts happily and effectively occupies its business in great waters. All friends of seamen who have seen it must appreciate it and be grateful for it. And it is a most fitting circumstance that such a number emanates from the city so cosmopolitan in its port and so metropolitan in its unique Seamen's Church Institute, many storied and throbbing with varied sailor life, and in its Mr. Baylies, Dr. Mansfield and its promoters, its staff and its supporters. The stirring "feature" picture on the title page of that number in itself suggests to every Churchman who sees it that he should "get busy" to help those on the sea in these times as he never has before.

Of course a good many have been busy with this interest in the sailorman in the Christian era from the time that St. Paul was enabled to care for the crew as well as passengers in his shipwreck. But then a good many have not. Indeed, masterly and ardent missionary policies are not unknown that have practically made the sea, so far as extending and fostering national work is concerned, a seek-no-further boundary rather than a business. The old Hebrew name for the West was "the sea," and that was indicative of a coast line bounding rather than beckoning a vision of enterprise and use. Something like that has had strange persistence even in select missionary councils. What such councils have done and left undone, are they not written in the minute books of boards and conventions in some terms of this naïve sort: "It is inexpedient for the board at this particular time to undertake the spiritual care of sailors navigating inland waters as part of its proper work."

But "Ship ahoy" is now arresting the attention of our American people with almost startling effect and those who have been for years trying to have our Church more and more occupy its business on the waters have great reason to "thank God and take courage" as did St. Paul and his companions on their journeying after the shipwreck. As one who for over thirty years has found himself continually associated with organizations for promoting the welfare of men upon the waters, the writer has been asked to put on paper some of the things suggested to him from such experience. The old-fashioned "experience meeting" was more apt to bring out expressions of personal "backslidings" and hopes for better things, than consciousness of accomplishment assured, and that perhaps best represents the state of mind with which the writer "rises up and gives his testimony."

A sense both of majesty and peril has ever justified the psalmist's realization that they who go down to the sea in ships "see the works of the Lord and His wonders in the deep." "In vain does the provident deity bar land from land by the dissociable ocean," was the sentiment of Horace. So far has a dread of the deep been overcome in our time that the chief menace of it now is of men's, not nature's, making, the submarine. But while in safety, speed, comfort, ferry thoroughfares and the wireless system the ocean has become more sociable than "dissociable," Church people as a whole are just beginning to realize what a social and evangelistic movement can be promoted among the thick population of the ocean and island waters. To say this is by no means to forget noble annals of religious influence at sea and in port from the time of Robert Hunt and our early colonial chaplains down, nor to fail to recognize the far-reaching and benign work of various associations, general and local, for seamen from the very beginnings of our national life. The very fleur-de-lis of the compass is by some supposed to have been an ornamented cross to mark the north pole of the needle, and religion in sailor life and among those who have had to do with sailor life has all along been well seated in that place in the sailor's heart, which is said to be occupied either by it or by the rife superstitions of the sea.

Somehow there seems to be an especial accessibility to our Christian people who, by voyage or ship ownership or by cargo, have the concerns of the sea close to their interest, to a matter of religious principle involved when their attention is called to it. That principle is simply the old one of showing gratitude to God for His mercies and blessings. Thanksgiving For a Safe Return from Sea is one of the most spontaneous expressions for a thoughtful Churchman or Churchwoman. Indeed, to forget it is a true self-indictment of jejune ingratitude to God. And the more one realizes this he will extend his gratitude over not merely his personal safe return from a voyage but over the safe harboring of the vessel or the cargo in which he has possessions. Not only that, but the result will be not merely the uttered words of thanksgiving to God but the showing it by life as well as by lips in making some worthy thank-offering for the Christian work on the waters. How the treasures of such works would be swollen at this very time, if all of those whose dear ones have during anxious days been on the way "over there" subject to hidden menace and with no tidings meanwhile, when the assuring call comes of safe arrival, would only remember this. Then they would not only gladly tell their friends, but in conscience realize that such relief should find tangible evidence in a thankoffering to God to go to the Seamen Church Institute of America, Henry L. Hobart, Treasurer, Seamen's Church Institute of New York, 25 South Street, or some other kindred agency.

Another matter of experience is the need of widening and deepening a sense of special vocation to the sea among those called to the Holy Ministry. This becomes now all the more urgent with the increase of our navy and of our merchant marine, to furnish apt and meet chaplains for our quota by Government appointment and to extend the work among the sailors. The youth of the country is responding to the new lure of the sea held out by new conditions. Expert chaplains qualified to reach and influence them in our many ports are already in active demand. At a meeting of the Board of the Seamen's Church Institute of America held in St. Louis at the time of the General Convention in 1916, it was formulated as a policy to ask the bishops who were members of the board to give some time to turning the attention of postulants and candidates for Holy Orders by visits to seminaries and other preparatory institutions, and as they otherwise had opportunity, to this very vocation to sea work. The war in its withdrawal of so many students to the service has no doubt put limitations upon such opportunity, but the need for the special workers is becoming more and more insistent.

Still another forecast out of experience is that for an active propaganda for strong group promoters of the occupying this business on the waters at as many as possible of our principal ports. Rightly approached, it has been found that shipping circles can be reached and interested and their best and most efficient leadership can be gained to give the work the financial and other status it ought to have. It is obvious that to do this the measure must be put upon a large visioned and wide basis. Weakling ventures are apt to soon perish in the using. Faint heart does not win fair success. But given the right chaplain and given the direct approval of bishop or other Church leader to a few of the men "on the street" doing large things shipping-wise and so bringing together the competent group and the competent chaplain, the enterprise will go, if experience means anything. To promote such conditions wherever practicable was another distinct point of policy laid down for its program by the Seamen's Church Institute of America. Such an effort can be well made in ports where there are one or more local agencies for sailors. The Institute can be "locally adapted" and so unify existing interests with a blending power of its common factor of simple essentials for the sailor's spiritual and moral well-being. There is singular opportunity for the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace in the adjustments which can be made, having regard to what all concerned hold dear. The try-out of this has proved it and will prove it in the ways which do not involve questions still puzzling in the working out the larger Christian unity. Indeed it might be said that they who get down to ship life as well as they who go down to the sea in ships, verily "see the works of the Lord."

American shipyards are sliding keels into the water at a rate which is the astonishment of the world. The sea roving instinct is mobilizing our ardent youth not only at water side but over our inland city and country. Let the Church open its eyes wide to the vision of opportunity. It needs no field glasses to see it.

"Argosies of magic sails" in the heavens above and the waters under the earth; chaplains and supporting groups at every principal port; the common welcoming flag of an Institute for the sailor wherever he goes; the Church occupying this great business on great waters. Thirty years of even lesser association with the work have rewarded faith, if they have presented trials of it, as almost no other experiences have and have blessed every effort to heed the bidding "Launch out into the deep."

To forgive wrongs darker than death or night * * *
 To love and bear; to hope, till Hope creates
 From its own wreck the thing it contemplates;
 Neither to change, nor flatter, nor repent * * *
 This is alone life, joy, Empire and Victory.

NEWS OF THE CHURCH

AN APPEAL TO CHRISTIANS FROM ENGLISH CHURCHES

Stand Behind Movement for Organizing League of Nations

LONDON.—The following manifesto has been made up by the heads of the Christian Churches:—

We desire to appeal to our fellow-Christians of all communions to unite with us in supporting the ideal of a League of Nations as an essentially Christian means of attaining international justice and peace.

We regard a League of Nations—in the sense of a substantial and organized co-operation of all nations sincerely interested in the object of securing the peace of the world, the abolition of war, and the guarantee of freedom to the weaker States and races—as being now accepted by the consent both of leaders and of public opinion.

We recognize this as an advance politically in the highest and noblest sense of the word. Accordingly we look with confidence to statesmen such as our own political leaders of different types, and the President of the United States, whose common endorsement of the proposal has brought it to the forefront of future policy, to work it into practical form, both as part of the coming peace and after the peace.

We do not underrate the difficulties and the intricacies of the task; it will demand the fullest political skill that statesmen can supply. But we are equally sure that this is a movement far too large, deep and significant to be left only to experts. The demand for it comes from the heart and conscience of the peoples; and the force of the public conscience and will in the nations is the indispensable condition, the measure, of its success and its permanence.

We know, also, and too well, how far a general acceptance of the project in name and in vague shape is from anything approaching realization. It is a commonplace of politics that agreed measures are sometimes the hardest to pass. There is a long road to travel and there are many enemies. To say this is only superficially inconsistent with what has just been said about agreement. No one who has given any thought to the history and conditions of true progress will doubt that real advances and elevations of standard are never secured without an arduous struggle against counter-forces to which the weaknesses and selfishnesses and basenesses of human nature always contribute. The principles of good are powerfully resisted by principles or forces of evil of which we only imperfectly descry, at any time, the nature and the workings.

Such considerations in our judgment point imperiously to the conclusion that a responsibility of the most serious and lasting kind rests upon all who form and influence opinion to watch, and support, and strengthen this great and far-reaching design. That obligation rests upon all men and women of goodwill, and without such general comradeship the object will hardly be attained. Opinion must apply the "steam," the perseverance, the vigilance which will be needed for success.

But as Christians, and speaking to those who share with us that great allegiance, we recognize a special Christian responsibility in this matter of a League of Nations, not as against others, but for the common good. For though we believe that, in the world as we have known it hitherto, war for defense or for principle may be an inevitable duty, and have accordingly supported with profound conviction the struggle of the Allies against Germany and what Germany has represented, we know that the purpose of God, as our Lord has made us to know Him, is a purpose of peace, to make war to cease in all the world. We know it as fundamental and comprehensive Christian truth that love is the only true constructive principle of common human life, and that love acts by subjecting all the forms of selfishness, self-aggrandizement and sensitive pride, in nations as in individuals, to the strong and wholesome control of duty towards the general interest, and of common loyalty to the Kingdom of God. Care for the weak and the backward, jealousy for the freedom and growth of all peoples, self-control by the nations at times of exasperation and strain, are in our eyes part of the working of this great and royal law, against which, of course, all forms of human fault, folly and weakness constantly contend.

Therefore it is that we must both welcome, from whatever source they come, forces making for these great ends, and also try as Christians to make our own Christian contribution to the cause. We believe, indeed, that it is mainly where the Kingdom of Heaven in Christ works either as leaven in the mass, or by direct power of its divine law, that there is any such real strength as can prevail in difficult movements of this kind. To these considerations there remains to be added that the Church is entrusted with spiritual weapons in whose efficacy its faith believes. By the prayer of faith and hope, earnest, humble and constant, great things are wrought: prayer both corporate of Christians in the congregation, and individual prayer which the simple and childlike as well as the skilled can offer.

A conference of leaders of the Christian Churches of Britain, convened by the Archbishop of Canterbury, was held at Lambeth on October 29, 1918, "to consider from a religious point of view the most effective mode in which the support of the Christian Churches can be given to the project of a League of Nations." With this end in view, the Conference appointed a Standing Committee, and requested us to issue this Message to the Christian people of the United Kingdom to invite their co-operation in supporting the project. That we are able to do this unitedly is for us a special happiness and an earnest of success. With the prayer for God's Blessing and guidance,

We are, etc.,

DETROIT CONVENTION MOST IMPORTANT EVER HELD

Bishop Williams Hopes There Will Be Work on Big Issues

DETROIT, MICHIGAN.—Bishop Williams has asked the clergy to prepare themselves and their congregations for the coming of the General Convention to Detroit next autumn, by instruction as to what the convention is and what it is to do, and by constant prayer, both in public service and in private devotions. The bishop said that probably never in the history of the American Church has there been as important a convention as that which will meet next October. Before it will be the great problems of Missions, Church Unity and Reconstruction. "Let us," said the bishop, "diligently pray that the Holy Ghost will guide the minds and wills of those meeting here, that they may put aside little things as to the wording of canons and the like, and work on the big issues before us."

A committee has already been appointed to devise plans to prepare the Church in Detroit for the General Convention, both educationally and spiritually. The committee consists of the Rev. H. H. Fox, rector of St. John's Church, the Rev. Wm. L. Torrance, rector of St. Andrew's Church, and Mrs. F. B. Stevens, president of the Woman's Auxiliary of Michigan.

CHURCH'S STANDARD CASH BOOK WILL SOON BE READY

Church Finance Committee Completes Its Work for Treasurers

The Church Finance Committee, of which Bishop Lawrence is chairman, announces that the Standard Cash Book for Parishes and Missions, on which diocesan finance committees, clergy, parish treasurers, accountants and others have been working for some time past, is now in the hands of the printer and will be ready by the end of this month.

This Cash Book, which is intended for at least five years' use, will be sold at actual cost, which is $2.00, and includes monthly summary sheets, pages for recording the parish property, endowments, insurance, etc.; also a separate pad of forms for recording the treasurer's weekly offerings.

It is anticipated that those dioceses which have not yet installed their own parochial accounting system will find this Cash Book very useful, and orders should be sent to the Church Finance Committee, 289 Fourth Avenue, New York.

SAYS ROOSEVELT STRONGEST INFLUENCE SINCE LINCOLN

Detroit Clericus Records Its Estimate of Great American

DETROIT, MICHIGAN.—The Rev. W. D. Maxon, D. D., rector of Christ Church, who has but recently returned from acting as a Red Cross chaplain in France, offered to the members of the Detroit Clericus a minute on the late Theodore Roosevelt at the meeting held in Detroit on January 7. All stood during the reading of the minute which is as follows:

The members of the Detroit Clericus embracing the clergy of the Episcopal Church of Wayne county and vicinity, would make record of their sense of public loss sustained by the death of Theodore Roosevelt, twenty-sixth President of the United States, exalted citizen, supreme American patriot, stalwart, fearless champion of social righteousness, true and faithful friend of humanity.

His public services extending through nearly forty years have written his name in gold upon the annals of our country. He has been the strongest single influence in the nation since the high day of Lincoln, to whom, as also to Washington, he will be linked in the grateful memory of succeeding generations of Americans.

The part he played during the uncertain days preceding our country's entrance into the world war, has won for him the exalted praise and unstinted gratitude of our people and entitled him to the renown of one of the greatest soldier statesmen in our national history.

To our appreciation of the greatness of his public service, we cannot fail to add our sense of the inestimable value to American home ideals of his highly exemplary devotion to the privileges and duties of his private family life.

We thank God for the splendor of his public services, for the power of his American patriotism and for his virtues as a man.

We desire that the secretary of the Detroit Clericus be requested to send a copy of this minute to Mrs. Roosevelt.

PROGRESSIVE SOCIAL WORK

Washington Has Effective Plans for New Secretary

WASHINGTON, D. C.—To the developing of Trinity Church, Third and C Streets, N. W., as a community center, the Bishop of Washington has given much thought and effort during the past three months. To be the head of the work, with the title of vicar, the bishop himself holding the rectorship, Bishop Harding has appointed the Rev. David R. Covell, at present rector of Christ Church Parish. Mr. Covell, who is a Washington boy, has made a special study of social service principles and methods and has been very successful in his practical work in the southeastern section of the city. The Board of Social Service of the diocese has elected Mr. Covell to be its social service secretary. For the present Mr. Covell will confine his planning and endeavors very largely to working out the community welfare plans of the diocese to be centered at Trinity Church. He has already secured considerable funds, to which the Bishop has been enabled to add more from various sources, and he has the promise of personal service from some of the leading laymen and laywomen of the diocese. While war conditions continue and Washington remains a city much visited by men in uniform, the parish hall will be used chiefly as a soldiers and sailors' club, but later on, with its spacious hall and many rooms, it will be a convenient center for neighborhood work and community service.

The Diocesan Board of Social Service has not only taken the forward step it has long had in view, of creating the office of diocesan social service secretary and providing for the appointment of Mr. Covell to hold it, but has also decided to discontinue its work in Glick's Alley, known as Satterlee House, conducted on Church lines and under Church auspices. Its purpose was to regenerate an alley holding one of the worst records in the city from a criminal, sanitary and social point of view. The work has been completed. The alley no longer possesses an evil name, and, full of idlers five years ago, is now full of workers, and shiftlessness has been transformed into thrift and prosperity. The resources and activities hitherto employed at Satterlee House will be transferred to similar work centering in the Church's new community work at Trinity Church.

N. Y. CHURCHMEN PASS RESOLUTIONS ON ROOSEVELT

Resolutions on the death of Theodore Roosevelt were passed at the last meeting of the New York Churchman's Association, as follows:

Resolved: That the members of the New York Churchman's Association hereby express the profound sorrow and sense of loss to our country with which in common with all our fellow-citizens, we have heard of the death of Colonel Theodore Roosevelt.

We wish to place on record our recognition of the great services rendered to the country by Colonel Roosevelt throughout his life, and especially during the period of the great war.

We express our deep sympathy with his family, and pay our tribute of honor to his memory. His name will live in the hearts of all our people, as that of a true man, a sincere Christian, a great citizen, an unflinching patriot, and one of our most honored Presidents.

Conference on Reconstruction

The Commission on Missions, Province of New York and New Jersey, has arranged to have a special informal conference to consider the needs of the Church during the reconstruction period. The subjects to be discussed are: Work in the Rural Districts, Work Among Foreign Peoples, and Missionary Organization.

The Conference will be held in the Church of the Redeemer, corner of Fourth avenue and Pacific street, New York, the Rev. Thomas J. Lacey, Ph.D., rector, on Wednesday, February 19, 1919, beginning at 2 P. M., and lasting through the evening.

A collation will be served at 6:30 p. m. to all who may wish to remain for the evening session. Those wishing to be thus provided for should send in their names to Rev. John R. Harding, D.D., 550 West 157th Street, New York.

Bishop Israel Returns Soon

ERIE, PENNSYLVANIA.—A cablegram has been received from Bishop Israel stating that he expects to sail on the Espagne on January 25 and that immediately after his arrival he will enter upon a visitation of all the congregations of the Diocese of Erie.

KENYON COLLEGE RECEIVES DISTINGUISHED VISITORS

Brig.-Gen. Kenyon Grandnephew of College Founder

GAMBIER, OHIO.—On January 4 the college was honored by a visit from Brig.-Gen. L. R. Kenyon, head of the Department of Inspection, British War Commission in the United States, and his aide, Colonel Lyddon. General Kenyon is a grand-nephew of the second Lord Kenyon, founder of Kenyon College. Upon their arrival at the Gambier station General Kenyon and Colonel Lyddon were welcomed by the body of college students and in the evening at Philo Hall General Kenyon addressed the men and members of the faculty in informal and delightful manner. On Sunday morning the Bishop of Ohio preached the sermon at the Church of the Holy Spirit prefacing his remarks by words of welcome to the distinguished guests. Double significance attended this occasion, as it was also the installation of the new rector of Harcourt Parish and college chaplain, the Rev. Horace W. Wood, Kenyon, 1911.

The winter term opened on January 3 with about 100 men in college, the greater part of whom were enlisted or enrolled during the first quarter in the Kenyon Unit of the S.A.T.C. Since the demobilization of this unit the Government has sent official notice of intention to establish at Kenyon a R.O.T.C. Unit. While military training will thus be carried on under the direction of the War Department, the normal curriculum of the college is otherwise resumed. For 1918-19 the remainder of the year is divided into two terms of about twelve weeks each, closing with the annual commencement on June 16.

"Y" NEEDS SPECIALISTS

Certificate of Honorable Dismissal Given to Workers Not Needed

Recognition of the self-sacrifice and willingness to face death on the part of men who put aside their businesses to serve in the war zone, under fire if necessary, as Y.M.C.A. workers is being given by the Red Triangle organization in the form of certificates of honorable discharge to those volunteers who were not sent overseas. In a statement announcing this, the personnel division of the National War Council sets forth the particular need of specialists instead of general hut secretaries, developed by the War Department's speed in returning the American Expeditionary Forces. The statement follows in part:

The Young Men's Christian Association as one of the larger organizations that have been serving our military forces overseas finds itself confronted, following cessation of hostilities, with the necessity for a radical revision of its program. The character of much of the work required under present conditions is quite different from that called for while men were entering, leaving or in the trenches.

The "Y" now has over 5,000 workers in France alone. Hereafter the requirements will be limited to certain specialists and experienced leaders. This change of program will assist very materially in conserving the gifts of the nation. Educational work will be largely increased for the armies of occupation, and to an even greater extent than before an all round Red Triangle program will be maintained. This will limit recruiting to specialists.

CHENA, THE ALASKA TOWN, HAS MOVED TO NENANA

Influenza Flourished with Tempera- ture 47 Degrees Below Zero

NENANA, ALASKA.—The establishment of the new town at Nenana has meant the end of Chena as a town. For long the headquarters of the Tanana Valley Mission were here, but they have followed the exodus down river to Nenana—even the log buildings have in many cases been torn down, the logs rafted down river, and new buildings put up at Nenana.

The high cost of provisions, as well as patriotic spirit, has caused the few remaining residents to can a great many vegetables, raised in the war gardens, while the wild berries, currants, etc., which were so bountiful last summer, are being greatly enjoyed in the form of jams and preserves.

The winter has been beautiful so far, all through the interior. Here, cut off from the storms of the coast, there has been only four inches of snow, but the thermometer is today, (November 17), down to 47 degrees below zero.

The influenza has not reached the interior yet, and the town may escape it. Strict quarantine is maintained by every town, the mail stages from the southern coast are stopped at Piledriver John's Roadhouse, twenty-eight miles from Fairbanks, and the mail fumigated before it is brought into Fairbanks for distribution through the interior.

The epidemic struck Nome and Ketchikan hard, and caused the Railroad Commission to place Nenana under strict quarantine, not only from the outside, and from Fairbanks, but even from the native village and Mission. The quarantine works well here, as the natives, instead of hanging about the pool room and the picture show, are out along their hunting grounds.

A special policeman patrols the border of the village, and all the mission business in the town must be transacted through him. One disagreeable result, is that one of the mission workers, who is engaged to be married to a man in the town, can talk to him now only over the telephone.

THE REV. E. H. RANDALL DIES

Father of George Herbert Randall Had Long Career in Ministry

POULTNEY, VERMONT.—The Rev. Edward Herbert Randall passed into life eternal at his home here, December 28, after an illness of pneumonia of only five days. Mr. Randall was in his eighty-second year, and had been retired from the active ministry since 1898. He was born in Northfield, Vermont, in 1837, and all except three years of his ministry have been passed in that diocese. He was ordained to the priesthood in 1864. He came in 1869 to St. John's Parish here of which he was rector for twenty-nine years, and until he retired from the active ministry. During his early rectorship at Poultney, Mr. Randall opened and maintained for eleven years, St. John's Parish School, in a school building erected adjoining the church, and at which multitudes of young men and women were educated.

Mr. Randall's activities were not limited to the church and the school. Every interest of the community challenged his thoughtful attention. No effort for betterment failed to receive his hearty attention. Especially in all movements to conserve public morals he was among the leaders regardless of personal consequences. He commanded the unqualified esteem and affection of the community generally.

The funeral was held from Trinity Church, Poultney, (one of the two churches of St. John's Parish), Tuesday morning, December 31, the Rt. Rev. George Y. Bliss, D.D., Bishop Coadjutor of Vermont, officiating, assisted by the Rev. Joseph Reynolds, rector of Trinity Church, Rutland; the Rev. R. W. Magoun, rector of Emmanuel Church, Bellows Falls; and the Rev. B. L. Ramsay, rector of Trinity Church, Granville, New York.

Mr. Randall is survived by his wife and two sons, George Herbert Randall of Philadelphia, associate general secretary of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, and Captain Edward Gove Randall, a physician, now serving in France as chief medical officer of the Metropolitan Base Hospital Unit of New York.

WHAT CHURCH IS DOING IN COAL MINING TOWN

The Rev. Peter Langendorff Has Great Response at Glen Carbon

GLEN CARBON, ILLINOIS.—The bishop recently appointed the Rev. Peter Langendorff, rector of St. Paul's Church, East St. Louis, to be priest-in-charge of the unorganized mission in this mining town, and has given him a woman worker, Mrs. Katherine Webster, to assist him at the Glen and also in the visiting of his parish in East St. Louis.

Several years ago a mission house was built here on property given for the purpose by the owners of the large coal mine, which is the only industry of the place. Its population consists almost entirely of coal miners and their families, about 500 to a thousand. The mission house is used for services, and has a reading room and hall.

"With the smallest of hopes," he wrote recently, "did I go to the picturesque little mining town. I had heard from various sources a story utterly disheartening. I feared I might be called upon to read the burial service over what remained of the mission. I held my first service with 6 persons present. I found among them a few excellent church people, devout, zealous, willing to cooperate with me. I decided to spend one whole day of each week at the Glen calling upon the people. They responded readily. At my third service I had 26 persons present. Another Tuesday of hard visiting, Deaconess Webster with me. The hour for the evening service arrived. The chapel was filled to the very doors with worshippers. I counted 101. Among them one Greek Orthodox young woman with her little daughter who has come ever since. At this service I baptized seventeen, six adults and eleven children, and at the last service on last Monday I baptized two more, a brother and a sister, both of them deaf and dumb. We opened the Sunday School with twenty-six young people and children in attendance."

Conference on World Evangelism

The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago has announced a conference on World Evangelism and Vital Christianity after the war to be held February 3-7, 1919. Religious leaders from all parts of the country will attend, and it is expected that a concerted forward movement of worldwide scope will be launched. The emphasis will be on evangelical testimony and service, Bible study, prayer, missions, church efficiency, personal work and the devotional life.

ARIZONA CHILDREN GO TO SUNDAY SCHOOL ON SKIS

Coldest Winter on Record Has Its Compensations

PHOENIX, ARIZONA.—The new year finds the work in this missionary diocese making fair progress in spite of the discouragements of sickness and rather abnormal weather. The influenza struck this state early in the fall in the northern part, but not until a month later in the southern portions. Everywhere it got in its deadly work, taking a heavy toll of precious life and necessitating the closing of the churches, and all places of public gatherings, for two months. This was, of course, pretty hard on church work all along the line, but it was specially disastrous to our work in the Indian country. Fort Defiance suffered terribly, as did all the northern reservations, and together with the severity of the winter now, conditions at our Hospital of the Good Shepherd have been decidedly discouraging, but by no means hopeless.

As to the weather, this has been the coldest winter ever known in Arizona, at least within the knowledge of the writer. An abundance of snow all over the northern sections, as well as on many of the mountains in the south, with accompanying low temperature everywhere, is making this a record season. On New Year's Day it was 18 below zero in Flagstaff, but that was not unusual. Twenty-four degrees above zero in Phoenix on the same day was unprecedented, especially as the sun was shining brightly. Snow on the Superstition Mountains, forty miles due east of Phoenix, is an uncommon sight, although it is often seen on the higher peaks. If a tourist should write home that the children of Arizona go to school on skis, he would doubtless be laughed at. Perhaps it would be a sweeping statement, nevertheless it is quite true of children in Flagstaff and Williams in almost any winter. The writer recalls with pleasure the sight of several pairs of skis waiting expectantly outside the door of our parish house in Williams for Sunday School children within. All sizes too, including an almost humorously small pair for a wee maiden who had come across the snow with her older brother and sisters from a neighboring ranch.

But all this cold weather hasn't been wholly unwelcome. It came too late to injure the crop of oranges and grapefruit in the Salt Valley, which is always harvested earlier than in California. And the splendid abundance of snow, with a truly unusual number of good rains during the fall, is delighting the hearts of ranchers in the valleys, who depend on full reservoirs, and of the stockmen among the hills, whose cattle and sheep need full water holes everywhere. So, after all, Arizona has abundant cause for rejoicing.

Brooklyn Clergy at Rumanian Service

The recently organized Rumanian Orthodox Congregation in New York celebrated its Christmas service at midnight on January 6. The Rev. Thomas J. Lacey and the Rev. Herbert J. Glover of Brooklyn were appointed by Bishop Parker a special committee to attend and bear the greetings of the Anglican and Eastern Association. They were received with great cordiality by the priest and the Rumanian consul and escorted to special seats. At the close Dr. Lacey presented the congregation two handsome silk processional flags—American and Rumanian. The spirit of the occasion was prophetic of a closer approach between our Church and the growing Rumanian emigration.

ANOTHER LARGE PARISH VOTES FOR FREE PEWS

All Saints', Worcester, Now on Democratic Basis

WORCESTER, MASS.—All Saints' Church, the Rev. Lewis G. Morris, D.D., rector, has adopted the free pew system. The matter was under consideration for the greater part of a year. The two largest parishes in the Diocese of Western Massachusetts are now free churches. At a special parish meeting the resolution was passed with only one negative vote that "all pews be free and unassigned on and after Sunday, January 5, 1919."

The number of communicants of All Saints', resident in the city, far exceeds the seating capacity of the church. As a result the free pews are greatly appreciated by the many people who were unable to secure sittings under the system of rented pews. It is hoped that the attendance will increase at all services and that a larger number will recognize their obligations to help maintain the parish work, the budget for which is about $24,000.

The Rev. Dr. Robert W. Patton will conduct a "Mission for Missions" in Worcester during the week of January 19. The parish officials are expecting to secure pledges to meet the budget by an every member canvass at the close of this mission.

DAY FOR THE RENTED PEW GONE, SAYS MR. OLDHAM

Has No Place Among Followers of the "Great Democrat"

In a letter to the Brooklyn Eagle, the Rev. G. Ashton Oldham, rector of St. Ann's Church, says that rented pews are doomed in our new democracy. The letter follows in part:

Your editorial of December 31 on the subject of free pews was read with much interest, but I feel sure that in the interest of both accuracy and justice you will be glad to print a correction of an erroneous statement contained therein. I refer to the sentence, "In the United States the practice of the Protestant Episcopal Church generally favors renting pews." With regard to this I am able to give you the following statistics, which are the latest put forth by the Free and Open Church Association of our Church. The figures show that 87½ per cent of our churches are entirely free, and that no less than eight dioceses and eighteen missionary districts have not a single rented pew. In short, out of 6,808 churches 6,010 have free pews, leaving only 797 Protestant Episcopal churches with pews in whole or in part rented.

I might add that the tendency now and for some years past has been increasingly toward free pews, which sentiment has been so strengthened by the war that I venture to predict that within a very short time rented pews in our church will be entirely a thing of the past. That in the interest of justice you will give publicity to this correction, I feel sure.

If there is any place on God's earth where all men are absolutely equal, it is God's house. The Church is not a select group of saintly souls seeking their own privileges, whether material or spiritual, of this world or the next. It is, instead, a part of God's family, and every member thereof is entitled to equal rights in his Father's House. We hear much talk nowadays about "saving the world for democracy," and if the Church is going to have any part to play in this gigantic task, it must begin by practising what it preaches and illustrating by its life and worship the true democracy which arises from the fact that we all have a common Father and consequently are all brothers. If rented pews could ever be justified, that day is gone. The men who return from the front will have done with special privilege for good and all, and the last place where they will condone it is in the assemblies of those who call themselves after the name of the Great Democrat of the ages, Jesus Christ.

CHURCH SOCIALIST LEAGUE MAY ADOPT NEW NAME

Suggestion Made at Conference Held in City of Brooklyn

BROOKLYN, NEW YORK.—A day's unofficial conference of the Church Socialist League was held in the parish house of Holy Trinity Church here on the Feast of the Epiphany. It is the first of several conferences, later conferences to be held in Boston and Philadelphia, and a general conference some time after Easter. About forty people attended, some from distant points in New England. The Rev. Richard Hogue of Baltimore was chairman and the Rev. Albert Farr of Whippany, New Jersey was secretary. The speakers were, the Rev. J. Howard Melish of Brooklyn, the Rev. William B. Spofford of Concord, New Hampshire, Prof. Scott Nearing and Mr. William F. Cochran of Baltimore.

Prof. Nearing spoke optimistically of the fact that there is now a good deal of radicalism in the Church but said truly that the American public could not be said to be radical. The function of the preacher, said he, is to determine and point out to the people as a spiritual leader what is right and what is wrong, always presenting the facts of life as they are. He said suggestively that Christianity is a much more radical thing than Socialism on war and property. In this new day the clergy may by an heroic stand regain their influence over the souls of men, or, failing that, lose what little they now possess.

It was suggested that the name of the League be changed to the Church League for Social Justice. The magazine of the League is The Social Preparation. It was the distinct feeling of the conference that such a magazine is needed in the Episcopal Church if our Church is to be brought into line with either Apostolic Christianity or present day needs and strivings.

It was an intellectually stimulating conference and devotion and fellowship were conspicuous.

Churches to Raise $10,000,000

Eleven of the fourteen leading Protestant denominations which will start a co-operative national campaign in a few weeks to obtain $10,000,000 for after-war emergency needs of the churches announced this week through the committee in charge the amount which each of them will raise.

The allotments are: Methodist Episcopal, $2,000,000; Presbyterian, $1,750,000; Lutheran, $500,000; Baptist, $300,000; Protestant Episcopal, $250,000; Disciples of Christ, $125,000; Reformed Church in the United States, $110,000; Congregational, $100,000; Reformed Church in America, $70,000; Evangelical Synod, $33,000, and United Evangelical, $10,000.

The budget for the Episcopal Church is divided as follows: Women's work, $60,000; war work of local churches, $40,000; chaplains' equipment and emergency fund, $40,000; Brotherhood of St. Andrew, $30,000.

CHURCHMEN ARE HONORED BY FRENCH GOVERNMENT

A Bishop, Priest and Layman in List Announced

The first list of Americans to be honored by the French Government for their distinguished services to France and the allied cause since the beginning of hostilities was announced last week, and contains the names of some well-known Churchmen. The names are of those nominated to or promoted in the Legion of Honor. They are as follows:

Cardinal Gibbons raised to the dignity of Grand Officer.

Promoted to Commander grade are: Herbert Hoover, Henry P. Davison, Dr. Henry van Dyke, and J. Pierpont Morgan.

Those to receive the rosette of officers are James M. Beck, Simon Flexner, the Rt. Rev. James Henry Darlington, and President Hibben of Princeton.

Those to receive the Cross of Chevalier are Charles R. Miller, editor of The New York Times; Ralph Pulitzer, New York World; Frank H. Simonds, New York Tribune; Frank I. Cobb, New York World; Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, McDougall Hawkes, President Schurman of Cornell, Maurice Leon, Frank A. Vanderlip, and the Rev. Dr. Manning of Trinity Church.

HARRISBURG, PENNSYLVANIA.—The bishop has been notified by telegram from Edouard DeBilly, a deputy of the French High Commission in Washington, that he has been appointed an officer of the French Legion of Honor. The telegram reads: "I take pleasure in notifying you that the French Government has conferred upon you the rank of an officer de la Legion D'Honneur. Please accept hearty congratulations." He was also notified to the same effect by a telegram from Professor Marcel Knecht of the University of Nancy, who is a member of the "French Effort" whose headquarters is in New York.

The bishop has all along been active in behalf of the government forces of Great Britain, Italy and France, and in addition to that, he is at the head of the Serbian Church Relief Fund which has sent several thousand dollars to the Serbian Orthodox Church, which is in great distress. Its archbishop was compelled to take refuge for a time in the Island of Corfu, but has recently returned to Belgrade.

CHURCH WORK UNITED

Peace Union and World Alliance Combine for Reconstruction

Ex-president Taft, who was the leading representative of the League to Enforce Peace in the National Committee; the Rt. Rev. Charles Henry Brent, Bishop of Western New York, and Robert Gardiner of Gardiner, Maine, were elected members of the Church Peace Union Board of Trustees at its meeting last week.

A sweeping reorganization of the Church Peace Union on a post-war and reconstruction basis was announced, following the meeting. The most important feature of the plan is a combination of the work of the Church Peace Union and the World Alliance for International Friendship through the churches under one organization. Dr. Henry A. Atkinson has been elected general secretary of both organizations, and Dr. Frederick Lynch, director of the Educational Department, associate.

The former quarters of the World Alliance will be closed and its work combined with the offices of the Church Peace Union at 70 Fifth avenue.

NARROW CHRISTIANITY HAS NOW BROKEN DOWN

Says Bishop Guerry in Sermon Before Wilson Party

PARIS, FRANCE.—In his sermon preached in the American Church on December 15, before President Wilson and his party, Bishop Guerry said: What we are witnessing in Europe at the present time is the utter collapse and breakdown of every human substitute for religion. There never was a time in the history of the Church when we needed more to hold up Christ before men as the one Saviour of the world, because He is the only religious teacher in the history of the world who has ever gone to the root of the trouble and sought to regenerate the human soul from within and to supply men with a moral and spiritual passion which will enable them to overcome the most vicious and hostile environment and to triumph over every difficulty and temptation which stands in their way.

But perhaps some one will ask, "If you say that legislation has failed and social reform has failed, and education, what about Christianity? Don't you think that has broken down in Europe?" And what shall I say? I shall be obliged to say that it is undoubtedly true that a certain type of Christianity has broken down in Europe, as it deserved to break down; not the Christianity of Saint Paul or of the New Testament, but a one-sided, narrow, individualistic gospel, has undoubtedly broken down; that conception of the Gospel that taught us that religion was chiefly a concern between the individual soul and God, and that it had nothing to do with politics or business, certainly nothing to do with international relations. The so-called Christian statesmen of Europe for a century past have not hesitated to say that Christianity was inapplicable to international relations, was an iridescent dream, quite impossible and impracticable; and the only man in Europe in the last century who had the courage to stand up in the British Parliament and refute this heresy by taking the position that England should deal with a weaker and dependent country exactly as the Christian man should deal with his neighbor, was Mr. Gladstone. Let no one in this presence therefore dare to say that Christianity has failed, when Christian people and Christian nations have lacked the faith and the courage to put it to an actual test. Whenever we have attempted to apply Christianity to international relations, it has not only proved to be a wise policy, but the truest statesmanship.

Memorial Service for Col. Roosevelt

BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS.—The Burial Office was read at the cathedral by Dean Rousmaniere at the same hour as the funeral of Col. Roosevelt at Oyster Bay. The army and navy were represented by General Ruckman, Admiral Wood and a large number of officers from both services. It was quite impossible to accommodate the crowds of people who wished to participate. In accordance with the suggestion of Governor Coolidge, many of our churches honored the memory of Mr. Roosevelt on Sunday last.

To Discuss Diocesan Boundaries

ALBANY, NEW YORK.—The Sub-Committee on Readjustment of Diocesan Boundaries in the State of New York will meet here on January 28 with the bishops whose dioceses would be affected by the changes. The proposed Diocese of Albany would include an area the population of which is 705,252. Its communicants would number 19,048; it would contain 71 incorporated parishes and 40 missions. The total income, based upon the last available reports, would be $386,000, and the total amount available for the support of the episcopate would be $5,114. A comparison of these statistics with those provided for the other proposed dioceses indicates that the additional burden to be borne by the Diocese of Albany is much less than that which would fall upon the other dioceses. At the meeting this matter will receive careful consideration and may call for some modification.

WORLD LEADERS OF Y. M. C. A. HOLD NORTHFIELD MEETING

EAST NORTHFIELD, MASSACHUSETTS.—A conference of eleven members of the staff of the International Committee of the Y. M. C. A. in connection with the Country Life Department has closed here after a four days' session at The Northfield Hotel. A heavy snow-fall Thursday night enabled the delegates to see the beautiful country surrounding The Northfield in its picturesque winter dress, and to enjoy some of the winter sports that are always popular here at this season of the year. The members of the staff represented the Southern, North Central, Rocky Mountain, Eastern, and Middle Atlantic Divisions of the United States, the Canadian National Council covering the entire Dominion of Canada, Russia, and other important countries.

The conference considered the insistent calls from such countries as the allied areas, South America, Australia, China, Japan and India, in which the country life interests combine to persuade the Association to carry its message and methods into those countries. Of special interest was the message and problem brought before the delegates by Mr. Hatfield, who recently returned after a year spent in Russia directing the expedition in the interests of country life along the Volga which touched forty-five different communities and brought to the Russian peasants modern methods of agriculture and animal husbandry, the more modern activities of recreation, domestic science (co-operating with the Y. W. C. A., a delegation from which accompanied the expedition), better schools, better home conditions, hygiene and improved conditions of health. Perhaps the most urgent call to the conference was the gigantic forward movement that is already under way in our own country, looking to Y. M. C. A. secretaries in every county of the United States to bring to the manhood of the farms and villages a constructive program, which is not without its religious emphasis, that will touch the individual as well as the entire community life.

Missionary Speakers Available

The Board of Missions announces the following list of missionary speakers as available for engagements: Alaska: The Rev. A. R. Hoare (in Eighth Province); China: Hankow, Miss C. A. Couch (in First Province); Miss H. A. Littell, address direct: 147 Park Avenue, Yonkers, N. Y. Shanghai, the Rev. T. M. Tong. Japan: Tokyo, the Rev. C. F. Sweet. Liberia: The Rev. Dr. N. H. B. Cassell, Miss E. de W. Seaman, the Rev. T. A. Schofield (in Sixth Province). Mountain Work: The Rev. George Hilton. Nevada: the Rev. S. W. Creasey. Salina: The Rt. Rev. John C. Sage, D.D. (during January and February). Wyoming: The Rt. Rev. N. S. Thomas, D.D.

WISH TO MOVE ST. GAUDENS STATUE OF BISHOP BROOKS

Supreme Court Will Decide Right of Original Contributors

BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS.—A petition was filed with the Supreme Court of the State last week in the name of the majority of the surviving contributors to the fund which was raised to provide a memorial to the late Bishop Brooks, the purpose of the petition being to ascertain whether or not the authorities of Trinity Church have the legal right to remove the St. Gaudens statue of the late bishop which now stands on the north lawn of the church next to Huntington avenue. The purpose of this recourse to the court is not to settle a dispute, but to solve a doubt.

The vestry of Trinity Church in 1893 appointed a citizens' committee to secure funds for the proposed memorial to Dr. Brooks. That committee raised such a large sum of money that when the St. Gaudens work was paid for there still remained the sum of $65,000. This was turned over by the citizens' committee to the vestry of Trinity Church, the income of the fund to be used for charitable purposes. In May, 1916, by a decree of Judge DeCourcy in the Supreme Court $35,000 of this fund was made available for the purchase of the statue of Bishop Brooks by the late Bela Pratt.

It is desired to place the statue by Pratt on the lawn in Copley Square, in front of Trinity Church, and it is understood the city officials are agreeable to this proposal. But if this were to be done some disposition of the St. Gaudens statue would have to be made.

The authorities of the Episcopal Theological Seminary at Cambridge are reported to be willing to place the St. Gaudens statue on their grounds if it be removed from the lawn of Trinity Church.

The leading petitioners are Ex-President Eliot of Harvard University, Major Henry L. Higginson, the Rev. Dr. George Gordon and the Rev. Dr. Leighton Parks. There has always been considerable controversy as to the merits of the St. Gaudens work, and no little interest has been aroused in Boston by the proposed changes.

Ministry Presented to Boys

PATERSON, NEW JERSEY.—Another aspect of recruiting the ministry was seen at the dinner given by the church here to the older boys of the city. The same plan carried out in Philadelphia and Newark prevailed, and over one hundred boys and their rectors dined together and listened to a stirring address by Dr. Sturgis, educational secretary of the Board of Missions. He asked the boys if they knew to whom they belonged, and then showed them how they had been "bought with a price"; parents, school, State, Church, God, paid a price for their life, liberty and salvation. Life—for it is needed in the educational leadership of the Church. Christian education depends on life, life with God and neighbor under the leadership of Jesus Christ, and there must be in our returning soldiers an unusual ability to apprehend the leadership of Christ because they now understand what it means to offer life for a cause.

Good News from Mexico

The epidemic of influenza has pretty well subsided in Mexico City, according to a letter written on December 14 by Bishop Aves. Largely due to the work at the House of Hope there have been very few deaths from that cause in the locality.

PRAYER FOR UNITY CALL ISSUED BY COMMITTEE

Parishes, Clergy and Laity Urged to Observe Octave

With the advent of peace, the visible unity of Christians in the one Lord of peace and righteousness and love is an absolute necessity, if the new order of the world for which we hope is to be permanent and effective. The problems of reconstruction are the greatest ever presented to humanity. It is now no question of reestablishing a balance of power which, though it might make war impossible for a time in an exhausted world, would leave the nations armed to the teeth, with hearts full of jealousy and suspicion. The problem now is to create a brotherhood of the world. The splendid lessons of duty, service, sacrifice, which privileged and unprivileged alike have learned through all the horrors of this titanic struggle, must be conserved. Rich and poor, the weak and the strong, must understand that no man can reach his highest development so long as he lives only to himself.

Nations and individuals must hear the message that God is Love, revealed in His Son, Incarnate in Jesus born of the Virgin Mary, and that the supreme law of the world is Christ's New Commandment that we should love one another even as also He has loved us. The Church was established that it might proclaim that message and establish that law—the message of love, infinite and eternal, the law of the only life that is worth living. But love is unity, the sharing in the one Life of God. A divided Church cannot fully manifest that Life, nor adequately proclaim that Love.

The World Conference on Faith and Order is an attempt to bring Christians together in true Christian love and humility to try to understand and appreciate one another, and so to prepare the way for constructive effort for that visible unity which is necessary to convince and convert the world to its Redeemer. Already many partial and local efforts are being made toward reunion. It cannot be doubted that God, the Holy Spirit, is inspiring and guiding them. But the world is no longer merely an aggregation of nations. It is one, as it never has been before, and as it never will be again for generations, unless it be placed on the foundation of which Jesus Christ is the corner stone. Christians need the vision of a whole world at peace because it is at one in the peace of God which passeth understanding. God has blessed the efforts to bring about the World Conference to a degree which seemed impossible eight years ago. Almost every Communion which could be reached has promised its cooperation, and the Commission of the Protestant Episcopal Church is preparing to send as soon as possible deputations to present the invitation to join in the Conference to the Churches of Rome and of the East and to those in other countries to which access has not yet been possible.

But if progress is to be made toward the visible reunion of Christians it can come only from the deep desire of the whole Church, and that desire can find its only effective manifestation, its only means of achievement, through incessant and fervent prayer. Urge your friends and acquaintances of your own and other Communion to prayer for the turning of the hearts of Christians to unity and for the guidance of the World Conference. Form prayer circles in private houses and ask your minister to hold public services. Urge specially the observance of the Octave of Prayer for Unity, January 18-25, 1919 (January 5-12 in the Eastern Calendar.)

By order of the Commission of the Protestant Episcopal Church on the World Conference.

CHARLES P. ANDERSON,
President.

WILLIAM T. MANNING,
Chairman of Executive Committee.

ROBERT H. GARDINER,
Secretary.

Octave of Prayer for Unity, January 18 to 25

O Lord Jesus Christ, Who saidst unto Thine Apostles, Peace, I leave with you, My peace, I give unto you. Regard not our sins, but the faith of Thy Church, and grant her that peace and unity which is agreeable to Thy will, Who livest and reignest God for ever and ever. Amen.

O God of Peace, Who through Thy Son Jesus Christ didst set forth One Faith for the salvation of mankind, send Thy grace and heavenly blessing upon all Christian people who are striving to draw nearer to Thee, and to each other, in the Unity of the Spirit and in the bond of peace. Give us penitence for our divisions, wisdom to know Thy truth, courage to do Thy will, love which shall break down the barriers of pride and prejudice, and an unswerving loyalty to Thy Holy Name. Suffer us not to shrink from any endeavor, which is in accordance with Thy will, for the peace and unity of Thy Church. Give us boldness to seek only Thy glory and the advancement of Thy Kingdom. Unite us all in Thee as Thou, O Father, with Thy Son and the Holy Spirit, art One God, world without end. Amen.

O God the Holy Ghost, Spirit of wisdom and love and power, illuminate and strengthen those who have been appointed to bring about a World Conference on the Faith and Order of Thy Church. Give them patience and courage, humility, love and steadfastness, and utter obedience to Thy guidance. Fill the hearts of all Christian people with the desire to manifest to the world by their unity its Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, so that His Kingdom of peace and righteousness and love may be established and all men may be drawn to Him, Who, with Thee and the Father, liveth and reigneth One God forever. Amen.

Council to Meet in Covington, Ky.

COVINGTON, KENTUCKY. — The twenty-fourth annual meeting of the Council of the Diocese of Lexington will meet in Trinity Church, February 11 to 13, 1919.

COL. ROOSEVELT'S INTEREST IN PARISH CHARACTERISTIC

Wanted Simple Funeral in Church Where He Worshipped

At the request of THE CHURCHMAN'S Long Island representative the following brief account of the funeral of Colonel Roosevelt was written by the Rev. George E. Talmage, rector of Christ Church, Oyster Bay:

The funeral of Colonel Roosevelt took place in Christ Church, where he had been a regular attendant for many years. At his own request, the service was of the same simple order as would be held for the humblest member of the parish. So far as he was concerned it was merely the passing on of a Christian. It would have been his pleasure to have the attendance limited to relatives and those who were accustomed to worship with him. Of course this was impossible, since people came from far, and officials from the government were present in force. It was thought best to admit by ticket, owing to the limited size of the church.

At Mrs. Roosevelt's request, St. Hilda's Society, the missionary society of the parish of which she was a member, was admitted in a body. The men of the community were admitted as ushers, the pastors of the local churches serving in the same capacity. The remainder of the community could only look on from afar.

The service was without music or remarks, the Colonel's favorite hymn, "How Firm a Foundation, Ye Saints of the Lord," being read, and a few chosen collects, selected unwittingly by Quentin, who had so shortly preceded his father.

The parish will miss him much, as a regular worshiper, and one who was interested in every organization, and every missionary and benevolent enterprise. While others often claimed him, this parish had him and loved him, a quiet, democratic, Christian, country gentleman. He was a member of the troop committee, and also belonged to the Men's Guild.

Mid-West Conference to Continue

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.—The Synod of the Province of the Mid-West has voted to make permanent the Provincial Conference for Church Workers. The committee met in Chicago and decided that the place for the next meeting should be Racine College, Wisconsin. The dates set were July 8 to July 17.

The following officers were elected: President, the Bishop of Milwaukee; Vice-presidents, the Bishop of Fond du Lac; the Bishop-Coadjutor of Southern Ohio; Canon Douglass; Executive Secretary, Miss Mary Knight; Treasurer, Mr. G. K. Gibson; Registrar, Miss Rosalie Winkler; Director of Music, Dean Lutkin. Chairmen of special committees are as follows: program, the Rev. Charles Herbert Young, D.D.; hospitality, the Rev. Dr. B. T. Rogers; publicity, the Rev. G. P. T. Sargent; finance, Mr. T. T. Lyman; literature, Miss Elizabeth Matthews.

Bishop Greer's Health Improved

When Bishop Greer was asked by a representative of THE CHURCHMAN at his office this week whether he had fully recovered his health, he said: "I am not entirely well yet, but nearly so. I am regaining my normal strength and hope that I shall now be free from these annoying interruptions."

FREE PEWS EFFECTIVE IN LARGE NEW YORK PARISH

System Accords with Democratic Christian Ideal, Says Dr. Grant

When asked by THE CHURCHMAN for an expression of opinion on free pews, the Rev. Percy S. Grant said:

I have been in orders for nearly thirty-three years. For the first seven years I was in Fall River where I built a church in one of the mill sections, every seat being free. Nobody even suggested that there should be any other plan.

When I came to the Church of the Ascension in New York that was the sole condition of my acceptance of the rectorship, so that all my ministry I have personally had to do only with churches in which the seats were free. The advantages of such a system are numerous.

1. It accords with the democratic idea of the Christian Church. It accords with the modern individualism as against the Puritan idea of the family with a little place in church hedged off, which they owned and into which they practically could lock themselves with the shutting of the pew door—a method that was coincident with a gallery for the slaves or for working people if they chose to occupy it.

It agrees with the experience of New York churches in carrying on missions or chapels, which is one of the ways in which the pew church has satisfied its conscience with regard to the poor. The general experience of the great churches in New York tends to consolidation of the chapel with the church. The free church lends itself easily to such a method.

2. Where all seats are free one person feels as much proprietary rights as another person. Under these circumstances the number of services can be increased and the persons attending those services can have all the feeling of close membership and personal attachment that ever existed among the families who originally owned the pews.

This is one way by which churches can multiply their membership, their congregations and the work in the community, based upon numbers and enthusiasm.

In both the churches in which I have had the honor to serve, their financial income under a voluntary method of contribution—which, of course, must go with free seats—as contrasted with an income from pew rents, has been astonishingly high. This was true of Fall River, where the contributions from a working congregation amounted to twice as much as the expenses of the church, and in the Church of the Ascension, where the annual income for twenty-five years has been in the neighborhood of $65,000.00, about 150 per cent over its previous income.

I personally would not regard it necessary that every church should become a free church, although I do consider that the ultimate question for every church. There are communities and there are groups of persons who are so far from understanding or caring for this way of looking at church, or perhaps for the religious and social ideas behind it, that they would not go to church at all if they were to depend upon a free church. It must be remembered that persons who care for a free church are independent not only in their religious ideas but in their social ideas and are not looking for personal advancement through possible social acquaintances secured in the house of God.

All these factors, which it is just as well to look at frankly, would make it undesirable to confine churches to one type. The pew churches are the only kind for many people, but they only serve their purpose as they become centres of religious and social education of so genuine a Christian character, that presently the generous builders and proud users of great and noble edifices are not happy until they have opened them to the freest and broadest use of all the people.

Memorial at St. Stephen's

ANNANDALE-ON-HUDSON.—A memorial tablet, given by Mrs. Emily J. de Forest, in memory of Capt. Charles Graeme Lutyens, East Lancashire Regiment, who gave his life in Gallipoli, August 9, 1915, and Maj. Lionel Gallivey Lutyens, killed in action in Flanders, January 6, 1918, was placed in the college chapel of St. Stephen's College, Annandale, January 4, and unveiled January 6, on the anniversary of the death of Maj. Lionel Gallivey Lutyens.

The ceremony of unveiling the tablet was very impressive, though very few attended on account of the college being closed for the holidays.

Warning

One of the large New York parishes reports that the man who has been operating in various cities, fraudulently using the name of Trinity Church, Boston, to secure money, is now attempting to get money in New York churches by using the name of Bishop Whitehead of Pittsburgh.

Our Weekly News Letters

IDAHO

Death of Superintendent of St. Luke's—

Mrs. Lucy Emory, for the past four years superintendent of St. Luke's Hospital, Boise, died after an operation on Dec. 20. This has proved a severe loss to the hospital, as she was one of the most capable and efficient superintendents. She died of a disease from which she had suffered for the past two or three years, hemorrhages of the pancreas.

Christmas Services—Christmas services throughout the Church in Idaho were well attended, notwithstanding the influenza epidemic. Midnight services were held in a number of parishes, and were most enjoyable. At St. Michael's Cathedral, Boise, the choir sang a number of old English carols at the hospital, at the base of the community Christmas tree, and in the tower of the cathedral. At 11 p. m. full Evening Prayer was sung, and at midnight, the service of the Holy Communion. Services were also held at 11 a. m. on Christmas day.

Personals—Archdeacon Howard Stoy of Pocatello has, in addition to his other duties, accepted the position of warden of the Episcopal Indian Mission at Fort Hall, Idaho.

The Rev. R. L. Lewis, formerly of Rupert, Idaho, has accepted charge of the parish of St. John, Idaho Falls.

The Rev. Thos. Ashworth, rector of St. James' Church, Payette, has also been placed in charge of St. Luke's Church, Weiser, Idaho.

INTERNATIONALIST NOTE FOR CHURCH OF TODAY

Mission Boards at Dinner Hear Plea from Dr. Fosdick

Internationalism was the dominant note at the eighth annual dinner of the home and foreign mission boards at the Hotel Astor last Monday night.

Dr. Fosdick stirred the large company by his eloquent insistence on the necessity of the internationalist emphasis in our churches today, which could be made effective only by having in our churches more "interdenominationalists." "Here tonight we represent—how many denominations? Will you please tell me why we are divided? About God? No. About Jesus? No. About ideals of character? No. About what, then? About ecclesiastical polity, about theories of the episcopate, about the amount of water used in baptism—things that the man on the street cares not one whit for, and which would not make him one bit better if he did. Our denominations foster these differences. What's the way out? Not argument about our differences, but a common cause against a common enemy."

Dr. Batton in Postgraduate Hospital

The Rev. Loring W. Batton, D.D., professor at the General Theological Seminary, is at the Postgraduate Hospital in New York, where he went on January 15 for a surgical operation. He expects to be in the hospital for some weeks.

Bishop Page hopes to be able to supply a rector for the Parish of St. Luke's at Coeur d'Alene within a short time. This parish has been vacant for a number of months, but monthly services have been maintained by the Rev. J. A. Hiatt of St. Marie's, Idaho.

ALWARD CHAMBERLAINE.

LONG ISLAND

Junior Auxiliary Annual Service—The Junior Auxiliary held its annual service January 11 at the Church of St. Matthew, Brooklyn. The service was conducted by the Rev. Dr. Norris, rector of the church, and he was assisted by several others of the clergy, who were in the chancel. The address was made by the Rev. F. S. White, Domestic Secretary of the Board of Missions, who commended highly the children's special work this year, which is the adoption and education of a blind Indian boy, Howard McKinley, who has been under Miss Thackara's care, at Fort Defiance, Arizona. The Little Helpers are sharing in this.

A Junior play, Princess Merry-Heart and the Light Fairies, in four acts, was most beautifully presented by some tiny girls from St. Ann's, under the direction of Miss Brown. Banks in the form of "teepees" were given out, in which to collect pennies through the year. Addresses were made by Mrs. A. W. Meisel, president of the Juniors, Mrs. J. M. Scoble, who is diocesan treasurer, and Howard's grandmother, and Mrs. Otto Heinigke, L. I. correspondent of the Church Periodical Club.

Death of the Rev. E. A. Angell—The Rev. E. A. Angell died on January 11 at his residence in Brooklyn. He was born in 1837, and entered the ministry in 1882, being presented for the diaconate by the Rev. Dr. Alsop, and ordained by Bishop Scarboro of New Jersey, in St. Andrew's Church, Pittsburgh. After work in many parishes he closed his active ministry as chaplain of the Church Charity Foundation. Funeral services were held at St. Mary's Church, Classon and Willoughby Avenues.

Memorial Services for Colonel Roosevelt—Many of the Long Island churches held memorial services for Colonel Roosevelt on Sunday, January 12. Among them being the Church of the Messiah, the Church of the Redeemer and Christ Church, eastern district.

Watch Night Services—Many of the Brooklyn churches held Watch Night Services, according to custom. At St. Ann's Church a dinner to the men of the choir and their wives, given by the Music Committee, at 7 o'clock, was followed by a social time, with music and dancing for the young people, from 8 till 11 o'clock, and then the Watch Night Service, which has been a feature of this church for many years.

At the Church of the Redeemer, the Rev. Dr. Lacey spoke on the period of reconstruction, in which he said, we should consider ourselves privileged to live. He urged his hearers to consecrate themselves to the new task, and carry on the spirit of service and self-sacrifice prevailing during the war time. "Let us consecrate ourselves," he said, "with all we have and all we are, to God, to humanity, and to country." He also spoke briefly of the changes wrought in the last year in the world, and placed a gold star on the service flag in honor of Sgt. Harold Lathrop, a former member of the church, killed in action on Sept. 27.

Against Sunday Work—The United Protective Association of Brooklyn, representing the Department of Street Cleaning employees, has succeeded in having a resolution, which was passed by the Board of Aldermen, discouraging Sunday work as much as possible brought before the Board of Estimate. The clergy are petitioned to urge the Mayor to call a hearing in the matter and also if it is found absolutely necessary to work on Sunday the men be paid time and a half and overtime.

Improvement Campaign—St. James Church, of Franklin Square, has begun a campaign for needed improvements, and sends an appeal to its friends for assistance. It aims to pay off its debt, supply necessary repairs and furnishings, including a new organ, and "show that the church still exists and intends to stay in existence." It shows the right spirit.

MARY E. SMYTH.

CHICAGO

Missionary Campaigns—Mr. Edward C. Mercer and Mr. Thomas J. Farmer of New York, who were so well received when they were preaching at the noon-day services here last year, are to conduct a series of missionary campaigns in different churches in the diocese during the months of January, February, and March.

The Clergy Round Table—The speaker at the meeting of the Clergy Round Table, which was held on Monday, January 6, was Mr. Angus Hibbard, president of the Church Club, who has just returned from France. Mr. Hibbard had charge of the reorganization of the Red Cross work in France into zones. He was deeply impressed both with what the American civilian workers are doing in France, and what their experience with the war is doing for all the Americans who have been on the other side.

Meeting of the Social Service Commission—A meeting of the Diocesan Social Service Commission was held on January 6, to which representatives of the social service committees of the several parishes were invited. The Rev. J. B. Haslem, secretary of the commission, made a report of the work that had been done during 1918, with special reference to the matter of moving picture censorship. Mr. Haslem is a member of the committee that has been appointed by the city to consider the whole matter of moving picture censorship in Chicago. A resolution was passed providing that representatives of the parish social service committees should constitute a permanent advisory body, to meet each month at one of the diocesan institutions and consider the needs of that institution. Plans were made for a large meeting to be held in the near future at some hall down town to arouse interest in social service. The speaker at this meeting is to be Dr. Stewart.

The Western Theological Seminary—Although the number of its students has been depleted by the war, the Western Theological Seminary has been able to pursue its usual routine this year without serious changes. The fall term which has just closed, as far as scholarship is concerned has been one of the most satisfactory in its experience. Thanks to the efforts of the Church Club of Chicago, the endowment has been increased, and individual gifts amounting to $58,000 during the year has just passed make it possible to carry on the work in the usual way. Writing of the plans which the seminary is making to provide for older men, or those who have less than the usually required preparation who may want to enter the ministry after the war, Dean DeWitt said:

"The seminary, anticipating a probable demand for a briefer course than that which is offered in its regular three year curriculum, has re-arranged its schedule so that men of fairly mature years and of considerable useful experience will be able to pass canonical requirements for the diaconate by intensive study for two years. This schedule has been printed and circulated among the bishops and examining chaplains of about thirty dioceses tributary to the Western Theological Seminary with a letter of inquiry as to whether the provisions made are deemed adequate by the bishops and chaplains addressed. The replies thus far have been to the effect that the action taken by the faculty as an emergency is amply justified by the conditions, and will prove valuable in experience. It is important to note in this connection that the seminary has not lowered its standard, and its diploma will still demand the regular three years' course.

CENTRAL NEW YORK

Victory Year in Carthage Parish—1918 will be known as Victory Year in Grace Church, Carthage, as stated in the rector's Christmas letter (the Rev. F. S. Eastman), as the largest missionary apportionment was paid; 100 theological books, 1,000 Church pamphlets, 1,400 Great Club Cards were distributed; 2,000 Church Dictionaries were published; seventy-five Scouts had weekly Bible reading and a summer camp; pageants were composed and presented in church; the rector's salary was increased 25 per cent; the Victory Memorial Endowment Fund aiming to have every family enrolled that pays even $5 was established; 20 families joined, giving sums in Liberty Bonds up to $100.

MISSOURI

A "Colossal Shame"—William Fox's colossal spectacle, Theda Bara in "Salome," struck one of the photoplay houses in St. Louis early in January and was drawing capacity houses. Some of the members of the Diocesan Social Service Commission, co-operating with the Church Federation and the Federation of the Roman Church, lodged a complaint with the prosecuting attorney that the movie was not a colossal spectacle, but a colossal shame. Alleged distortion of Biblical history and scant attire of the star of the production were made the basis of complaint against the film. The theatre management ordered five feet cut out of the film in accordance with a request from the prosecuting attorney after he had heard the complaints of the protestants.

Receives Italian Medal—Christmas tidings in the home of the Rev. Dr. J. H. Cloud included the news that his son, John Keble Cloud, had received the decoration of the Italian silver medal for rescuing a British aviator in a hazardous position, whose machine had fallen into a swiftly flowing river. Cloud, who is in the American ambulance service, had done a similar trick once before and had received for it the Italian bronze war cross. The ambulance which Cloud drove over there was equipped for him to drive by the deaf-mutes of this country. Dr. Cloud is principal of the Galaudet School for the Deaf in St. Louis and has been for twenty-five years the pastor of St. Thomas' mission for deafmutes, worshiping in the Bofinger Chapel of Christ Church Cathedral.

New Year's at the Cathedral—Christ Church Cathedral, St. Louis, was well filled at a special service on the morning of New Year's Day. A year ago, when the world was filled with gloom, the congregations of the city were invited to meet for a union service in the cathedral, and Dean Davis, lately back from hospital duty in France, made the address. The invitation was so cordially received that many expressed the hope that a similar service would be held another year. Bishop Tuttle celebrated the Holy Communion this year, assisted by Dean Davis. The preacher was the Rev. Z. B. T. Phillips, D.D., rector of St. Peter's Church, St. Louis.

Rector to Remain—The congregation of St. Augustine's Mission, St. Louis, are rejoicing in the decision of their pastor, the Rev. Douglas H. Atwill, to remain with them, declining a call recently extended to him to become the rector of St. John's Parish in the same city, made vacant by the death of the Rev. Arthur Brittain. Mr. Atwill came to St. Augustine's from the diocese of Los Angeles in February of last year, and has greatly endeared himself to his people in a section of the city which is having a good deal of material development just now. A new trolley line runs within two blocks of the church and opens up a large tract desirable for homes which St. Augustine's will be in a position to serve. Mr. Atwill is also associated with the Church's work in the city institutions and is editor of the diocesan paper, The Church News. He is a son of the late Bishop Atwill of West Missouri.

HARRINGTON ROGERS.

MICHIGAN

Ordinations—On December 18, 1918, at St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit, the Rev. Benham Ewing and the Rev. Leonard Mitchell, deacons, were ordained to the priesthood by Bishop Williams.

On January 1, 1919, at St. Paul's Church, Milwaukee, the Rev. Edgar L. Tiffany, deacon, was ordained to the priesthood by Bishop Williams, permission being granted by Bishop Webb of the Diocese of Milwaukee. Mr. Tiffany is canonically resident in the Diocese of Michigan, but is at present assistant at St. Paul's Church, Milwaukee.

SALINA

Council Elections—The Rev. Messrs. E. H. Rudd, D.D., W. D. Morrow and E. C. Johnson; Messrs. C. J. Botsford and L. C. Staples, have been appointed by the bishop to serve on the Council of Advice. At a meeting, held January 3, the Rev. Dr. Rudd was elected president and Mr. Botsford secretary of the council.

Ordination—Mr. Frank R. Myers was ordered deacon by the bishop at Christ Cathedral, Salina, on Sunday, January 5, and has been assigned to duty with the associate mission and will also have charge of the Cathedral Sunday School. The candidate was presented by the vicar of the cathedral, the Rev. Dr. Rudd, and the bishop preached the sermon. Mr. Myers passed a most creditable canonical examination and begins his ministry with very bright prospects.

OLYMPIA

Dr. Harrison Dies—The Rev. R. Marshall Harrison, D.D., dean of Whatcom deanery, and rector of St. Paul's Church, Bellingham, Washington, died at the rectory on Friday, December 13, after a lingering illness. The funeral services were held in St. Paul's Church on Tuesday, December 17, and were conducted by Bishop Keator, assisted by several of his clergy.

Dr. Harrison came to Bellingham five years ago and has had a most successful pastorate; under his wise care much has been done to improve the parish spiritually and materially, and his loss is deeply felt by the congregation. He was a public-spirited citizen and interested himself in all that tended to advance the best interests of the community.

Before coming to the Diocese of Olympia, Dr. Harrison was in charge of several important parishes in New York, Philadelphia and in the Diocese of California.

RHODE ISLAND

Bequest Received—Under the will of the late Margaret Arnold Smith, an active worker in St. Paul's Church, Pawtucket, the parish receives $1,000 to endow a free pew, in memory of the donor, her sister, Alice Waldo Smith, and her aunt, Ann Frances Dexter.

Twelfth Night Reception—The Twelfth Night Reception, given annually by the Rev. Arthur M. Aucock, D. D., to the members of All Saints' Church, Providence, was as largely attended as ever this year. A program of music and readings was added to the usual features. A new venture in parish activities has been undertaken in the care of babies in the parish house on Sunday mornings, so that their mothers can attend service.

Pews Made Free—On the first Sunday in January all the pews in Christ Church, Lonsdale, became free at all services. This radical change was made without friction and with little protest. A recent canvass for pledged offerings on the basis of free pews resulted in pledges aggregating 60 per cent. more than the combined income last year from pew rents and weekly offerings.

NEW JERSEY

The Advent Call at Westville—The observance of the Advent Call in St. Luke's, Westville, was noteworthy as illustrating what could be done in a small rural parish. The messengers, locally chosen, made a complete canvass of the parish so that literature was thoroughly distributed and the prayers offered daily throughout the parish.

There was a daily celebration of the Holy Communion with services so ordered as to emphasize day by day successively the following matters: (1) The Church concentrated: the Upper Room; (2) The Church advancing: the Holy City; (3) the Church expanded: Missions; (4) The Church dedicated: the Altar and Sacrament; (5) the Church protected: Peace; (6) the Church in Paradise: a requiem for departed soldiers and sailors.

A daily attendance was scheduled beforehand but was exceeded by the numbers that came.

Daily offerings amounted to $15, given to the United Offering of the Woman's Auxiliary.

Special Devotion for the Clergy—As arranged by the bishop of the diocese, a special devotion for the clergy and candidates for orders, took place in Christ Church, Trenton, the pro-cathedral, during the Advent Ember tide.

Devotions were conducted by Bishop Reese of Southern Ohio. His thoughtful and devout meditations were upon the power and promises of the priesthood.

KANSAS

Notes—Bishop Wise spent most of the first week of December in Grace Church, Chanute, the Rev. R. Y. Barber, rector, where was held a Woman's Conference in the Advent Call led by Miss Nellie Smith, vice-president of the Woman's Auxiliary in the South East Deanery. All the clergy of the deanery attended to hear the bishop's instructions on the Every Member Canvass which he urged all the parishes to put through at the beginning of the new year. Chanute reports the work done with a large increase for current expenses and $800 for missions.

The annual parish day was celebrated in St. Andrew's, Ft. Scott, the Rev. R. W. Rhames, rector, by a parish dinner where Bishop Wise was the guest of honor and the principal speaker. The dinner was attended by the whole parish, old and young, and a feeling of loyalty prevailed. A like event was planned in St. John's, Girard, was prevented by the "flu." Both parishes have closed the year out of debt and paid the full apportionment to general missions. The reports from the Every Member Canvass are not yet complete.

The bishop's enthusiasm for Church education has been chiefly applied to a reorganization of Bethany College, Topeka. It now presents a revised curriculum under a new principal, Miss Miranda Davis.

OKLAHOMA

A New Year's Eve Celebration—At King Hall, the church house for women at the University of Oklahoma, founded by Bishop Brooke and named by him in honor of Miss Mary Rhinclander King, whose legacy to the bishop for work in Oklahoma made possible the first payment on the property, occurred a pretty ceremony on New Year's Eve. At the suggestion of the house-mother the girls gathered under the columns at the foot of the main staircase just before midnight. Here the procession started. Two by two, the girls moved slowly through the darkened rooms, bearing lighted tapers and singing "O Little Town of Bethlehem." Under the gentle radiance of the candles they went from the east parlor through the long dining room to the west hall and returned through the west parlor and east parlor to the pillared foyer. Here grouped around the chaplain in his vestments, all knelt and said the Lord's Prayer. Then the chaplain repeated the words of Dr. Stone's beautiful prayer of blessing of the threshold which he has used at midnight for the past forty years in Chicago on New Year's Eve. Then all arose. Words of farewell to the old year were said, and the tapers symbolically extinguished. Words of welcome to the new year were pronounced amidst the flashing on of the electric lights, the chaplain adding, "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord." After the benediction the procession re-formed and sang "It Came Upon the Midnight Clear." Then with cheery greetings, each for the other, light refreshments were enjoyed in the dining room. The house-mother noticed with delight that girls of part Indian descent seemed especially responsive to the appealing influence of the occasion.

CENTRAL NEW YORK

New Parish Promised—With the approval of the bishop of the diocese, services have been started in the southeastern section of Syracuse, under the direction of the Rev. W. de L. Wilson, formerly rector of St. Mark's. The first services were held January 5, and it is hoped to start a new parish.

Community Chorus—The parish house of Christ Church, Willard, is now used for meetings of a community chorus. Christmas at Christ Church was a splendid day, with fine gifts of money from the congregation to the rector, the Rev. C. S. Brown, and his wife.

Midnight Services—In many parishes of the diocese there were midnight celebrations of the Holy Communion both Christmas and on the Eve of the Circumcision, with larger congregations reported than ever before.

ARIZONA

New Mission Heads—The Rev. A. P. Magwood, deacon, who came to us from the University of the South, has been placed in charge of St. Mark's Mission, Mesa, and Emmanuel Mission, Wickenburg. Mr. Magwood succeeds Rev. F. J. Bloy, who was transferred to Globe early in the fall.

Influenza Hits Some Clergy—Our clergy for the most part have been fortunate in escaping the "flu," but there have been some exceptions. The worst case was that of Canon Cocks, who is also superintendent of our St. Luke's Home in Phoenix and general missionary for the diocese. Mr. Cocks is one of our most popular clergy, being widely known all over the state. Last year, when a fire destroyed a portion of the Hospital of the Sisters of St. Joseph, he was very active in helping to remove the patients and in providing temporary accommodations for them at St. Luke's. In his recent sickness he was cared for at St. Joseph's and the Sisters could not do enough for him.

First Church Hospital—Bishop Atwood on Sunday, December 29, assisted the Methodist bishop, Adna W. Leonard, of California, in laying the corner stone of the new $200,000. Deaconess Hospital in Phoenix. This is the first large Protestant hospital of a general nature to be built in Arizona, and it is very much needed. It is being promoted by many leading citizens and church people of all denominations throughout the state, and will be a splendidly equipped institution when it is completed. J. R. JENKINS.

DULUTH

Mr. Stacey in Duluth—The Rev. H. G. Stacey, who, in October, was among those who were burned out by the fire which destroyed the city of Cloquet, Minnesota, is at present occupying the rectory of St. Peter's Church, Duluth, and ministering to that congregation. He also assists in the care of St. John's Church, Lakeside, and during part of each week is at Cloquet, attending to the spiritual needs of those of his congregation there, who have been able to return to Cloquet, and are settled in small shacks, built for temporary use.

The Advent Call—The Advent Call has been observed in most parishes in the diocese. In spite of the closing of churches, and prevalence of influenza, which in many localities postpones the work, the women have carried out in different ways the ideas planned for them.

Several classes for leaders were held in Duluth during the autumn, and where "Messengers" could not attend these classes, the leader gave full instructions by letter, to those who were to carry out the visiting throughout the diocese.

The reports coming in show that real spiritual results have been attained. The clergy have been enthusiastic in their appreciation of this movement.

MAINE

A Rector's Twenty-fifth Anniversary—A double celebration of great interest to St. Paul's Church, Portland, took place Sunday, January 5, 1919. The occasion marked the twenty-fifth anniversary of the rectorship of the Rev. Joseph Battell Shepherd and also the semi-centennial of the laying of the foundation stone of the parish church. The bishop of the diocese preached the sermon at the morning service, and at the evening service addresses were made by the Rev. Ernest A. Pressey and Mr. F. H. Gabbi. On the afternoon of Monday, and also in the evening, the Rev. Mr. Shepherd and Mrs. Shepherd received the congratulations of many friends.

The Death of a Clergyman—The Rev. Gilbert M. Foxwell, rector of St. Thomas' Church, Camden, died from pneumonia following an attack of influenza on St. Thomas' Day, December 24, aged forty-four. He was buried at Camden on the 24th, Bishop Brewster officiating, assisted by the Rev. A. E. Scott of Rockland.

Mr. Foxwell was a native of Baltimore, Maryland, and a graduate of Columbian University, now George Washington University of Washington, D. C., and also of the General Seminary.

Mr. Foxwell was considered a strong man in the several parishes where he had charge, and was peculiarly successful in his work. He was a member of the Diocesan Board of Missions and chairman of the Diocesan Commission of Social Service. He is survived by his widow and a thirteen-year-old son, and also by a widowed mother. ERNEST A. PRESSEY.

WESTERN COLORADO

Every Member Canvass in Grand Junction—On Sunday, January 12, a canvass of St. Matthew's Church, Grand Junction, was made on the Every Member plan. On the Friday evening preceding, a men's dinner was held as preliminary to the canvass. Various speakers of the district were present to present details of the plan and arouse enthusiasm. The duplex envelope is being made the standard in the support of the work in Western Colorado, parishes are adopting the budget system of finance and in every department of Church activity scientific methods are becoming the norm. St. Michael's congregation at Paonia are inaugurating the new year with the duplex envelope on the budget basis.

The Quarantine—In most of our towns the churches are open, many of them having been closed for 12 weeks! The clergy concerned have complied with the ruling of the authorities, but only with a sense of great self-discipline. Between some of the towns, notably in Delta County, the ban is being lifted locally; the between-town restriction, whereby a stated number of hours must be spent in quarantine, makes it impossible for clergy who have care of more than one mission to maintain services in more than one of them on the same Sunday. The congregations seem to show a wholesome impatience to have regular ministrations restored. In several places the fact of having no Christmas services whatsoever has served to awaken many to a new realization of the Church's place in the community life. Thereby some negative good will accrue!

The Red Cross Roll Call—In Delta County the Roll Call was a marked success in point of response. The Rev. H. D. Wilson, who acted as county committee chairman, was enabled to report an increase over last year's Roll Call membership figures of 29 per cent. In view of the quarantine and of the possible lessening of interest with the war's end the committee was extremely gratified. The great number of new members indicated an awakening of realization of the peace-time need of the national society of relief.

BALTIMORE

Dr. Niver Resigns—On St. John's Day the Rev. Dr. Edwin B. Niver announced to the congregation of Christ Church his resignation of the rectorship, to take effect March 1, the twenty-fifth anniversary of his rectorship. Dr. Niver is also Major Niver, chaplain of the U. S. Marine Corps, and is stationed at Quantico, Virginia. Since the outbreak of the war he has been discharging both functions, but has found the double duty too arduous. He holds the degrees of B. A. from Brown University, M.A. from George Washington University, B.D. from the Episcopal Theological School at Cambridge, and D.D. from St. John's College, Annapolis. He has been greatly beloved in Baltimore and throughout the Diocese of Maryland and has held many offices of trust and responsibility.

The Missionary Mass Meetings—The most notable event in Epiphanytide in Baltimore is always the Missionary Mass Meetings. The children's meeting was held at Grace and St. Peter's Church and was addressed by the Rev. Charles E. Betticher, Educational Secretary of the Board of Missions. The meeting for adults was held at the Lyric Opera House and was, as usual, largely attended. After an address of welcome by Bishop Murray, Ex-Governor Phillips Lee Goldsborough spoke most earnestly and effectively of our responsibility for mission service at the present time, urging that our endeavors must not be relaxed because of the war. The Rev. Dr. H. Percy Silver, rector of the Church of the Incarnation, New York, made a stirring address along the lines of militant Christianity and urging that we should be soldiers of the truth.

WYLLYS REDE.

MINNESOTA

Extensions Planned—The rector and vestry of St. Mark's Church, Minneapolis, are planning for a very large extension of the work of that parish. The plans that are being formulated will involve the expenditure of large sum in new buildings, increasing the clerical staff of the church by several more clergy and widening the scope of the usefulness of the Wells Memorial Settlement House.

Many Thrift Stamps Sold—A number of the churches in the diocese were successful in carrying out Thrift Stamp Campaigns last fall. The results of these campaigns were made known on Christmas day. By this means several of the churches made possible the decreasing of their indebtedness by large amounts. Among these were Gethsemane and St. John's, Minneapolis; and Christ Church, Red Wing. St. Luke's Church, Minneapolis, cleared the parish entirely of debt and increased the amount paid to General Missions, thus overpaying their apportionment. Christ Church, Frontenac, the Rev. A. E. Knickerbocker, were apportioned $10 and paid $47.50.

PHILADELPHIA

Speakers at Clerical Brotherhood—The Clerical Brotherhood meets every Monday morning at the Church House, except on the first Monday in each month, when there is a luncheon there; at such times the members enjoy the hospitality of the Church of St. Luke and the Epiphany. The meetings this year are more interesting, and more largely attended.

The Rev. Dr. Mockridge addressed the meeting on Monday the sixth on the work done by the War Commission and the clergy of the Church during the war.

Clerical Luncheon—Most of the clergy of the diocese attended a clerical luncheon at the Church House on Monday, January 6. The subject of the day was the "Every Member Campaign" in the diocese. Bishop Rhinelander, the Rev. Mr. Stowell, and Mr. E. H. Bonsell were the speakers.

Before the subject of the day was introduced, the bishop paid an eloquent and adequate tribute to Mr. Roosevelt, whose death had just been announced. He said, "When the time comes for just measurement to be taken, we will see that we owe to this man, more than to any other, the impetus toward the new patriotism of our day. This is due in large measure to his indefatigable zeal for righteousness in the nation."

Epiphany Meeting of Diocesan Woman's Auxiliary—On Thursday, January 9, at the Church of the Savior, there was held the annual Epiphany meeting of the diocesan branch of the Woman's Auxiliary. The speakers were Bishop Lloyd, the Bishop of Salina, Bishop Rhinelander. Bishop Garland presided over the large gathering of the women.

Inasmuch Mission Re-Dedicated—After six months' use by the Government, the Inasmuch Mission has been returned to its former use. Bishop Rhinelander attended a service there on New Year's Eve, at which time he re-dedicated the building to its work for the "down and outs."

Successful Memorial Service at Old Swede's—The recent memorial service to the Rev. Dr. Simes, at Old Swede's Church was most successful in every way. Large numbers of parishioners and friends were in attendance. The offering was for a bed in St. Luke's Hospital, Wuchang, China; for this purpose there was given $1,500. The surplus of $80 is to be made the beginning of a sum to endow a bed in the Episcopal Hospital in this city.

Ten Congregations Unite in Community House Work—Representatives of ten congregations in the central part of the city met recently to establish a community parish house in the old West Green Street Presbyterian Church at Nineteenth and Green Streets. St. Matthew's and St. Matthias' were the two Episcopal churches interested and active in this united effort.

The community parish house will be financed and equipped and conducted by the "ten churches on the hill" (Lutheran, Congregational, Baptist, Presbyterian, Methodist, Moravian, Reformed and Episcopal). Social, reading and lecture rooms will be provided; bowling alleys and pool tables installed. There will be lecture courses, singing societies, in which all ten parishes will share. Teachers' meetings will be held—the place will be open to the public every day of the week. There will be a parlor where young women of the neighborhood will be able to entertain their friends—a thing impossible in the average boarding house.

There is very general interest and approval manifest in this new venture.

IRVING A. MCGREW.

WASHINGTON

Allied Carol Service—On Sunday afternoon, the eve of the Feast of the Epiphany, the Bethlehem Chapel of the Holy Nativity, of Washington Cathedral, was the scene of the beautiful Christmas carol service which has been held every year since the chapel was completed. This year many new carols were introduced, chiefly French and English, but as Adeste Fideles, by an Italian, was sung, and several popular American carols, it was really an allied occasion, a feature which was marked by the flags of the Allies in the chancel and the attendance of soldiers of France and Great Britain as well as soldiers and sailors of the United States. Three old French carols recently published were among the features of the occasion, but the devotion of the congregation reached its deepest point in the superb singing of Adolphe Adam's "Holy Night" by Captain Davenney of the army, who has been the leading bass of the cathedral choir since last March. A modern English carol—written, in fact, since the war began, reflecting in its music and words the atmosphere of the day, and beginning "Breathe, breathe o'er a world of woes"—was singularly beautiful. The offertory anthem, Sir John Stainer's setting of Hymn 59 ("It Came Upon the Midnight Clear") contained in the English version of this popular hymn, some wonderfully effective words well and appropriately phrased in the musical setting and clamoring for peace and good will. The service came to a very solemn and impressive close in the recession, the ancient plain song entitled Corde Natus (Hymn 52 of the Church Hymnal).

The Bethlehem Chapel was thronged, not even standing room being left, and among the congregation were not a few representative men of the nation. The carols and the incidental music of choral evensong were rendered by the cathedral choir under the skilful and devotional conductorship of Mr. Edgar Priest, the cathedral organist and choirmaster.

Preparing for Peace—Forty pastors of Des Moines churches met at the Y. M. C. A. the evening of January 3 to consider how the Church as a whole can best prepare for the coming days of peace and readjustment. The motive of the meeting is best expressed in the questions which were considered. The problem was openly faced by the ministers present, who included the clergy of St. Paul's, St. Mark's and St. Luke's. Many constructive suggestions were made; opinions necessarily varying, but a most fraternal feeling dominated the whole occasion. Further conferences of this nature will undoubtedly be held.

The questions express a problem of nation-wide interest, and are therefore herewith set down:

First: Is the Church making a strong impact on the life of Des Moines? Second: Why are not more of the so-called "Big Men" of the city in the Church? Third: Why do not the daily papers pay more attention to the Church? Fourth: Is the Des Moines Church fully prepared for the "home-coming" soldier? Not only those who are Church members, but also those who have had a religious awakening through the Army Young Men's Christian Association? Fifth: Is the Church really giving a religious education to the young people of the city? Sixth: Is it possible and practicable for the Protestant churches of Des Moines to so co-ordinate at once, as to really become "THE CHURCH"—a dominating factor in the city life?

Resolutions on Death of Gen. Hamilton—The Vestry of Trinity Church, Toledo, adopted a resolution on the death of General Hamilton which follows in part:

"On Sunday, December 29, 1918, there passed into Paradise a beloved member and vestryman of this church. In his death the church lost a staunch adherent and a willing worker; while the rector, wardens and vestrymen parted with a valued counsellor and a warm friend, for whom they had deep affection and respect.

"The rector, wardens and vestrymen of Trinity Church, Toledo, Ohio, assembled in special session, desire to give public expression to their sorrow and sense of personal loss in the death of General J. Kent Hamilton.

"Graduating from Kenyon College in 1859, he was appointed Assistant Professor of English History and Literature, and he continued there in that position until he entered the military service of his country in the year 1862. From that time until the close of the Civil War, he served with gallantry and distinction, taking an active part in many battles of that great conflict.

Liquor Control—One of the blessings of war-discipline has been the restriction of the hours of sale of intoxicating liquor. Our Church, through the Archbishop of Canterbury, has joined with Cardinal Bourne, Dr. Selbie, and General Booth, in a pronouncement in favor of retaining these restrictions, at least during the period of demobilization. It is not a popular move: there is sure to be an outcry on the subject, and it looks as if all Christians will have to combine, dissociating themselves for political reasons from the recognized temperance societies, in pressing upon the new Parliament the duty of settling once for all the regulations for the sale of intoxicants.

A Central Fund for the Church—Will our people respond to the very up-to-date advertisements appearing in the daily newspapers? The Church is asking for five million pounds, so as to finance the great undertakings which are beyond parochial resources. The Challenge anticipates the very obvious retort on the part of the business man, that the Church is not making the best use of its present resources, and recommends that instead of subscribing now, people should promise to do so as soon as the Church has power to control its own affairs, and to re-distribute its funds. The present "Central Board of Finance" for the whole Church is self-constituted, though otherwise worthy of confidence. But, to be official, it must be a committee of a central Church assembly, responsible to it, and reporting to it. Which means that the "Life and Liberty" people have added a new weapon to their argumentative armory.

New Canon of Westminster—Westminster Chapter has been in a very fluid state lately. Archdeacon Pearce, who was only appointed, I think, in 1910 is now the senior member. The latest addition to the number fills the place left vacant by the death of Bishop Boyd Carpenter. I have several times mentioned Dr. Barnes, Reader of the Temple, as a preacher. He will be a welcome addition to the preaching power of the Abbey, but his place at the Temple Church will be a hard one to fill.

JAMES CAIRNS.

Episcopal Church in Ohio, he filled many positions with credit and honor

"We can not withhold our keen appreciation of his remarkable character, and of the compelling influence he exercised upon the commercial, social and political life of our city. Few have been more active, and none more generally known or more genuinely esteemed. In these and in all other relations of life he revealed the noble traits of his Christian character, but nowhere were they more delightfully displayed than in his loving interest and generous deeds in the extension of the Kingdom and in the upbuilding of Trinity Church.

"We desire to express to his family our sincerest sympathy in their affliction, and offer the consolation of our sure belief that his name is in the "Book of Remembrance," as well as on the "fleshy tablets of the heart" of all who knew him.

NEW YORK

G. F. S. Annual Supper—The diocesan branch of the G. F. S. held its annual supper at the Metropolitan Building on January 10. Miss Beck, president of the Senior Members Club, presided, and the speakers were Miss Hadley, president of the branch, Dr. Percy Silver, Miss Virginia Potter of the League of Women Workers, and Miss Joy Montgomery of the American Labor Mission. Over 600 women and girls were present. During supper patriotic songs were sung, five of them written especially for the occasion.

In Memory of Lieutenant Thompson—A memorial service for First Lieutenant Hugh Smith Thompson, Ninety-sixth Aero Squadron, who was killed on September 16, in an aerial bombing raid into Germany, was held at St. Stephen's Church. Lieutenant Thompson was a member of the first American bombing squadron to enter Germany, and had spent three months in active service on the American front before he met his death.

Commemoration Service at Columbia—Columbia University's large company of men who died in service and the members of the university faculty who died during the last year were commemorated at an impressive service held in St. Paul's Chapel on the university campus.

The service flag of gold stars which was presented to the university by the alumni shows 120 deaths in service, but the chaplain, the Rev. Raymond C. Knox, announced that these stars represent deaths that have already been definitely certified and that the total number of Columbia dead will probably reach 150. There were 11,000 Columbia men in service, 9,000 of whom reached France. The flag was presented to Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler by Major J. August Barnard, who headed a guard of honor.

The chaplain in the address of the day told of a place in one of the fields of France set apart for those who sealed with their lives the truths their eyes had seen. There among the white crosses is the resting place of a student who left Columbia at the first call of his country and beneath his cross is a small tablet of stone with the inscription:

"For justice and freedom
A gentleman unafraid."

Council of Churches—Poughkeepsie has just formed a useful organization. All of the Protestant churches of the city have agreed to hold a monthly council and small dinner at the Y. M. C. A. The various churches will be represented by their clergymen or pastors and the vestries and governing boards of laymen. A fortnight ago the first meeting was attended by the representatives of twenty-one churches. The Rev. Horace Percy Silver delivered a strong address. The gathering was an enthusiastic one.

Six Service Stars—The Rev. Frank Heartfield, rector of St. George's Church, Newburgh, leads all other presbyters of the Diocese of New York with a service flag bearing six service stars for four sons in the army at home and abroad and two daughters doing canteen work with the American army of occupation.

The Rectory Club—The Rectory Club held its last meeting with the Rev. W. C. Patterson, rector of St. Margaret's Church, Staatsburg. This club has a membership of twenty clergymen, who must be rectors of parishes outside the Borough of Manhattan and the Bronx.

City Mission Co-operation—About a year ago a committee on "general missionary aid" was formed among the workers of various communions working on Ellis Island. Since then monthly meetings have been held for educational purposes. At the last meeting the Rev. Thomas McCandless read an important paper on the universal principles in immigration.

St. Christopher Industrial Bureau—Part of the plant of Holy Trinity Church in the parish of St. James' is the St. Christopher Industrial Bureau. It was started only three years ago, but it is already self-supporting. There is a weekly exhibition of work including dresses, smocks, rompers, etc., at 318 East 88th Street. Orders for any special garments may be given to the superintendent, Miss Caroline Mitchell, 27 West 84th Street. The committee will give work to women sent to them with a card of introduction.

Death of T. J. O. Rhinelander 2nd—Memorial services were held last Saturday at Trinity Church for Private T. J. O. Rhinelander 2nd, who died on December 12 from wounds received in the advance upon Le Catelet. At the service the American flag was carried by Corporal Waters, his squad commander, and the tricolor by a French soldier who took part in the engagement. Mr. Rhinelander was the son of Mr. Philip Rhinelander, a prominent New Yorker. He had served on the Mexican border as a member of the Seventh Regiment.

Old St. Bartholomew's Made Into "Pershing Club"—The old St. Bartholomew's church building on Madison Avenue and Forty-fourth Street has been turned into a War Camp Community club as the "Pershing Club" and "Pershing Theatre." The new club is within a block of the new Pershing Square, as the open space in front of the Grand Central Station has been named.

BOSTON

The Clerical Association—The Clerical Association held its regular monthly meeting and luncheon at the City Club on Monday (Jan. 11). Dr. D. D. Addison presided and introduced the speaker, the Rev. T. C. Campbell, who for the past eight months has been doing Red Cross work at the hospital at Salisbury Court. Mr. Campbell's address was based on his experiences in England.

Service for Boys at Trinity Church—On Wednesday evening an inspiring service for the boys of the diocese was held at Trinity Church. The members of all boys' societies in the parishes within convenient distance were invited to attend and over 400 responded. The Knights of King Arthur, Galahads, Boy Scouts and others in uniform and regalia formed with the choir and the clergy a long and most striking procession. The Rev. John Moses acted as master of ceremonies and there were addresses by Dean Rousmaniere and Archdeacon Dennen. The arrangements for the meeting were in charge of Mr. Joseph F. Wilson, the boys' work counselor for the archdeaconry.

CHARLES CHASE WILSON.

PITTSBURGH

Death of Dr. Grange—At his home in Pittsburgh, on Thursday, January 9, the Rev. Robert Waddington Grange, D.D., rector emeritus of the Church of the Ascension, Pittsburgh, entered into rest. He was born in Muncy, Pennsylvania, in 1846; was educated at Racine College, and graduated from Nashotah Theological Seminary; was admitted deacon by Bishop McCoskry of Michigan, in 1871, and advanced to the priesthood by the same bishop in 1872. He came to Pittsburgh in 1889 to become the first rector of the Church of the Ascension. Dr. Grange was for many years a member of the Standing Committee, and held other positions of prominence in the affairs of the diocese.

The funeral services were held at the Church of the Ascension on Saturday afternoon. Those taking part were the Rt. Rev. Boyd Vincent, of Southern Ohio; the Rev. Dr. Vance, president of the Standing Committee, the Rev. L. F. Cole and Dr. J. H. Melvaine, old-time friends, the Rev. R. E. Schulz, a former assistant of Dr. Grange in the parish.

SACRAMENTO

Collections Difficult—The epidemic has affected the attendance at churches throughout the diocese and made collections difficult. Some parishes are fully paid in all obligations to rector, diocese and missions at the end of the fiscal year, forming a noteworthy honor roll in this time of stress.

For Armenia—Bishop Moreland sent the following telegram to Bishop Greer of New York in reply to the latter's request for co-operation in securing Armenia for the Armenians:—

"The soul of Christendom will be outraged if any bargain is made with the Turk. Future wars will surely break forth and our civilization will deserve to perish if the Armenians are left under the cruel reign of Ottoman butchers. Make the protest of American Christianity as strong and unanimous as possible, and urge the archbishops to inflame the righteous indignation of the Christian people of England."

A Chaplain's Work—The Rev. Mark Rifenbark, rector of St. John's Church, Marysville, has been acting as civilian chaplain at Mare Island Navy Yard where he served acceptably both the officers with their families, and thousands of enlisted men. At the request of the authorities the Church Reading Room at the barracks is being continued, serving a useful purpose, and Chaplain Rifenbark continues his ministrations. He is planning, however, to withdraw at an early date and return to his important parish duties.

ALABAMA

Becomes Chaplain—The Rev. J. F. Plummer, until recently rector of All Saints' Church, Mobile, and since September in charge of the missions of Mobile and Baldwin Counties, has accepted a commission as chaplain in the army, and on January 1 reported for duty as hospital chaplain at one of the government hospitals in South Carolina.

Increase in Income of 50 Per Cent.—The final returns from the Every Member Canvass in the parishes of Mobile show a net increase for all purposes of over 50 per cent in the pledged income of the Church in that city.

For the Board of Mission—Mrs. J. H. Johnson, a member of St. Peter's Parish, Talladega, has presented to the Diocesan Board of Missions, for use in the Convocation of Mobile, a beautiful Communion service including a full supply of linen and silk burse and veil. The chalice was made from a Sheffield silver cup which had been the property of her family for many generations.

The Open Forum

The Roman Practice

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

In the "Administration of the Chalice," Dr. Slattery says, "The Roman Church is not perplexed by the problem, because for centuries, it has not administered the chalice to the laity. . . . There is no doubt that Communion under one kind is complete; but we feel instinctively that there is loss." Thank God, he acknowledges the loss; because we may hope that his pity for needy souls for whom Christ died may yet bring him whole-heartedly to contend with us that our people may continue to enjoy the special grace of the chalice. The only authority he quotes against himself is the late Dr. Creighton. Note how much Roman Catholic authority supports Dr. Slattery's "instinctive" conclusion. It is well known that Francesco Blanco, present at the Council of Trent, as Bishop of Orenze, later Archbishop of Campestello, declared that the council unanimously held that more grace was given by receiving both kinds, than one. A later theologian when asked, "Does more grace flow from Christ through both kinds than through one?" points out that to dwell on the oneness of Christ is to dodge the question, although puzzling a simple mind. Dr. Slattery has many Roman Catholic theologians upholding his "instinctive" conclusion—many, but not all.

Is his statement of Roman practice accurate? He omits to mention the Uniats, who number so many in this country as to have their bishop. Their adults generally communicate under both kinds received together by a spoon, a practice more apt to spread disease than our own; raising the same problem. They meet it by disregarding it. If our own authorities exercise a like "masterly inactivity," our people will enjoy the blessing of the chalice and one ecclesiastical Bolsheviki will fail. In Russia, the Bolsheviki overthrew the discipline of the army man-made; ours would demoralize the army of the Lord by urging the avoidance of the chalice directed by Christ. We hear, ad nauseam perhaps, that the returning soldiers will demand a real religion; yet some urge us to narrow our obedience to our Captain and make it increasingly unreal. Oppose them by argument and prayer. The well known Anima Christi is a good prayer for us to use, as it centers around the chalice.

D. CONVERS.

The Chalice

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

At last we are getting some sense into the discussion regarding the danger from the chalice. A doctor of medicine tells us that all intelligent persons ought to have known before that the Creator of man has placed in his blood the natural antidote to the germs of disease, in the phagocytes or white blood corpuscles which attack and feed on not only disease germs, but other extraneous matter that the system needs to get rid of. This fact has been known for more than thirty years. God has done His part. Our part is to see that we do not weaken or destroy by excesses the conservative power of these phagocytes. Alcoholism and other excesses lay us open to the attack of disease germs, because it kills or weakens our natural defenders.

I wish to emphasize and lay great stress upon another most practical statement made by our good physician. I have lived seventy-three years and spent over forty-two in the ministry and have paid much attention to the causes of disease and death, and I never even heard of one case where physician or layman claimed to have received harm from the common cup. The present agitation appears to me positively childish. "They were afraid where no fear was," an excess of fear like many other excesses is just the thing to put us in condition to succumb to the attacks of disease germs, about which the average person knows nothing. I have even heard them call them "bugs." "In quietness and confidence shall be your strength." Let us believe our Lord and Master knew what He was doing in instituting the Lord's Supper, even if He did not know all the revelations of modern science. J. M. BATES.

No Confiscation

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

I am puzzled by Mr. Jessup's protesting article about the recommendation by the Joint Commission on Social Service in its "Peace Message," of the British Labor Party's after-the-war platform. He evidently has a document before him quite different from the program in question. It has, in my copy, no planks No. "15," "18," "25," etc. It nowhere advocates confiscation of all accumulation of wealth, or anything of that sort. It consists of four planks, or as it terms them, "pillars" and it contains good, downright Catholic Christian ethics. Evidently Mr. Jessup has the wrong coon up a tree.

If the Joint Commission needs any defenses for commending this program to the Church's constituency, such are not lacking. One might mention Bishop Gore's speech at Cooper Union, the book entitled The Great Conflict, by that distinguished Jesuit, Fr. Husslein of Fordham, and the expression of opinion by Bishop Brent that this program constitutes one of the greatest spiritual utterances of the war.

If Mr. Jessup cannot understand these and other expressions of spiritual implications in this document, he probably will when he gets the right document.

May I, for one, in conclusion, express disagreement with Mr. Jessup's whole attitude? Is the Church to decline ever to criticize the State? If this is what is meant by "the separation of Church and State" wherein are we better than our sometime dear German ecclesiastical brethren?

One of my boys at Great Lakes has read this letter and says to me, "Since A. D. 300 or thereabouts the Church has more or less licked Caesar's boots. Shoe-polish creates dyspepsia."

I am glad that Mr. Jessup admits the right of the Church to advocate "educational reform." That happens to be the one place where most Americans resent ecclesiastical criticism the most.

"From a Soldier to His Chaplain"

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

Under this heading, in the "For Country" department of THE CHURCHMAN of December 28, is reproduced a letter "written by a wounded man in a base hospital." The letter is as ignorantly as it is no doubt sincerely written, and its publication is to be deplored as a betrayal of a man's misfortunes, and violation of the confidence in which a priest should hold such matters. It would seem to have been made public more for the purpose of exploiting the chaplain than for any message it could convey to the public mind. The sympathy of the undersigned is solely and unreservedly with the soldier who might by this means sustain a wound of the spirit more painful than those wounds of the body from which, perhaps, he was suffering when he wrote the letter. Communion for Nurses

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

Looking to a quickening of the spiritual life among hospital nurses the Guild of St. Barnabas for Nurses is shortly to issue a questionnaire to its chaplains to ascertain the convenient hour for holding a Communion service for them. Does the hospital schedule permit it, and if so can a nurse get her breakfast after a service before going on duty? I have been asked to express an opinion on this subject, though my chief experience has been with army nurses mobilizing in New York for overseas service. In this work we were compelled to hold our Communion services for units on the eve of departure at hours conforming to Government requirements, and often these were afternoon hours.

At the debarkation hospital at Fox Hills, Staten Island, where I have latterly been acting as one of the chaplains of our War Commission, we have met the requirements of the nurses by choosing the hour of six in the morning. At this service, on the first Sunday in January, more than half of the nurses in residence attended and most of them received the Communion. More than 50 per cent are student nurses, not yet on night duty, who have enlisted in response to the urgent appeals of the Government.

I consider this problem of ministering to the spiritual needs of nurses a very important one just at this time, for having ministered at St. Paul's Chapel, in one way and another, to nearly all of the eleven thousand nurses now in foreign service, I am convinced that there is latent in the great majority of them a strong religious motive which is seeking to express itself. I saw this when I was asked to pray with smaller groups of them, or when from 60 to 90 per cent of a unit of 100 members came forward to receive the Communion. They were volunteers all, and though perhaps not realizing it, went forth with the spirit of the crusader, under the banner of the crimson cross.

Originally young women took up nursing as a vocation. Then it became with many a profession. The war has brought back the service ideal again. It is within the power of the Church to develop, direct and spiritualize this conception of a high calling. THOMAS J. CROSBY.

How the Colonel Met Death

A DEFORMED elevator man said to one of his passengers the other day, "I am sorry that the Colonel died just as he did without knowing he was going to die. He was always such a brave man; it would have helped the rest of us to know just how he would have met death and what he would have said."

The New Books

The Problem of Evil

THE JUSTIFICATION OF GOD. By P. T. Forsyth, M.A., D.D., Principal of Hackney College, Hampstead. Charles Scribner's Sons, New York, 1917. 90c.

The "problem of evil" runs thus: How can a God be good if He permits evil when He has power to prevent it? Principal Forsyth's answer given at large in this volume is that the problem cannot be solved, but that our trouble over it may be relieved. There is no answer in philosophy, but there is relief in the Cross. Our question is: How can God be good? Relief comes when the Cross shows us. At any rate He is good. In the Cross speaks the demand of God's holiness, recognized and admitted by Christ when He offers Himself in atonement. God makes the moral demand upon humanity and God in humanity meets it Himself. This absolute assertion of a standard of holiness, this bowing of Man to this standard, is the proof that behind the veil of things Goodness reigns supreme. The problem is not solved, but its solution is rendered needless. The trouble of soul that arose from it is calmed. The only use of solving it would be to assure us once more that God is really good, and this the Atonement tells us without waiting for a solution. "The riddle is insoluble, but the fact is sure." "It is we who are at a loss, it is not God."

The awful tragedy of the world today brings for religion one priceless gain. It crushes the weak humanitarian religion of the day which rested upon God's love and forgot the awful majesty of His holiness, only to be appeased by repentance and self-abasement. Religion had become soft. Conscience had become comfortable and indulgent. Religion was slipping into a mere man-service instead of a God-service, forgetting that the man-service can but follow from God-service and never be central or foremost. In a word the supreme use of the present suffering and sin is to remind us of the Cross in which God's true claim upon man and man's true loyalty to it are forever manifest. Christianity was becoming such a fair-weather religion as to question whether there was any inherent evil in human nature, whether human progress was not gradually putting away the grosser things and ripening life and manners to a fairer likeness. It was wondering whether the satanic in life had not been grossly exaggerated. Well the present state of this world is the answer. It seemed as if man hardly needed redemption. This war shows us the need, shows us the abyss that lies beneath the holiness of God.

The book is full from end to end of that peculiar eloquence, that smouldering fire of imaginative thought, that pregnant sententious quality of style that belongs to Principal Forsyth. He will fill a sentence almost too full of suggestion and feeling. Yet in spite of this, or because of this, he is never content with his own statements and the book is diffuse and long-drawn, abounding in repetitions. Though so drawn out, it is difficult, wanting in perfect clarity. When all is over we have to put the links of thought together by our own work, and that, where the author has expended so much energy, is a pity. On the main point of the book's teaching, that our religion has been humanism instead of reverent awe before the moral majesty of God's perfection, here are merely two sides of one truth, and what is needed is not to swing away from either, but to see how they are united. The righteousness that God claims of man is in truth a service, a helpfulness. The duties are for the sake of their usefulness to all concerned. They are a service of God because He demands them for man's sake and works within us toward their better performance. They are a service of man because they do actually subserve man's happiness. Principal Forsyth is one of that innumerable company of writers who set up morality as an object of worship while forgetting the end for which God wills it. He writes as though morality were everything and happiness little or nothing, failing to perceive that the rules of morality exist in the interest of the general happiness. Therefore he has not the key to the riddle of this or any age. His earnestness, his moral passion and his sense of the sublime in religion are impressive, but he has taken the wrong road at the outset of his journey. The evil in the world is deep and desperate as he sees it to be, but it is evil because it lacerates and shatters the happiness that God in His love would give to man, because it foils God's loving will. Dr. Faunce's DePauw Lectures

RELIGION AND WAR. By William Herbert Perry Faunce, President of Brown University. The Abingdon Press, New York. 1918. $1.00.

These lectures by Dr. Faunce were delivered on the Mendenhall foundation at DePauw University. They are a very clear and convincing setting-forth of the attitude the Christian religion should take towards the war. The first two lectures deal with the attitude towards war of the Old and New Testaments. Dr. Faunce says nothing new, but he does say many things in a more interesting manner than they have been said before.

The lectures on the Pacifism of the Rationalists is very informing, but best of all is the lecture entitled "Light on The Cloud." Why could we not have done before the war the fine service the war has compelled us to do? he asks:

"We have made great camps sanitary and wholesome places to live in. Why did we not do the same thing for the factory villages? We have surrounded the camps with a 'barred zone.' Could we not surround the college and bank and the mill with a zone of protection for young and eager manhood? We have fed the Belgians nobly; could we not feed the slums of New York? We have prayed fervently since the war came; why did we not pray before?"

These are some of the searching questions Dr. Faunce asks; and to these and other perplexing problems he gives—we are glad to say—a hopeful and reassuring answer.

These things will be done when Christian love shall rule—as it surely shall rule—the re-constructed world. H. J. M.

Values of the Christian Life

VALUES OF THE CHRISTIAN LIFE. By Alfred Davenport Kelly, M.A., of the Society of the Sacred Mission; with a preface by the Rev. William Temple. New York. The Macmillan Company. 1918. $2.50.

It is a great relief to find a book dealing with subjects of pure theology which is neither dull, prolix, abstruse, nor dry. Father Kelly has achieved this. He discusses the leading aspects, or values, of Christian life and faith, which he groups under the Claims of God, of Christ, of the Church, the Sacraments, and of religious practices, with a directness, conviction and clearness that is as refreshing as it is rare.

He writes in a strictly formal manner (the scholastic method brought up to date), but with such continual reference to present thinking and experience that the sense of formality is lost entirely; we have the impression of something perfectly logical expressed with crystalline clarity. No one can miss the argument, because the book is devoid of padding. The style is to the point and touched both with wit and humour. If the reader does not agree with the positions taken, he will be forced in sheer self-defense to find a reason for the faith or the lack of faith that is in him. The positions, it may be said, are those of historic Catholicism, but stated with a reasonableness of proportion that disarms prejudice. It is one of the few books I have ever read that I think every one else ought to read, and which I feel sure they will be the better and the happier for reading. Moreover, it is beautifully printed, so that it is a pleasure to look at and to handle it. L. G.

SAINTE CHANTAL, 1572-1641; A Study in Vocation. By E. K. Sanders, S. P. C. K., London, 10s 6d net; The Macmillan Company, New York. 1918.

The purpose of this devotional and inspiring book is to show as the author phrases it the reality of the true vocation to religion. Jeanne-Françoise Frémoyt is not widely known in spite of the monumental biographies in her native tongue. This instructive history of her personal development will be welcomed by all who are interested in the assertion of the supernatural element in ordinary life. S.

Japanese Buddhism

STUDIES IN JAPANESE BUDDHISM. By August Karl Reischauer. The Macmillan Company, New York. 1918. $2.00.

Of all the oriental religions, Japanese Buddhism is the most difficult to understand. Gathered from various sources and influenced by many other religious movements it has accumulated a mass of elaborate and often contradictory detail which obscures the philosophical background. Even when the surface confusion has been mastered and a glimpse caught of the fundamental principles, they only define a new difficulty by showing that the religion at its simplest is a compound of Shinto, Confucianism and Buddhism.

The three old religions of Japan have interpenetrated each other so completely that the average Japanese, for instance, has regarded himself as more or less the adherent of all three. It is Buddhism, however, which supplies the matrix that holds the various elements together and so may be said to represent all three in one.

This volume represents the work of eleven years in Japan and seems the most comprehensive and open-minded book that has been published in English. It traces the Buddhist origin, follows the historical development of the various Japanese sects and gives a summary of Buddhist ethics. In its closing chapter it compares the relative appeal of Christianity and Buddhism to the Japanese. It is becoming increasingly important to understand Japan in order to gauge the help and mould the part it is to play in the future.

And so even if Buddhism should be a dried up stream as many seem to think, the river bed which it has made through Japanese lips and the boulders it has left will determine to a greater or lesser degree the direction of the new currents of life which are flowing into this land from other sources.

The Mysticism of the Commonplace

THE BETROTHAL. By Maurice Maeterlinck. Dodd, Mead and Company. New York. 1918. $1.50.

No modern writer, certainly no writer of drama, equals Maurice Maeterlinck in power of spiritual penetration. Indeed he has a depth of discernment into the mysticism of the commonplace, an ability to probe the souls of things, which places him in a class apart from any other mystic. The mediaeval writers and those who have continued the mediaeval tradition, are absorbed entirely with the Reality of Divinity outside of the tangible and visible things among which we move and have our being. Maeterlinck has understood the Divine Reality that animates the things of daily life, the souls of Bread and Sugar, the Joy of spiritual love in the woodcutter's cottage.

The Betrothal carries on the story of The Blue Bird. Light takes Tytyl on another journey in which he learns the meaning of love. He learns what it means in his relation to the whole of life—to his ancestors who live in him and in whom he lives, to his children in whom he lives and who live in him. The play, which by the way is being acted most exquisitely in New York under the management of Winthrop Ames, transports one from the life "out there" to the life "in here," for it all takes place within the heart of Tytyl. No one who has the opportunity should fail to see the play presented. But that is not enough. Maeterlinck's thought is too deep and his lines too instinct with vitality for the mere seeing of the play to be sufficient. The Betrothal with The Blue Bird must take its place on the bookshelf of all who make it a habit to travel with Fairy Berylune and Light into the Kingdom of Reality.

A Passionate Biography

ONE OF THEM. By Elizabeth Hasanovitz. Houghton Mifflin Company, New York. 1918. $2.00.

None of us in these days can ignore the suffering and the rights of labor. We all wear ready-made clothing of some sort and therefore are all personally responsible for the conditions under which it is made. The Consumers' League has done wonders but the size of its membership list shows how careless many of us are, and that we need to have our consciences stimulated by such a book as One of Them. The subtitle, "Chapters from a Passionate Autobiography," gives an indication of the fire of intensity with which the subject is treated. Written by a Russian immigrant, a girl of good education, who was obliged to go into the sweat shops of New York to keep from starving, it gives a drearily convincing picture of the life of a garment worker and of the heroic efforts of this particular individual as a member of the Garment Makers' Union to improve conditions in the clothing trade. Atlantic Mutual Insurance Co.

Atlantic Building 51 Wall Street New York
 Insures against Marine and Inland Transportation Risk and will issue policies making loss payable in Europe and Oriental countries.

Chartered by the State of New York in 1842, was preceded by a stock company of a similar name. The latter company was liquidated and part of its capital, to the extent of $100,000, was used, with consent of the stockholders, by the Atlantic Mutual Insurance Company and repaid with a bonus and interest at the expiration of two years.

During its existence the company has insured property to the value of $30,949,773,989.00. Received premiums thereon to the extent of $312,671,550.90. Paid losses during that period $152,928,388.68. Issued certificates of profits to dealers $96,523,710.00. Of which there have been redeemed $90,801,110.00. Leaving outstanding at present time $5,722,600.00. Interest paid on certificates amounts to $24,494,668.95. On December 31, 1917, the assets of the company amounted to $18,041,890.25.

The profits of the company revert to the assured and are divided annually upon the premiums terminated during the year, thereby reducing the cost of insurance.

For such dividends, certificates are issued subject to dividends or interest until ordered to be redeemed, in accordance with the charter.

Philip Gibbs' Dispatches

FROM BAPAUME TO PASSCHENDAELE. By Philip Gibbs. George H. Doran Company. New York. 1918. $2.50.

There is no one among the newspaper correspondents of the Great War who has done more to give the English, American and colonial publics a graphic idea of the details of trench and battlefield than has Philip Gibbs, the correspondent at the British front for the London Daily Chronicle and the New York Times. Mr. Gibbs not only knew the field with rare intimacy, he knew also how to depict what he had seen in language at once vivid and restrained. There are few correspondents whose style is so sensitive and so finished. It is therefore to be expected that his daily letters will remain as part of the permanent history of the war. From Bapaume to Passchendaele contains the dispatches written in 1917 and tells the story of the retreat from the Somme, the battles of Arras, Messines, and Flanders. This makes the third volume of war records published in book form by Philip Gibbs. J. H.

A Prisoner in Germany

INTERNED IN GERMANY. By Henry C. Mahoney. New York. Robert M. McBride and Company. 1918. $2.00.

This is a straightforward interesting account of the experiences of a Britisher who, passing through Germany en route for Russia at the outbreak of the war, was arrested as a spy, and though not found guilty, was imprisoned at Sennelager and Klingelputz, and later interned in the infamous Ruhleben Internment Camp. There he spent twelve months and finally escaped. One of the amazing incidents recorded is the split in the camp caused by an element of renegade English, who from long contact with the Germans amongst whom they had lived, had become pro-German in their sympathies. OBITUARY

THE RT. REV. FREDERICK COURTNEY

The death of the Right Reverend Frederick Courtney, D.D., formerly Bishop of Nova Scotia, Rector of St. James' Church, Madison Avenue and 71st Street, New York, from Christmas Day, 1903, to October 31, 1915, and afterwards Rector Emeritus until his death on December 29, 1918, has removed one who had long been distinguished in the Church for the soundness of his faith, for his power as a preacher, for his culture and diction, for his spiritual influence and for the dignity of his bearing.

Well known to the people of the Diocese of New York, first as an assistant at St. Thomas' Church, and later, after having been for some years Bishop of the Diocese of Nova Scotia, as Rector of St. James' Church, he was in constant demand for services both within and without the Church, and became identified with several prominent societies, such as the Church Temperance Society, of which he was for some years the President, the British Schools and Universities, of which he was for a time the President, and the St. George's Society, of which he was for a time Chaplain. Through these associations, through his work in the Parish of St. James and in the Diocese, and through a large sphere of other activities maintained, notwithstanding his advanced years, up to the time of his recent illness, he became very widely known among the laity and men of affairs, and he was looked up to and consulted continually by a large number of the clergy.

His work at St. James' Church laid the foundations of sound faith and substantial progress. His conduct of the services and of the affairs of the parish was marked by dignity, forcefulness and beauty. His sympathy, charm and fine attributes of character endeared him to all his people.

The Vestry of St. James directs that this Minute be placed upon their records in testimony of their regard and as an expression of their sense of personal loss and of sympathy with his family, and that a copy be engrossed and signed by the Rector and the Clerk of the Vestry.

F. RAYMOND LEFFERTS, JR.,
Clerk.

FRANK WARFIELD CROWDER,
Rector.

The Rev. John Taylor Huntington, Doctor in Divinity, Rector Emeritus of St. James' Parish, Hartford, Connecticut, entered into eternal rest, January 4th, 1919, in his 89th year. Funeral services were held in St. James' Church, January 8th. Rt. Rev. C. B. Brewster, D.D. Bishop of Connecticut, officiating, assisted by Rev. R. R. Parker, Rev. F. W. Harriman, D.D., Rev. James W. Bradin, Rev. Mabel S. Luther, L.L.D., Rev. J. J. McCook, D.D., Rev. Francis Goodwin, D.D. and Rev. George T. Linsley. Interment was in Cedar Hill Cemetery.

January Sale of Damask Table Cloths and Napkins

THIS January Sale at "The Linen Store" offers an opportunity to purchase Table Linens of regular McCutcheon quality at prices which in many cases are lower than we can buy these same Linens at wholesale today.

We are able to make these low prices because we made provision during 1916 and 1917 against the present scarcity and high prices prevailing in the Linen Market.

Note the following low prices on all Pure Linen Cloths and Napkins, and observe the wide range of these prices:

Napkins (Dozen)

22 x 22 in., $5.75, 6.50, 7.00, 7.75, 8.50, to $20.00.
26 x 27 in., $11.25, 11.75, 12.75, 14.00, 16.50, to $50.00.

This is an opportunity that will probably not be duplicated for years, and one that no housekeeper can afford to overlook.

Table Cloths (Each)

2 x 2 yds., $5.50, 6.75, 7.00, 7.50, 8.00, to $16.00.
2 x 2½ yds., $6.75, 7.00, 7.50, 8.00, 9.00, to $19.50.
2¼ x 2¼ yds., $7.00, 8.25, 9.50, 10.50, 11.50, to $20.50.
2¼ x 3 yds., $10.50, 11.75, 12.50, 13.00, 14.00, to $27.50.

Longer and larger Cloths in stock at proportionate reductions. Some longer Cloths without Napkins at very much reduced prices.

Books About the War

Theodore Roosevelt's Last Book

THE GREAT ADVENTURE, PRESENT-DAY STUDIES IN AMERICAN NATIONALISM. By Theodore Roosevelt. Charles Scribner's Sons, New York. 1918. $1.00.

Colonel Roosevelt died as the reviewer was completing his perusal of what will presumably be the last product of a singularly fertile pen. The author will always be ranked among the great Americans, and both his high place in the esteem of the people, and the character of the works invite for it unusual attention.

In a recent issue of The Atlantic Monthly Katherine Fullerton Grould has published a striking article called "The Remarkable Rightness of Rudyard Kipling." In these essays the author shows how often the great English writer was proved by subsequent events to be a real prophet, though he had spoken to unheeding ears. One may safely predict that when the history of the American Government for the period of the Great War is dispassionately set forth, some one could take The Great Adventure, and from its wealth of material compose a telling essay on "The Remarkable Rightness of Theodore Roosevelt."

Among many matters of interest two points stand out rather sharply. One is the author's contention for a sound and thorough Americanism. He believes firmly in the loyal Americanism of most citizens of foreign birth or parentage, but he would exclude the use of the German language from schools and churches and newspapers. The other point is his vigorous arraignment of the Administration, and especially of the War Department.

There is altogether too good reason to believe that by procrastination and muddling our preparation for war left much to be desired. When our men finally got to the front, and indeed it was at the last stroke of the eleventh hour, they fought as bravely as any troops that ever faced an enemy. But they would never have been able to get into the lines at all if poor, hard-pressed France, and weary England had not supplied them with most of the outfit for war save their rifles, their food and their heroic souls. It is a confirmation of Colonel Roosevelt's indictment that General Pershing, in his admirable report of the American operations, refers to the dependence upon France for artillery, aviation and tanks, and says—and the frank words are a bit humiliating—"at the time the armistice was signed we were able to look forward to the early supply of practically all our necessities from our own factories." Two Women in France

HOME FIRES IN FRANCE. By Dorothy Canfield. Henry Holt and Company. 1918. $1.35.
FINDING THEMSELVES. By Julia C. Stimson. The MacMillan Company. 1918. $1.25.

It is difficult in these days of enthusiastically heralded and reviewed war books to convey a true impression of this exceptional book of short stories. Dorothy Canfield's "attempt" (as she modestly calls it) to make Americans understand French people, is more nearly an achievement. With the exception of the framework of the stories, the author says that everything which happens to anybody in France of whom she has had personal knowledge. The stories tell what the war has done to the French people. They are full of the essence and flavor of France, and are simple and vivid and human.

From France also, Miss Stimson (chief nurse of the St. Louis Red Cross Unit which was sent abroad in May, 1917), tells in letters to her family her experiences at a British base hospital established in the outskirts of Rouen. They were not written with the idea of being published, and are overburdened with details of personal, rather than of universal interest. One wishes, too, that at some previous period of her existence, Miss Stimson had displayed as much interest in the study of English, as war necessities made her display in the study of French. But these are trivial criticisms in the face of this record of the splendid work accomplished by a group of women, who, rejoicing in the opportunity to serve, experienced unimaginable personal discomforts and all sorts of horrors in caring for thousands of wounded soldiers. The unadorned straightforwardness of this day-to-day record makes it a book to be avoided by people (if there be any such) who do not care to have the war brought too closely home to them.

The Peace Terms

THE RECKONING. By James M. Beck. G. P. Putnam's Sons. New York and London. 1918. $1.50.
ALLIED AND AMERICAN PEACE TERMS. By Samuel A. B. Mercer. The Morehouse Publishing Company. Milwaukee. 1918. 60c.
THE PEOPLE'S PART IN PEACE. By Ordway Tead. Henry Holt and Company. New York. 1918. $1.10.

By his writings and his speeches, James M. Beck has won an enviable place in the esteem of that large body of Americans who from the beginning of the war were impelled by their moral judgment to take a stand against Germany, and who saw that the cause was ours as much as England's. The Reckoning is a sequel to the justly popular The Evidence in the Case and The War and Humanity. In the latest production there is the characteristic moral insight, abundant learning, clean thinking, and lucid exposition of his thesis.

The main point for which he contends is the isolation of Prussia from the rest of Germany, because Prussia has corrupted the peace loving instincts of the Germans, and in the past has brought on so many wars purely for the increase of Prussian power. This position sometimes leads him to differ with President Wilson, but his criticism is always temperate, and his tone kindly, save where he speaks of the brutal Prussians.

Dr. Mercer's little book shows that he is singularly well informed in regard to the rather complex problem of the mixed races and tongues of the nations of the Eastern continent. He makes it clear that in many cases the national boundaries are arbitrary and artificial, and he attempts to show what the groupings will be if nations are made to include only people which belong together. His treatment serves to suggest what the new eastern world will be if the Peace Conference does its work on scientific lines.

One difficulty is to discover a principle by which the affinities of a people may be determined. The author holds that there are four determinants of nationality, language, geography, politics, and history. One minor result of the affiliation of these determinants is the conclusion that Luxembourg should be annexed to Germany. The world is hardly prepared today to add anything to the nation which has so wantonly abused its power.

The character of Mr. Tead's interesting book may be briefly indicated by stating his object, by employing his own words: "This essay has been written," he says, "to suggest how the people may play a real part in the rearing of a just, democratic, and stable peace. It has maintained the simple thesis that effective representative control of all the major economic forces and agencies of the world is essential."

The author does not question that political interests must have a place in the new era, but he is convinced that an economic internationalism is the only solution of the world's pressing problem. As the reader follows the argument, he is impressed with the bigness of the scheme, and wonders if it is capable of realization. L. W. B.

A Common Type

THE WAR WORKERS. By E. M. Delafield. Alfred A. Knopf. New York. $1.50.

This is a clever satire on a sharply defined type of war-worker not uncommon in England and not entirely unknown in the United States—efficient to a degree; tireless, but at the same time egotistical, selfish and utterly careless of the welfare of subordinates in a common service. A happy relief to a somewhat sordid character study is afforded by a delightful picture of an English ancestral home. E. C. C.

On a German Raider

A CAPTIVE ON A GERMAN RAIDER. By F. G. Trayer. Robert M. McBride and Company. New York. 1918. $1.25.

Mr. Trayer's story of his captivity on a German raider is told with great moderation and restraint. He and his wife were captured on the Japanese steamship Hitachi Maru while en route from Singapore to Delagoa Bay. Transferred to another of the raider's prizes, the prisoners were kept sailing back and forth over every ocean but the Antarctic for seven months. The German officers sailed their captive vessel from the Indian Ocean to the Pacific, around the Cape of Good Hope to the coast of Brazil, through the north Atlantic to Iceland, only to run ashore on the coast of Denmark, within one day's sail of Kiel, their port of destination. The book offers an excellent illustration of the unnecessary hardships of modern warfare as conducted by enlightened exponents of German kultur. D. N. A.

PROHIBITION

BY THE REV. GILBERT E. PEMBER

EVERYONE recognizes that the problem of intemperance is one of the pressing and urgent social questions. We must face it. But it ought to be approached with careful thought and receive calm judgment. Instead of that there is an amazing amount of confused thinking, much shallow sentimentality, and not a little hysteria. It is generally conceded that temporary prohibition as a war measure for the conservation of food-stuffs is right, wise, and perhaps necessary. But temporary prohibition as a war measure is quite a different thing from adopting a permanent policy by putting prohibition in the Constitution. The appeal for the constitutional amendment on this ground is a clear case of unfair special pleading. So also is the plea constantly made that we should have prohibition because we ought not to be enjoying something denied to our men in the army and navy.

There are three quite distinct attitudes toward alcohol used as a beverage:

1. Total abstinence. This means never using it in any form. As a safe course no one can question the wisdom of that.

Training for Authorship

How to write, what to write, and where to sell.

Dr. Esenwein

Cultivate your mind. Develop your literary gifts. Master the art of self-expression. Make your spare time profitable. Turn your ideas into dollars.

Courses in Short-Story Writing, Versification, Journalism, Play Writing, Photoplay Writing, etc., taught personally by Dr. J. Berg Esenwein, for many years editor of Lippincott's Magazine, and a staff of literary experts. Constructive criticism. Frank, honest, helpful advice. Real teaching.

One pupil has received over $5,000 for stories and articles written mostly in spare time—"play work," he calls it. Another pupil received over $1,000 before completing her first course. Another, a busy wife and mother, is averaging over $75 a week from photoplay writing alone.

There is no other institution or agency doing so much for writers, young or old. The universities recognize this, for over one hundred members of the English faculties of higher institutions are studying in our Literary Department. The editors recognize it, for they are constantly recommending our courses.

We publish The Writer's Library. We also publish The Writer's Monthly, especially valuable for its full reports of the literary market. Besides our teaching service, we offer a manuscript criticism service.

Probably ninety-nine out of a hundred clergymen are continually giving that advice to young men, and practising it themselves that they may give that advice without the possibility of being misunderstood.

2. Temperance. This means controlled and moderate use. No man's clear right to choose that course can be properly questioned.

3. Intemperance. This means abuse of excessive use, and is clearly and unquestionably sin—and a disgusting and degrading sort of sin, the lowest type of gluttony.

In common usage, quite improperly and without warrant, total abstinence and temperance have become synonymous. And any use of alcohol as a beverage in any degree is classed as intemperance and sinful. There is no warrant in Scripture or reason for this. We all know hundreds of people whose character is above reproach, whose Christian living is sincere and earnest, whose service to their fellows is devoted and real, and who do, on occasion use as a beverage that which contains alcohol. It is manifestly and grossly unjust to denominate such a practice a sin and link it up with intemperance as in any degree the same. Injustice and in temperance of speech and thought is no help to the cause of temperance in meat and drink. And one cannot get away from the fact that it is a pretty dangerous thing to assert that to be per se sinful which our Lord used to be one element in the Sacrament of His Body and Blood.

One must contend for that principle. But this is also clear. The taste for alcohol in excess is easily created, and unless carefully guarded it increases with dangerous rapidity; and when once out of control becomes a fearful and degrading scourge. Drinking for drinking's sake, as typified in the treating habit, would be a piece of stupidity were it not so much a tragedy.

Further still, no man who comes at all closely into the private lives of men, as the doctor and parish priest must, can for a moment be ignorant of the almost incalculable shame and misery, suffering and want, sorrow and crime, growing out of intemperance. There is no sort of question but that intemperance is one of the root evils of society, a festering and putrid sore poisoning innumerable families at the spring of their lives. To deny that is inexcusable ignorance. To ignore it is sheer madness.

The problem must be faced and solved. But how? Prohibit the manufacture and sale of it. That is the method proposed to us. And it is proposed on a big scale. It has long been tried on a small scale in various parts of the country, where they have had state prohibition or local option. Opinions differ as to the success of these attempts. The writer can but voice his opinion that it has been a pretty dismal sort of failure. Eight years of residence in one of the oldest of the prohibition states convinced me that it did not "work" there. Seven years as rector of a parish in a community which, by local option, was dry, and had been for forty years, was an even more bitter experience. There were more cases of intemperance to deal with there in one year than in any three years of ministry in a parish five times as large in a large city. But what is now proposed is nationwide prohibition, and that is quite a different thing. We believe that the Federal Government can and will enforce the law if adopted. There is no force in the argument that because local option has failed, national prohibition must. But is prohibition the right solution? Theoretically and taken as a proposition by itself, prohibition cannot be justified on the grounds of reason or religion.

In the first place, it is clearly an attempt to create virtue by legislation. That is hopeless, even if it is not vicious. You cannot make strong characters by law. Virtue is always the result of a free and deliberate choice between two possibilities, one of which is good and the other bad; and strength of character is the result of habitually making the right choice when it was equally possible to choose the wrong. Prohibition is clearly a return to the Old Testament doctrine of righteousness by works of law, and a departure from the New Testament doctrine of righteousness by the working of grace. The removal of temptation and the possibility of abuse may keep a man innocent, but it does not make him virtuous. Prohibition may compel us to be a sober nation, but it would not at all necessarily follow that we would be a temperate nation, for temperance means self-control, not law control.

In the second place, prohibition penalizes the innocent along with the guilty. It denies wine to the drunkard who abuses it. But it also denies it to the man who never has and never will abuse it. When a man steals money from a bank, we put him in jail in the hope that his punishment will have a redemptive quality and return him to society an honest man, able to meet and conquer the temptations that go with life. We do not act on any such principle as this. Here is a man who is an embezzler; to make it impossible for him to commit that crime again and to make it impossible for any one else to be tempted to do so dreadful a thing, we will abolish banks and prohibit the minting of money. That is ridiculous on the face of it, but it is the principle of prohibition. When a man becomes an inebriate we do not punish him as a burden to his family and a menace to society, we slobber over him, lead him to believe that he really is not to blame, that he is more sinned against than sinning. And we have left him at large so long that he has become a terrifying host in number. If we had put him in jail for six months or a year the first time he got drunk, nine times out of ten there would have been no second offence. But we don't do that and we won't do it, so we are faced with the proposition that we should protect society from this sort of sinner, not by reforming punishment visited on him, but by a penalty inflicted on all.

And in spite of all this I hope the constitutional amendment will be adopted, though it is a great pity that a negation must be put into a constitution. Prohibition is the only way out the American people are willing to try, and it ought to be tried. We are confronted by a condition which demands the exercise of the highest and noblest principle—the bearing of the burdens of the weak by the strong.

The liquor traffic in this country is so inextricably allied with every form of crime and vice, political and social; it is so thoroughly entrenched; so determined; so heartless; so conscienceless; that it is practically impossible for decent people to come to terms with it or have any dealings with it. The American corner saloon is so thoroughly rotten that to reform it is beyond hope. And there are fashionable clubs whose bar-rooms are equally rotten. The only hope seems to lie in utterly destroying them, wiping them out root and branch. Our Contributors

WITH this issue we bring to conclusion Dr. Jeffreys' stimulating series of meditations. THE CHURCHMAN has received many letters showing how wide has been the appreciation of the deep note of reality and spiritual experience struck by these weekly articles. In answer to an inquiry we are glad to announce that a limited number of reprints of these meditations will be bound in pamphlet form and may be secured from Dr. Jeffreys.

THE MANY FRIENDS OF DR. DOWLING who have looked for the return of his Saturday Night Sermons will welcome the announcement that a series of these sermons will begin in our first number in February.

WHENEVER BISHOP VINCENT SPEAKS his counsel or opinion is of interest to the whole Church. We are publishing this week the first of two articles, "Reservation: But Not for Adoration."

THE ARTICLE ON "PROHIBITION," by the Rev. Gilbert E. Pember, rector of St. Michael's Church, Germantown, Philadelphia, was written some months ago. The ratification of the Prohibition Amendment gives interest to the article at this time.

THE REV. FRANK MONROE CROUCH is the secretary of the Joint Commission on Social Service.

Things in General

THE new democracy: Country goes dry and Old Trinity abolishes the pew system.

DR. H. E. FOSDICK in the January Atlantic points out an incongruity of which many parishes are apparently becoming aware:

"Comradeship is the glory of the army, and in that comradeship previous wealth, rank, occupation do not count. Only manhood matters. I do not see how these soldiers are coming home to many of our churches, where pews are owned or rented, and where the congregation is so seated that a man's relative income can be estimated by his comparative distance from the altar of the Lord's sacrifice. The class-divisions in our churches are in ill accord with the democracy of the army. There is a shocking incongruity between an attack at the front—rich and poor, learned and ignorant, prominent and obscure, going over the top together—and a congregation in a wealthy metropolitan church singing,

'Onward Christian Soldiers, marching as to war.'

germs that the only safety lies in destroying it. A garment can become so filthy that it cannot be washed clean, the one safe course is to burn it up. That is the condition we are facing.

And there is a perfectly sound Christian principle which justifies such action under such circumstances. "The strong shall bear the burdens of the weak." Alcohol is not a necessity for any man as a beverage and even its medicinal value is questioned. Men cannot be ignorant of the danger in it. We cannot be ignorant of the corruption in the management of the traffic in it; the fearful misery it entails on the innocent victims in a drunkard's home; its prolific and terrible fruitage of vice and crime, so closely associated with and dependent on the saloon; its corrupting influence in politics. We must confess that we have so muddled the handling of the problem that it is getting beyond bounds. Are men willing to show the strength of character, the love for the weaker brethren and for the whole social brotherhood, which will enable them to say: "We deliberately and voluntarily resign our personal liberty in this matter, not because we are in danger or because the temperate use of wine is in any sense a sin (for it is not); but in order to clean up a nasty mess and start right, we are willing that national prohibition should have a fair trial." To that appeal there can seem to be but one answer and that in the affirmative.

THE AMENDMENT

THE passing of the prohibition amendment to the Constitution means a social revolution of unprecedented significance. It is quite impossible to realize just what it will mean to see a great country like ours with no saloons, no drink evil, no drunkards. We all had ample warning that it was coming, but like the armistice, its suddenness found us unprepared. We can't even now comprehend the meaning of the revolution of custom. To millions of our citizens it is a happy consummation for which they have devoutly prayed. The militant prohibitionists have reason to feel an exultant gratification. They have fought long, persistently, and with political sagacity. They have not always showed the mellow tolerance that makes for loveableness; but reformers have weightier moral ends to further than mere urbanity. They have done their work thoroughly and with an untroubled singleness of mind. They knew what they wanted to do. They have done it. We congratulate them upon a success so tremendous that it paralyzes comment.

Success so overpowering must remind prohibitionists that this victory could never have been won by convinced teetotalers. It was won by a sacrifice, a yielding of custom and preference, on the part of millions of citizens who are not abstainers, who in fact hold views about personal liberty quite contrary to those proclaimed by the prohibitionists. To these citizens, prohibition is a sacrifice involving a kind of discomfiture which perhaps is likely to be too lightly appreciated by the teetotalers. That a considerable body of citizens have been willing to surrender their convenience and even to waive their convictions about personal liberty in order that a great social evil may be rooted out of the land, gives courage to optimists.

FROM THE QUIET PLACES

AT the Lowther Street Congregational Church, Carlisle, Mr. Wilson made one of his shortest but the finest utterances. "What the world now is seeking to do," he said, "is to return to the paths of duty, to turn from the savagery of interests to the dignity of the performance of right. . . . It is from quiet places like this all over the world that the forces are accumulated that presently will overpower any attempt to accomplish evil on a great scale." It is easy for the Church and the home to forget, in these tumultuous days when men are thinking in terms of the whole human race and spanning continents with their plans for human betterment, that the history of a people's soul is always made in the quiet places.

We can hope to send nothing better into the council chambers of the nations than those convictions and purposes which are being moulded in millions of homes and churches, little and big, throughout the land. No treaties of peace can be written into law or enforced by the will of nations which are not sustained by the consciences of individual men. What is being taught today in the home and the churches must finally dominate the nation.

One of the dangers to be encountered in such times as those through which the world has been passing during the last four years is that the sense of personal responsibility may become blunted. In war the Church, the home, and the civilian population gets the militarist mind. We organize our life for certain concrete objects of value to the state. In its purpose of winning the war, our co-operative discipline has a very definite aim. But it is quite possible for an individual as well as a nation to go in for winning the war and yet lose his own soul. Life under all circumstances is a perilous thing, and whatever really fine and great has ever been contributed by a people for the winning of any war has been the cumulative result of many years of ante-bellum discipline.

We sometimes speak as if the war had made the soul of France and Belgium. War never made anything fine or great. It merely revealed in the spending whatever spiritual capital had been given into its hands. If France and Belgium had been at the opening of the war what superficial critics estimated them to be, the war would have been lost by the Allies. They already possessed a soul, or the war would not have discovered one. And that soul was made in the same old-fashioned way in which souls have been made throughout the centuries. The Bible teaches us what that way is. Consequently it is a pretty serious business that is given into the hands of the home and the Church. If a new and better world is in the making today, it is because new and better souls are in the making this very hour in tens of thousands of homes throughout Europe and America. It is because millions of homes in America have a shrine where some high-hearted thoughts and deeds are finding birth, that America is to become the hope of the world. If there is no such shrine in the home, America will play an ignominious part in the new world.

What is needed above everything else now throughout the nation is that the Churches shall keep the home-fires burning. This, henceforth, will not mean canteens, the Red Cross and Liberty Bonds. It will mean a sense of individual responsibility. We need to teach unselfishness with wider implications than we have seen before. We need to cleanse the thoughts of our hearts to discern the path of duty and the will of God. We need, too, to hear a more harmonious and symmetrical Gospel preached than we have been accustomed to hear in most of our churches the last four years. The old themes of religion have been left fallow. We have preached war. We need now to preach the gospel of peace. It is a far more rugged gospel than the militant one which flashes fire and harsh words at the common enemy across the border. And it takes finer souls and a more discerning spirit to preach it than it does to tell war stories and expose an enemy's malevolence and shame. During the war preaching has become almost a lost art in the churches. One must go far to hear a sermon that can stand the tests of good preaching that people were accustomed to apply to the pulpit twenty-five years ago. Never has the country needed great preaching more than it does today. In the babel of dissonant voices which claim to be prophetic, people are listening eagerly for a leadership of the Christian conscience. What would Christ have us to do in this distressful hour of the world's life? What would He have us make of the victory and defeat of civilization? Who will lead us into the paths of peace? Christendom is not speaking to us with any certain voice. May the gift of prophecy again return to the ministry of the Church! Is it the judgment of God that we have lost it? It is in the quiet places that God will speak to his people.

MR. McAFEE ON A GREAT THEME

THERE have been moments when some of us thought that the New Republic lacked humor. Perhaps the editors have got wind of the criticism. At any rate, since Mr. McAfee has been engaged by that estimable group of young men to write about religion, no one will again venture to say that the New Republic isn't funny. Back in December, Mr. McAfee started to tell the Church precisely "where they get off." He is a man of conviction: "The Young Men's Christian Association emerges from the war the dominant religious force in American society." That is not bad for a beginning. Dr. Mott, if he read it, may have squirmed over the responsibility involved in the compliment; but let that pass. Mr. McAfee has other ideas about religion. "A great majority would welcome," so Mr. McAfee asserts, "even drastic measures on the part of the Y. M. C. A. in asserting this leadership. The Association has it in its power to overwhelm and completely sweep aside numerous petty religious factions which have up to now assumed the right to preen themselves in their mischief-making institutions (the Churches, we suppose) among all of our communities." We shall not go farther in giving Mr. McAfee's views about the Y. M. C. A. We are merely whetting the appetite for Mr. McAfee upon other religious themes. Mr. McAfee is not a man of one idea. He has thought the thing through. In December he wrestled with the theme whether the Y. M. C. A. is justified in tolerating the Churches. In January he grips the subject farther down. "Can Christianity Tolerate the Church?" Mr. McAfee thinks not. In fact he knows it can't. "Religion, like every other universal human concern must be brought under community control. Religion is too vital a social function to be monopolized by private corporations."

Will Mr. McAfee wait upon Mayor Hylan and learn the earliest date at which he can take over the Churches of New York City? There is an impetuosity in Mr. McAfee's diction that leads us to believe that he knows more than he is willing to tell. We mustn't wait till the Bolsheviki force our hands. And there is no certainty that the Y. M. C. A. are ready yet to handle all the business of the Churches.

Mr. McAfee, however, is no shallow thinker. He says "It is hard to define Christianity." But this was after he had written seven lucid columns upon the subject. "It is not an institution, it is a spirit," he says. If it is just a spirit, it would doubtless be a simple matter to bring it under community control. Mr. McAfee makes it seem easy. Perhaps he will tell us more about this next week.

THE WEEK

Chronicle and Comment on Current Events

EVERYBODY BOOST!

FOURTEEN American Churches will join in a big drive to raise a $10,000,000 emergency fund for carrying on, during the period of demobilization, the work of the General War-time Commission of the Churches. Bishop Reese, whose leadership as chairman of the executive committee of our own commission has told for efficiency in every part of the work, is the chairman of this interchurch emergency campaign.

Of the ten million dollars which will be raised, the Episcopal Church will receive $250,000 to carry on its own work. What that work is is best told by a cablegram from Bishop Perry:

Of the thousand American army chaplains in France, one hundred and twenty-five are Episcopalians, dependent on the Church War Commission for service equipment and funds to help the soldiers in emergency. Chaplains come from their troops to me in Paris every day for assistance of every sort. With twenty thousand churchmen in the army, hundreds of them in hospitals, the Commission is in constant touch, visiting many, corresponding with all. Now is the time of special need and of great opportunity for the Church.

Everybody will be willing and eager to give to this fund. We are proud of our chaplains. We have reason to be proud of them. The work of the War Commission is very near the heart of Bishop Lawrence. He had intended to take an active part in raising the money. We want to free his mind during his convalescence from any anxiety in this matter. Let us all give generously. February ninth is the date when the offering will be taken in the churches.

AN EMERGENCY, AND A PLAN TO MEET IT

A COMMITTEE consisting of the deans of four of our theological schools, Dean Bartlett, Dean Foscroke, Dean Hodges and Dean Ladd, are asking for the sum of $8,000 for the maintenance of a summer school of theology for students returning from national service. The details of the plan proposed by the deans may be read elsewhere in this number of THE CHURCHMAN. We urge every member of the Church who is interested in our soldiers and interested also in the future of the American Church to read the statement set forth by the committee and then to sit down, write a liberal check, or make as liberal a pledge as he can afford, and send it to Mr. George Zabriskie, Esq., 49 Wall Street, New York City. No churchman, as it seems to us, can question for a moment the urgency of the need or the wisdom of the plan which the deans of the theological schools have proposed.

Theological seminaries have felt very heavily the call which the war has made upon our young men. Many students were drafted upon the eve of their admission into one of the schools; others enlisted in the midst of their seminary course. Within the next few months most of these young men will have returned home and will be seeking to resume their work. The deans of our theological schools in proposing a summer school of theology are planning to meet the same emergency as that which confronts our colleges and universities.

It has been creditable to the Church that the students preparing for the ministry have been no less zealous to respond to the call of the country for soldiers than have the students in institutions of secular learning. For the majority of these students, the interruption of their seminary course has entailed a serious financial disability. The faculties of the seminaries offer their services without remuneration; the students have largely given their time and risked their lives for the country; the Church can do no less than provide the small sum of $8,000 to maintain a summer school.

There is a by-product, likely to emerge from the undertaking, of by no means negligible value. The bringing together of different minds in the Church in such a co-operative organization as the one proposed will, as it seems to us, be inestimably profitable to the seminaries and to the whole Church. There is nothing we need more just now than some such bond of unity among ourselves. We earnestly support the plea for funds which the committee is now making.

AN OFFICIAL RECORD OF GOOD DEEDS

WE wish for every boy scout of America the greatest good time in his experience when he celebrates the scouts' ninth anniversary February 7 to 13. It is surprising to some of us to know that there are now 350,000 scouts in America. It is nothing short of amazing to read the summary of good deeds which the scouts performed during the war. In our news columns this week we publish that list as it was given out at scout headquarters. It will stimulate enthusiasm in any American who reads it. Especially it will delight those daddies whose boys are members of this virile organization. All of us who care for boys—and who does not?—are grateful for this movement which has so successfully organized and directed the best in normal boyhood. We wish that every parish might have its troop of scouts.

INCONCEIVABLE!

WE read in the Guardian that thirty-three Bristol clergy protested against the action of their bishop in permitting a prominent Nonconformist to take part in a cathedral service in commemoration of the armistice. They consider that the bishop thus aids and abets the spread of lawlessness by his condoning schism. We should like to see photographs of the clergy who signed that petition. We suppose that there are such people, but it would be interesting to see what they look like in the flesh. We should find that their eyes are set close together; that they have low receding foreheads; and are hollow above the temples. Perhaps, after all, Mr. McAfee is right.

It is well to add that the bishop was equal to the disgraceful occasion. Dr. Nickson in his reply to the little group of schismatics said that the sin of schism is not solely the fault of the Nonconformists and that today we have no room for watertight compartments in Christianity. He also reminded the little group of wilful men that they had not been remarkable for their obedience to episcopal wishes. Schism is a lily-white virtue in comparison with the stupid pharisaism of such men. They are perfect nonconductors of Christianity. The twenty-third chapter of St. Matthew tells us what they are like. It is as harmful to ordain such men as to ordain the notoriously immoral. More so, perhaps, for they have greater capacity to damage the truth.

What happens in Bristol, England, is not our business. But the temperament is not confined to Bristol. Ecclesiasticism in every country and every age is always hard, cruel, stupid and irreligious. It is the heaviest handicap that Christianity carries. It ought to be hissed off the stage whenever it shows its hateful face. If it were not for ecclesiasticism, Christianity would sweep through the world today like a flame. It will never sweep through the world till the Christians in our Churches who hate ecclesiasticism get the courage to pluck the noxious thing out root and branch. Church unity requires, as well as love, some militant hate. Too much deference has been paid all along to the feelings and convictions of such men. No unity, no claiming the world for Christ till these people are made powerless to do harm!

THE CHALICE, AGAIN

MANY letters, most of them personal, have been received by THE CHURCHMAN concerning the chalice. Since the publication of Dr. Slattery's article on the subject, the solution that he suggested appears to meet with pretty general favor. There are many people in the Church to whom, either from conviction or temperament, any discussion of this problem seems distasteful and irreverent. If such persons were to prevent an open and thorough examination of the problem at this time, it would be a grave mistake. The question can be unwisely and irreverently discussed, but there is a very real problem involved and one that need in no way be repugnant to reverent people. If Dr. Slattery's article should be interpreted to mean a dismissal of the whole subject on the ground that in the chalice there is a physical safety, supernaturally bestowed, we should think such an interpretation would be a misfortune. To quiet the discussion by any such pronouncement would not be a solution of the problem. The value of Dr. Slattery's suggestion lies in its constructive side. He suggested a rubric in the Communion Office which should permit communicants, under certain circumstances, to decline the cup and yet to be assured that Communion in one kind is a valid and complete Communion. "If for any reasons which seem to him sufficient, the communicant shall think he ought not to drink of the wine, let him receive the cup only into his hands, being assured that, having eaten of the bread, he hath verily and indeed spiritually received the Body and Blood of Christ."

The laity finally will decide this question. A good many of them are now deciding it, so far as they personally are concerned, by absenting themselves from the Lord's Table.

SATURDAY NIGHT MEDITATIONS BY A LAYMAN

The Mystical Companionship of Jesus

BY WILLIAM H. JEFFERYS, A.M., M.D.

XIII. The Echoes of Love

Even so, come, Lord Jesus!—Rev. 22: 20.

WE said in our introductory meditation that the goal of the whole adventure of God's love is to be the answer to Christ's prayer for the Church. Suppose we pause and read that prayer once more from beginning to end—St. John 17:1-26. That prayer will be answered as surely as God lives. To have a part in the answer to that prayer is to keep a tryst specially dear to Christ, the tryst of our unity in Him.

If we Christians, claiming to bear His name and sign; if we, His very Body, the Church, had the courage and would really open the door and look upon God's Love—we should then, I suppose, under the blazing glory of Love's appeal, make a desperate attempt at, perhaps accomplish, something approaching an adequate response such as, for instance, to make "Love our one occupation;" to reach up out of the very depths to find and know the Father, Who so greatly loved us, His Love-children—and that response would be the dawn of the coming of Christ.

We look into all eternity for a growing knowledge of God, and companionship with Him is indeed for us the end of the great adventure, but this world, also, is God's. It is the God-given opportunity for character building, for loving, for suffering and for following, which we may not have again; but, above all, I do most certainly myself believe that almost all the wonder of the "eye hath not seen or ear heard" promise, may be approached in this world also for those who love Him. I believe, I know, that through the mystical companionship of Jesus, God may be known to-day, reached out to and found; may be lived with and obeyed by those who believe, trust and loyally follow, seeking Him with mind, heart, soul and strength. I believe that we, being rooted and grounded in love, may be able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height; and to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, and that we may be filled with all the fulness of God. But there is no question that at present we are trifling in our response to Christ.

As long ago as the writing of Locksley Hall men had seen the vision of the world and all the wonder that would be—

Till the war-drum throb'd no longer, and the battle-flags were fur'd

In the parliament of man, the federation of the world.

Then it was an impracticable ideal. To-day its concrete terms are being discussed by the statesmen of the world. As to whether any form of a league of nations will actually become fact in the near future, we do not know; but we do know the principles, and even their imperfect recognition and application have made the unity of nations a living issue. What are these principles? Unquestionably the foundation of the present hope has been Christian missions, which as Dr. Crane says, "Have sub-soiled humanity for years and most of us little appreciate their vast and essential influence in preparing the world-mind for union." Another large factor has been the spreading of commerce and communication over the world—doing things with others, learning as China is learning to-day that our own country is not the Middle Kingdom.

As John D. Rockefeller, Jr., says, "Obviously personal relations among men must exist in order that the spirit of brotherhood may develop. They furnish the friendly soil in which the germ is nourished and grows." And again, Lord Reading, "We must see to it that out of these terrible scenes of horror and desolation which we have witnessed there will arise a more lofty and more noble spirit among the peoples of the world who would understand each other better, who would have greater love for each other as members of the same humanity and who would strive together to concentrate all that there is in them for the preservation of liberty and in particular for justice in the world of the future and for the progress of humanity."

One of the prettiest illustrations of this that I know was what followed the admission of homeopaths into the county medical societies. They and the allopaths had been at loggerheads for centuries and fairly hated each other, excluding each other from everything, calling each other "unscientific" and claiming each for themselves the divine sanction of intelligence. The bottom dropped out of the whole trouble when the homeopaths were admitted to fellowship. The differences became lost in the acceptances and rejections of a common mind. No one gave up anything, no one signed any treaty, or agreed to anybody else's conditions of faith, yet they are becoming one.

The nations of the earth are being drawn together on the basis, not of scraps of paper and agreements to accept each other's form of government or articles of national faith, but on the basis of the recognition of each other as human beings of equal rights to breathe the air that God made and to think the thoughts that God gives them. There will never be a world the nations of which will submit to the arrogant domination of any one nation's culture. Thank God for that! Thank God that we are not to be Prussianized! Thank God, too, that the world is not to be even Americanized; that there will be no rainbow of humanity made up of one dull color, but that the white light of liberty, tolerance and love will be a blending of all the colors of the nations and of all the classes, all the individuals. We cannot desire uniformity, even of saints. It would prove dull, to say the least.

Cannot the Church realize the wonder, the beauty and the basic reality of this principle in all her thoughts on Christian unity? Would we have a Protestant Episcopal world if we could avoid it? And yet, that is apparently what many of us seem to want. Would world-wide Christianity ever submit to the dominance of even the most inclusive of Christian bodies as at present constituted? The very proclamation of a divine authority defined by others, and a chalk-line drawn which must be toed for others, are destructive of the possibility of Christian unity. In a day when even a bishop of the Church says:

How idle to keep on merely running the Church as if it were some business organization whose success may be determined in annually increasing figures. Can we make ourselves believe that this will answer the world's cry for salvation, groaning and toiling in pain, until now, that it is this the Divine Saviour is to see, this and no more, for the travail of His soul and be satisfied. How terribly hopeless our work, how pitifully inconsequent if a Gospel from Heaven can reach to nothing better.

In a day when a bishop of the Church can say that, it is good to know that we have failed because we have been doing the futile thing; it is good to know that there is a Living Way.

We talk a lot about creeds and life. There is an underlying reality in which one may say that all creeds will find their union at last in living Love. It is, as St. Paul says, the thing that will last on. It has the conquering power. The triumph of our fellowship will never be an intellectual stunt.

Clear and definite convictions in regard to Christian truth are commendable; but we are not saved by the orthodoxy of the head, but by the soul's love of Christ and sincerest loyalty to the full orb'd content of the Christian life. This is what makes us Christians. We touch here the living soul of Christianity—Christ, who also is the pulsating heart of the Church. To impair His divine authority and supremacy by any form of reasoning, what is it but to barter away our very soul? (W. M. Auld.)

That is the vital reality. We can trust the truth. The mystic sees this perfectly clearly. One fellow wants to cram his creed down the other fellow's throat. The Christian mystic knows that God is the reality behind his creed. He is perfectly tolerant of the creed just so long as it makes for God. I don't care how President Lincoln's variety of Christianity may have been branded, but the creed that he lived by must have been a living thing.

The new religion, I cannot but feel, will be the Christianity of Christ, Whose Mind is universal, all inclusive, and which does not congratulate itself upon being better than anybody else, to which Phariseeism, separatism, is the complete antithesis, which loves the other fellow as oneself, not because of a sense of virtue, but because we are all one bunch by nature, by Fatherhood, and some day by glad preference.

You and I are perhaps Episcopalians by training or by preference or by social environment or perhaps even by caste. (God forgive us!) We have a treasury which we honestly value and in the light of which we have tried to live worthy of our calling. But when you pass a Roman Catholic Church, don't you wish (I do) that we could go in and touch the water that has been blessed and kneel with the others and feel at home—one of that bunch? If we had happened to have been brought up in that faith we should believe and feel as they do. It is a wonderful Church, with an esprit de corps, with a tremendous missionary zeal, with a longing to conquer the world for Christ. In a time when autocracy was everywhere our forefathers rebelled and a tremendous bitterness ensued. We refused the domination; perhaps we had to, but Cardinal Mercier is one of those Christians. Sometimes I go to Mass and I have never yet been thrown out or failed to get a seat promptly. Perhaps the sweetest service I ever attended was in a Russian Greek Church in Hankow, China—a beautiful, mystical service which fairly illumined my soul. All stood and kneeled close together. I have stood in a Buddhist temple and prayed to God, as I know Him, for the worshipers there and for myself. I was not praying like a Pharisee. I didn't feel "better than they." They had so little light, and I had Christ, and I was perfectly welcome there.

And Hebrews, we owe them so much, and we believe all that they believe. St. John and St. Paul were Hebrews.

And the Society of Friends—almost thou persuadest me (in certain moods). And the Salvation Army—are they Christians? Ask the front-line troops.

And how about Protestants? Not a great while ago I had a special invitation from the pastor to commune in a Presbyterian Church in London. Of course, I went. It was a memorial service, in its form—not a sacrament as I know it; but I can remember the death and burial of Christ just as well with Presbyterian Christians as with anybody else. Presbyterians are wonderful Christians. Some of the finest missionary work in the world is done in China by Presbyterians. My own mother was born a Presbyterian. She taught me my Christianity, for what that is worth. It is a pale shadow, a faint echo of her own.

We were too formal, too classy and too indifferent, and by our coldness we drove the Methodists out of our communion. It was our fault, not theirs. There are seven millions of them in the United States. They reach whole groups that we can hardly touch. Are they Christians? I would I were even as those Methodists. They are partial in the hold of truth as it is in Christ. So are all individuals, and therefore so are you and I. We call ourselves Catholic because we have an inheritance and ideals. Perhaps we care about Church unity more than others. We have the most beautiful form of liturgy that the world has ever held. It is a part of our Catholic inheritance. But if we were to come to what we supposed were the doors of Paradise and should find the words, "Protestant Episcopal Heaven," written above the portal, "Only Episcopalians Admitted Here," we should know by that sign that we should not find Christ there, and that would not be the Fairyland of Reality to us.

"Come, beloved," let us face things as they are and must be. There will never be any Christian unity built on the basis of exclusion and there will never be any Catholic Church worthy of the richness of that wonderful name until we make up our minds to come one and all in the unity of the Spirit, and of mutual understanding and hospitality bringing the last follower of Jesus with us; until we come unto the answer of that prayer, "Father, that they all may be one; as Thou Father art in Me and I in Thee, that they may be one in us and that the world may believe that Thou hast sent Me. I have declared unto them Thy Name and will declare it that the love wherewith Thou hast loved Me may be in them and I in them."

Look, Father, look on His anointed face,

And only look on us as found in Him;

Look not on our misusings of Thy grace,

Our prayer so languid, and our faith so dim;

For lo! between our sins and their reward

We set the Passion of Thy Son our Lord.

RESERVATION: BUT NOT FOR ADORATION—I.

BY THE RT. REV. BOYD VINCENT, S.T.D.

YOUR request for a review of the Bishop of Oxford's address at the Chelmsford Conference is timely; partly because of the recent visit here of the Bishop of Oxford himself, but chiefly because the book concerns an issue already serious in the Church of England and now raised also among ourselves. For there can be no doubt of the growing practice here of reservation (whether for adoration or not); and the question of new legislation by this Church on the subject is soon to come up again at our General Convention in 1919.

The recent history of the issue is substantially this. A new rubric in the Office of the Communion of the Sick, as part of the proposed Revised Prayer Book of the Church of England, was provisionally adopted (1914?) by the Convocation of Canterbury (or its Upper House) in outline as follows:

But when the Holy Communion cannot reverently or without grave difficulty be celebrated in private . . . it shall be lawful for the priest (with the consent of the sick person) on any day when there is a celebration of the Holy Communion in the church, to set apart at the open Communion so much of the consecrated bread and wine as shall serve for the sick person, etc. . . . And the open Communion ended, he shall, on the same day and with as little delay as may be, go and minister the same. . . . And immediately thereafter any of the bread and wine that remains over shall reverently be consumed. If the consecrated bread and wine be not taken immediately to the sick person, they shall be kept in such place and after such manner as the Ordinary shall approve, so that they be not used for any other purpose whatsoever.

Shortly afterward the Bishop of Oxford issued "regulations" for his own diocese, refusing general permission of reservation, although "allowing it freely in particular cases; but in no case so as to be accessible for extra-liturgical worship." A memorial followed, presented to the Upper House of Convocation by a hundred or more clergy, declaring that "compliance with such a restriction (as that in the proposed rubric) cannot rightly be demanded and will not be given." The archbishop spoke of the terms of this memorial as "deplorable." The broad-minded Bishop of Winchester declared "with all the strength he could" that "they had reached a line the crossing of which was momentous in the Church of England. The issue was one of incalculable importance." Finally in 1917, the Bishop of Oxford, on the invitation of the Bishop of Chelmsford, delivered to some four hundred clergy of that diocese an address (with questions and answers) on the whole subject. It is a report of that address which we have before us in this little volume.*

Now one value of this address is in its record of the bishop's strong convictions as to the antiquity of reservation for Communion of the sick and also as to the great desirability of the speedy restoration of such reservation in the Church of England. Indeed for the last twenty years he has been the most strenuous advocate of this. But the chief value of the address lies in the bishop's clear, strong statements on these other points. First, on what he believes to be the origin, significance and tendencies of the whole practice of adoration before the Reserved Sacrament; and next, on how distinctly to legalize again today (in the Church of England) reservation for Communion of the sick, and at the same time definitely to restrict access to the Sacrament so reserved, for private adoration before it.

Some recent literature on the subject: The Body of Christ, by the Rev. Charles Gore, D.D., now the Bishop of Oxford (Scribners, 1901); The Reserved Sacrament, by the Rev. Darwell Stone, D.D., Principal of Pusey House, Oxford (Morehouse Publishing Co., 1917); The Sacrament Reserved, by W. H. Freestone, M.A., of the House of the Resurrection, Mirfield (Morehouse Publishing Co., 1917); Reservation, a Report of the Chelmsford Conference (Morehouse Publishing Co., 1917); A Charge and Considerations Concerning the Sacrament, etc., both by the Rt. Rev. A. C. Hall, D.D., Bishop of Vermont (Longmans, Green Co., 1916, 1917); The Reservation of the Holy Sacrament, by the Rt. Rev. W. W. Webb, D.D., Bishop of Milwaukee (Holy Cross Tracts, 1916); Eucharistic Doctrine and Reservation, by the Rev. Francis Hall, D.D., Professor at the General Theological Seminary, New York (in the American Church Monthly, November, 1917); The Living Church (Foreign Correspondence, 1916-17); The Report of the Royal Commission on Ecclesiastical Discipline (Wyman's, London, 1906).

His first important point, then, is to show the origin of such practice in and its development from the Roman doctrine of transubstantiation. Not merely as a matter of date, he assumes the historical fact as well known. Still, in such assumption, he is fully supported, with abundant historical data by both Stone and Freestone. Dr. Stone, for example, quotes as substantially correct Father Thurston's statement.

In all the Christian literature of the first thousand years no one has apparently yet found a single, clear, definite statement that any person visited a church in order to pray before the Body of Christ which was kept upon the altar; but—he says—we do begin to find such statements by degrees more and more explicitly made from the twelfth and thirteenth centuries onward.

Stone also admits that to this day the Eastern Churches actually prevent such access by means of screens and doors. The scholarly Freestone is even more definite and emphatic. For after also quoting Father Thurston, he not only declares: "It is in the latter part of the eleventh century† that the rudiments of a cultus definitely paid the Reserved Sacrament first appear"; but he also cites "Injunctions" which make it perfectly clear that by the year 1238 such veneration was officially required. "Behind all," he says, "lies the decree of the Lateran (Council) in 1215"; and concludes "but even yet (to that date) there is no trace to be found of any custom in which the presence of Christ is secured in the church out of Mass-time for purposes of devotion."

But if the bishop himself spends little time on the strictly historical proof in the case, what he does do most effectively is to trace the doctrinal and devotional development from the decree of transubstantiation into the modern cult of adoration before the Reserved Sacrament. He fairly visualizes the whole process for us and makes us see how, under the dangerous theory of development, this idea of transubstantiation has resulted in the Roman Church in a total present obscuration of the primitive ideas and usage in the Holy Communion.

He reminds us, to start with, that at the beginning our Lord's words of Institution made the Sacrament, above all things, one of "membership"—a "communion," a "sharing in" His Body and Blood. "His sacrificial humanity was to be the bond of fellowship among men; an idea of the utmost importance." Then, in the most telling way, he gives us a picture of the Roman Mass—still faithful to this original idea—as late as A. D. 800. He shows us the pope and his assisting clergy going down among the congregation and collecting its contributions of loaves and wine; then laying the loaves, together with the great chalice, on the altar, as the great corporate offering of the whole people before God; then the consecration; and then the great corporate Communion of pope and people following. In all this two things are noticeable, he says: (1) "The prominent idea was that of the great corporate oblation offered, accepted, consecrated and returned as now Christ's Body and Blood, to be spiritual food for the sanctification of the souls and bodies of the people and to bind them all into a corporate unity"; and (2) "The ceremony is unperplexed by any other element or feature. There is no moment of consecration to which special attention was called or emphasis given."

Next he asks us to turn, after another thousand years, to a modern "High Mass" in the Roman Church and note the main difference. "This is the total obscuration of the whole corporate idea of sacrifice and communion." And this in several ways. First, by a change in practice. The people's share in the service is reduced. The priest, isolated from the whole body of the Church, says his own Mass. In the chief service of the altar the people do not communicate. "High Mass" is no longer a communion. Second, by a doctrinal perversion. For the theory of transubstantiation, by destroying the nature of the bread and wine, violates the very principle of the Incarnation, viz.: that the divine nature does not obliterate the human. Above all, such a doctrine defeats the very purpose of the Real Presence, viz.: the permanent nourishment of the communicant's whole nature and the binding together of the whole Church in Him.

It is just that great and deep purpose of the Real Presence which has had its roots cut in the Roman doctrine of transubstantiation. For according to that doctrine the Divine Presence is so attached, even subjected, to the material accidents, that necessarily as soon as the accidents begin to change a few minutes afterward, by digestion, the Divine Presence ceases. There is nothing spiritual or sacramental which remains.

He supports this view briefly here (more fully elsewhere) by authoritative Roman teaching. Third, the original idea is obscured by the concentration of attention upon a certain moment, viz.: the moment of consecration and elevation—and upon the specific object, the Host. This is something quite different from the primitive idea of the Eucharist which was that of a continuous action, upward to heaven and downward to earth—a lifting up of the oblation of the Church before the Father and its return transmuted to be the food of the souls of men.

In this way the bishop helps us to see clearly enough the process of "development" from a now antiquated and discarded philosophy of "substance and accidents" of the ninth century, into the extra-liturgical use of the Blessed Sacrament today. For that process, as he traces it, amounts to this: If, under the theory of transubstantiation, the Divine Presence in the Sacrament, in and for the believer, disappears almost with the act of Communion, then it must be perpetuated externally by the Host; and if the visible Host itself is the real object of adoration in the Sacrament, then that devotion must continue wherever and so long as the Host itself does. Then follows naturally, he says, all the rest of the Roman cult—tabernacle, monstrance, processions, Benediction. Even

Lord Halifax seems to see the natural implications and tendencies here, when, in an annual address to the English Church Union, he warns against "Exposition" and "Benediction" (in the Church of England) as "great obstacles to the revival of reservation for Communion."

Indeed, the bishop's whole sweeping, bird's-eye review of the subject is a timely awakening and warning to the entire Anglican Communion, including ourselves. For it is absolutely certain that the great majority of those good, pious souls who practise such devotion do not realize all that it implies and whither it is leading. It is even doubtful whether some of those who defend the practice doctrinally realize all this. It is distinctly disappointing, for instance, to find an otherwise able and fair-minded writer resting the "inevitableness" of such practice upon "inferences" and "deductions" and devotional "developments"; and even defending, in this present dispensation of the Holy Spirit, the idea of a "God-given craving" for a localized object of worship on earth. The Rev. C. S. Abbott has put the point well when he says:

The Eucharist depends altogether on Christ's words. The Eucharistic Presence is there because He says that it is there. The guarantee is not arrived at by deduction, or by what helps, but by the distinct words of Christ. But reservation which uses the Eucharist primarily to make the Eucharistic Presence continuous is a matter resting not upon promise but upon logic and deduction. The result is that reservation for the purpose of perpetual adoration weakens the doctrine of the Real Presence by placing it on such a basis.

One would think, too, upon the point of a continuous presence, that our Lord's plain words again about "another Comforter" (His Spirit) whom He would "send to be with us forever" had sufficiently disposed of the idea of a permanent external presence of Himself as a localized earthly object of worship. Bishop Gore is very certain that such "craving for the permanent external shrine of Christ's Presence is associated with the weakening of the sense of the permanent presence of Christ in us." He had even learned this in his own case by a long early personal experience. Bishop Hall, too, is absolutely right in his "protest against a policy of drift," by which some of our bishops lend, if not their express sanction, at any rate their tacit consent, to the practice in question. And he very properly "doubts if they appreciate the difficulties in which their policy may involve their own successors and their brother-bishops."

William Cassaway Gaither

WHEN you faced Death, who never feared a man,
Nor e'er were feared by man of righteous mien,
Full many a friend would fain have stood between,
Of his own days have swelled the waning span
By loving grace of Christ; whom you began
To serve when yet to-day's strong men did preen
Their wholesome childhood joys beneath your keen
Yet kindly glance. But glad of heart to scan
The golden coast, like seamen's happy vale
Mist-hung 'twixt bows and straining home-bound sail,
None might withhold you from your well-earned rest
Nor wean your ear from the great Friend's behest:
"Earth hast thou blest with fruitful years enow; Thy Lord hath need of thee. Come higher, thou."

THE CHURCH AND PUBLIC HEALTH

BY THE REV. FRANK MONROE CROUCH

THE doctrine of a sound mind in a sound body has not always and everywhere met the approval of the Christian Church. In the reaction against the civilization of antiquity which we associate with the primitive Christian organization, the truth which the Roman had indicated by his mens sano in corpore sano went temporarily to the wall. Under the influence of asceticism and monachism, both derived largely from an Oriental dualism quite alien to the essential genius of Christianity, the body came to be looked upon not as an instrument but as a prison of the spirit—from which escape was to be sought by ignoring, neglecting, starving and emaciating it.

The modern Christian emphasis on the "gospel of health" is something new for the Church. The medieval Christian made the mistake of thinking of body, mind, and spirit as separate entities, unrelated one to the other; the contemporary Christian, however, realizes that each individual man is a unit, physical, mental, spiritual, and that what affects one of these component parts of his individuality must affect the others. We have seen in recent days an exaggerated movement, based partly upon the medieval fallacy, which relies upon the power of mind to cure the ills of the body. What is good in this movement has indeed been taken over under the aegis of some of our Christian organizations, but the converse truth has not yet, on the whole, been properly recognized—that the spirit itself is largely subject to conditions. The modern Christian recognizes, not only the compatibility but the essential inter-relation of physical, mental, and spiritual vigor and well-being.

If, however, we assume that the Church at large has recognized its duty with reference to a health program and ask ourselves just how the Episcopal Church can most effectively relate itself to the various forces making for the conservation of public health in general, we note, in the first instance, that there are three types of measures and agencies which the Church must recognize and with which she must co-operate if she is to labor effectively in this field of social service. There are, in the first place, the various curative measures and agencies which attempt to heal the sick, to restore individuals and families to a condition of health. Secondly, there are the preventive measures and agencies which aim to eliminate factors and conditions which result in individual or public disease. Finally must be noted the specific measures and agencies whose purpose and function it is to effect such necessary reconstruction and renovation of our social life that health, individual and communal, rather than disease, shall be the only possible outcome of proper conditions of human living. These three types of measures and agencies are, of course, inter-related and can never in effective practice be separated, but it will be convenient to discuss them independently in the order noted.

CURATIVE MEASURES AND AGENCIES

These present, after all, the traditional attitude. The doctor is called in after the patient has fallen sick, rather than before he gets sick. (The Chinese idea in this matter might be effectively reproduced in this country—the paying of a doctor to keep one well, and stopping of payment when one falls ill.) The Church in health matters has followed this general line of activity, and it must be frankly admitted that without such measures and agencies we could never hope to discharge our duty with reference to the public health. In every community these agencies and measures may be found, and it should be a function of the Church in each community to relate itself, so far as possible, with them. There are throughout the country upwards of two hundred Church hospitals and allied institutions which have in many instances done yeoman service in ministering to public and private health needs, often in cases where there is no other agency or institution available for the purpose. It should be the bounden duty of the Church, generally and locally, to hold up the hands of these institutions and so far as possible to see that the most approved therapeutic methods and instruments are used in them. This will involve, therefore, largely financial assistance where needed; it will involve education when and where necessary; it will involve on the whole the co-operative spirit—the realization by a given parish or diocese that the Episcopal hospital is a Church asset, rather than a burden, and a means whereby the Church can perform part of her God-given mission of service in the form of healing.

It will mean more than this. Besides Church hospitals there are in communities of any size public institutions which may or may not be as effective as they ought to be. The Church in every instance should, so far as possible, inform itself of conditions, equipment, and methods in these secular institutions, and attempt to co-operate with them financially or otherwise. Recognition also of the self-sacrificing efforts of the conscientious family physician should be a legitimate function of the Church in its general relation to curative measures and agencies. Enough has perhaps been said to indicate roughly the mission of the Church in this field.

PREVENTIVE MEASURES AND AGENCIES

Prophylaxis has been the great contribution of modern medical science to the problem of disease and its cure. Mere cure, in other words, has proved to be inadequate and insufficient to the task in hand. It is a method which has also received time-honored sanction, to be sure, in the field of charity as distinguished from the more recent preventive and constructive social effort; but prophylaxis has come to stay, and the Church is taking increasing notice of it as the days go on. Especially in this period of war when the nation's manhood is being mobilized, it has been recognized that prophylaxis of a very special kind is absolutely necessary to prevent incapacitation for military service by venereal disease of a great proportion of our men of various ages. The fact that forty per cent of the men between the ages of twenty-one and thirty summoned in the first national draft were found to be unfit for service for this reason and were rejected, and the further fact that it has been necessary to isolate a certain percentage of draftees in training in our various military establishments is in itself an indication of a great need. The need, indeed, has been so spectacular and so urgent that the Church, aside from its interest in the problem as a moral issue, has not been able to ignore it. The moral and religious forces of the nation, in fact, have been largely mobilized to attack venereal disease and the sexual vice of which it is the result. A large part of the measures and agencies introduced in and about our training camp communities are directly related to this very problem. Hostess houses, Y. M. C. A. huts, camp chaplains, parish houses, not to mention the Federal Training Camp Commission, have all attempted to solve the problem of the soldiers' and sailors' spare time and to prevent them from forming illicit connections through the elimination of the opportunities which might result in them. A campaign of sex hygiene and education is also being undertaken by the Churches of America as a necessary corrective measure. Part of this problem is rooted back, it must be frankly confessed, in the Church's failure, in times past, in plain speech to its young people. The Sunday School teacher, the rector, the Confirmation lecturer, has not always utilized to the full his opportunities for healthful enlightenment along this line. It must, of course, on the other hand, be frankly recognized that the great movement which has resulted in the abrogation of a historic taboo has its dangers, resulting from too free discussion of the problem which we have in mind. Sometimes, it is true, but not always, as much harm comes from the too frank recognition of a possible evil as from ignoring it altogether. But, on the whole, the movement is rational and must increasingly enlist, as it has already enlisted, hearty co-operation and support from the Church at large.

This is only one instance of the problem of prophylaxis. Similar cases are the modern movements for the elimination of tuberculosis, of typhoid, and various other historic scourges. The Church cannot too strongly urge upon its individual members that, after all, individual disease is partly at least a result of sin, if not crime—the result, in other words, of excesses in diet and in other ways of failure to recognize the duty of keeping fit by a proper amount of sleep, fresh air, recreation, actual physical exercise, etc. Instead of thinking with the medieval that disease, whether private or public, is a visitation of God to be borne with the best grace possible, we must come even more fully to recognize that disease, whether private or public, is largely the result of man's own misdoing. Instead of ignoring the body, like the monk, the modern Christian must train it in order to give his mental and spiritual powers an opportunity for more efficient functioning in the service of society at large. Here, again, military necessity has been a goad which has compelled the nation, as well as the Church, to face the challenge of individual health as never before. Cases might be multiplied, but these should suffice to point the need of reinforcing cure with prevention or prophylaxis.

CONSTRUCTIVE MEASURES AND AGENCIES

More fundamental even than prevention is the constructive effort to insure such conditions of private and public life in the community, as in the single family, as will inevitably result in a healthy society. It is indeed sometimes difficult to draw the line sharply in all respects between preventive and constructive effort. Quarantine regulations, embargoes on the free passing of diseased members of society from one state to another, are largely preventive, but they are partly constructive, and constitute, in fact, one of the great contributions of modern medical science to the world's well-being. But more positively on the constructive side may be taken the great work of sanitary engineering, which is more and more engaging the practical attention of community and state authorities. A city or town now which lacks its sanitary engineer or sanitary department is not only unprogressive but is deficient in its realization of its duty toward the body politic. How can any possible measures of cure or prevention in the narrower sense, whether private or public, avail in the face of community neglect of the sources of food, including milk as well as water? The doctor who during an epidemic, while the churches were having prayer-meetings and nurses were tending the sick, traced the course of the stream from which the local water supply was drawn and found at its head the body of a dead horse, was doing the proper kind of preventive and constructive work—a task fully as religious as praying or nursing. It is absolutely incumbent upon the modern community to take these necessary measures for the safeguarding of its population, and it is likewise a duty of the churches of the community to hold the local administration to its task in this respect. There is no more reason, indeed, why a church, a local parish, should not have a public health program—an ideal in the light of which it should check up the success or failure of the local administration for the public safety—than that it should not have a parish budget or an annual meeting for the election of officers, or what not.

Viewed in the large, constructive health measures would include the provision of parks and playgrounds for the recreation and physical exercise especially of growing boys and girls. This kind of social service the Church has, indeed, been more prone to recognize in recent years than other forms equally fundamental. Parish houses and social settlements connected with parishes, or operated by them, have done much good in this respect, but much remains to be done, and it is the business of the local congregation to co-operate in the effort to insure such positive, affirmative conditions of health for the community and the individual members thereof that disease shall not arise. Where, in short, there is disease there we have an indication that constructive work has not been properly undertaken or accomplished, and there we have a challenge to the Church, which has, by failing to hold the community up to the level of its full duty, in so far failed in its own Christian mission of human service.

FOR SINCERITY IN THE WORK OF LIFE

GIVE me, O Lord, a real love for the day's work, but deliver me from its bondage after the hours of toil are over. May I find it a joy to do the little tedious things that make up the monotony of the house or shop, because they are part of the King's housework. And when the day is done, may it leave me, not with tangled nerves and jarring thoughts, but with the consciousness of having done my best and pleased Thee well!

Lord, help me to live the sincere life! Give to me that thought and thorough honesty which gathers a moral reserve against sudden strains! Keep me from trifling living and careless thinking and frivolous talking, that when the winds blow and the tempests rage, I may find myself untroubled and unafraid, because I have found reality in the Rock of Ages. Amen.—From Prayers for Today by the Rev. Samuel McComb, D.D.

NOW IS THE TIME OF SPECIAL NEED!

Exterior of a Hut at Camp Johnston, Florida, Built with War Commission Funds

Interior of a War Commission Hut, Which Is Typical of Those in Many Cantonments

THE Church War Commission has set Sunday, February 9, as the date for the great contribution for concluding the war work of the Church. With war still active, the commission would have required $1,000,000 for the work of the year. With demobilization going on, the need will be at least $250,000. At one time the Church has 528 clergymen in war activities and financed by the Church War Commission. There are still 269 chaplains in service. No spiritual welfare work in the war has been prosecuted more vigorously than that of the Episcopal Church, the War Commission of which, through its various agencies, has kept in close personal touch with the thousands of communicants in active service. Prepare now to do your part on February 9.

THE HAPPIEST HOUSE IN LONDON

BY A MEMBER OF THE STAFF

IT was one of those London days when the spirit of an American sags. It was like every other day for several weeks past. Fog hung over the dingy streets, the pavements were wet, the damp air pierced through to one's very soul. In the gloom one's mind instinctively turned to thoughts of a musical comedy, toward any place or thing where one might find a bit of gaiety, a touch of light. Why in the world I chose such a day for a visit to 600 blind men I was at a loss to know—except that I had given up hope of seeing any other kind of day in London at this season of the year. And perhaps it was a case of misery loves company, for I was sure that no more gloomy place could be selected for visitation than a home for the blind. Surely St. Dunstan's would sap the sunshine out of the brightest day.

As I turned into Regent's Park I thought: "If they ever have decent weather this must be a beautiful place. It's certainly dank and gloomy enough now. Even the trees look miserable."

My thoughts were interrupted by a peal of laughter—grown-up boyish laughter. Out of the murk emerged three figures, a nurse, flanked on each side by a Tommy, arms through hers. They hurried past, faces alight. I stood and watched the fog swallow them. I could still hear them laughing. And those chaps were blind!

I went on toward the great house which, I had been informed, was St. Dunstan's. I turned in at the gate and went quietly along the path. I was approaching one of the greatest tragedies of the war, a house of sadness, a place where men with all hope gone were foregathered.

A moment later I stood in the hall. As I waited for a nurse to show me about I could see into a long room at the right of the entrance. It was the ballroom, so I was told, where, according to Thackeray's Vanity Fair Becky Sharp danced, and where, in real life, the Kaiser was once entertained. Now young chaps in uniform were lounging about in comfortable chairs talking with friends, and laughing. Over in one corner a Tommy sat with his legs comfortably proper up, an expression of very real content on his face, and whistled softly an air from a musical comedy. In the hall itself other chaps were moving about freely, or stood talking with attendants or friends. And there was a very disturbing amount of laughter—disturbing to my notion of what a house full of blind soldiers ought to be. What right had these young fellows, doomed to eternal darkness—what right had they to laugh, anyway? I had a confused feeling that somehow my preconception of life at St. Dunstan's was already open to revision.

A nurse took me into the workshops. Here a group of men were making mats. They were weaving in intricate designs in colors. "How do they know what color they are putting in?" I asked. Of course they did it by sense of touch. In an adjoining shop men were cobbling. I was amazed at their dexterity. Few blind men have ever learned cobbling before St. Dunstan's decided that it could be done. In another shop the men were learning joinery. They were making tea-trays, picture frames, ornamental tables, corner cupboards and other salable articles, and making them with a facility that seemed to have no limitation.

I was in a place where everyone seemed abundantly happy. I studied the faces of the men at work. I looked from one to another. Perhaps somewhere I could find one wearing an expression doleful enough to fit in with the gloomy background of my outlook that day. I searched in vain. Not every face was smiling, though most of them were, but every face was happy. Here a man was pushing a plane over a nearly completed tea-tray, while he sang quietly, and three or four others about him hummed in harmony. Over there a group of chaps were whistling. We passed another where a Tommy was telling a story, as his companions listened and smiled, and finally burst into rollicking laughter.

"What's the matter with these fellows today?" I complained to the nurse. "They act as though they were really enjoying being blind."

"They are," she replied. "And they are always like this. I've been here two years, and I've never seen them any different."

Well, there you have it. This fine old estate, which belongs to Mr. Otto Kahn, is being operated by Sir Arthur Pearson as a house of happiness. We went on to other workrooms. We saw blind boys learning to typewrite. An Australian officer with a very fine face was making great speed on one of the machines.

"After he was hurt," said the nurse, "he went way back to Australia. He'd never heard of St. Dunstan's. He was terribly discontented, of course. Then someone told about us, and back he came all those thousands of miles. He's one of the happiest men we have, and one of the most efficient. Most people forget that the typewriter was originally invented so that people blind from infancy could learn to write, for they could never learn otherwise."

I hadn't forgotten; I had never known.

I saw those intelligent machines whereon these sightless men were learning to do shorthand, the machines which write Braille.

"They learn easily and naturally," continued my guide. "The shorthand is a great help."

We went to the poultry farm. Can you imagine running a poultry farm if you couldn't see? "Only the most intelligent men can do this," said the nurse, "but they do it very well on practical and up-to-date lines. They learn to distinguish birds of different breeds instantaneously by touch, to manage incubators and all the rest of it, including the making of hencoops, setting boxes, gates, etc."

In another building men were taught massage, and in this they become more proficient than men who can see. The training is given on the most modern and scientific principle, and the men, going later into the massage school of the National Institute for the Blind, have the privilege of visiting any one of three large hospitals daily to massage patients.

I shall always remember the outer office where I waited to see Sir Arthur Pearson. Blind soldiers came in to make application for admittance to St. Dunstan's, and they were quite desolate enough to fit into that mental picture which I had cherished when I came. Most of them were with their young wives or sweethearts. With one soldier and his wife was a five-year-old flaxen-haired tot, who sat on her young daddy's lap and looked often into his blind eyes as he talked. I began to wish some one would hurry these men into the magic circle of St. Dunstan's.

Sir Arthur Pearson was once the greatest competitor of Lord Northcliffe in the publication field, but he will always be remembered first because he made St. Dunstan's.

When I went into his large room that afternoon I went, curiously, with no thought of having the mystery of the good cheer at St. Dunstan's explained. But it was. The explanation was Sir Arthur Pearson!

He was sitting beside the fireplace in the far end of the room. As I stepped through the door, he bounded out of his chair, every muscle alert; and came rapidly toward me with outstretched hand. I am sure that his vibrant, cheery voice, his rushing phrases, must reach quickly to the heart of any blind man. All the fervor of his big personality seemed to come tumbling out on these phrases as he talked. It was inspiring to watch the animation of his face, the really radiant smile, the illumination of his fine spirit reflected there. I looked into his eyes scarcely believing it possible that they had not seen for nearly three years.

I spoke of the good cheer at St. Dunstan's and my mystification.

"It's perfectly natural for them to be happy," said Sir Arthur. "They come here with the idea that they are afflicted, that they are not normal men. In my first talk with them I make them understand that they are normal, that the only people at St. Dunstan's who are curious individuals are those who can see. We never allow anyone around here to use the word affliction or any word that means affliction. More than thirty of the teachers here are themselves blind, and when a blind man is taught by another who is blind he bucks up. The new man knows that what his teacher has learned to do he can learn. As we say here, a man is taught to be blind. We teach him to re-adapt himself to new and puzzling conditions. The man is perfectly normal. All that has happened is that he is met by a new set of conditions which he must master."

When a blind man tells you things like that, and when you have seen six hundred other blind men as living exponents of such a philosophy, what are you going to do but believe it? Life in the kingdom of darkness can be as normal as life in the kingdom of light.

"There are nearly six hundred graduates of St. Dunstan's," said Sir Arthur, "and great numbers of them are making more money than they made before the war. Through our after-care department we settle a man in the industry which he has been taught, provide him with an outfit and with a stock of raw material. He is visited regularly, raw material is supplied to him at cost price and help is given him in marketing his goods. So long as he lives St. Dunstan's will give him this help."

I went out into the early evening. The fog had thickened and it was dark—but the gloom was gone. In the dim light of a street lamp, as I paused to wait for a bus, I tried to read a little pamphlet that Sir Arthur had given me as I came away. And there, under his name, I found these words: "St. Dunstan's is the happiest house in London; probably in the whole world. And I'll tell you why; it's full of sympathy."—G. E. S.

WHAT PEOPLE THINK OF PROHIBITION

THE following well-known churchmen and social workers have graciously responded to a request of THE CHURCHMAN for an expression of opinion on prohibition.

The Rt. Rev. Walter T. Sumner, D.D., Bishop of Oregon, Portland, Oregon.—Bank savings increased immediately and are now the largest in history. The police department was reduced, and there were a thousand less of court cases. Hospital emergency accident cases were cut to one-third, and poverty was greatly reduced. Physicians report that necessities were available in homes of the sick as never before. The city jail is so empty that Sunday services have had to be discarded. I have personally seen only three intoxicated persons in Oregon during four years. The law has been justly and effectively enforced and no one would go back to the old days. Moral, social and economic gains have been so great that only three out of ninety votes were passed against national prohibition.

William H. Jefferys, A.M., M.D., Superintendent of the Philadelphia City Mission.—Your telegram kindly asks what I think "prohibition is going to mean to the city mission kind of people?" The special genius of the City Mission in Philadelphia is its ministry to the straying, the "unfit," the "unworthy." There are, of course, many straying, and still more "unfit" but there are none such as "unworthy," though thousands the world so names because for various reasons, of disease, unemployment, heredity, lack of training, instability of purpose, wastefulness, old age, intemperance and crime. These cannot maintain themselves and are a financial liability to the community. Being a liability we call them "unworthy" though the responsibility is ours.

I always believed in temperance but for many years balked at prohibition, chiefly on the "personal liberty argument." It was life in the city mission and among the "unworthy" that completely converted me to the sacrifice of my own or anybody else's so-called "personal liberty" if by any sacrificial means we might win the freedom of the race from the whole damned booze evil—its profiteers, its politics, its hateful intrigues, and its Prussian methods and machinery, and from itself. I am not looking for the millennium yet awhile, but I am almost beside myself with joy when I think of all that this moral triumph of the truest Americanism means and will mean for ages to come, to this wonderful and beloved country and into the Great Beyond.

There is, however, a special yearning love and hope for the "unworthy," for though booze is not the whole of it by a long shot, yet it is a proved contributing cause in very close to eighty per cent of all the horrors of their misery, and usually the determining cause. I pray that God may remember, too, every protesting voice out of the deep hell of our past content and that He will give a larger freedom to all who laid aside their personal liberty that the world might be free.

Mary Kingsbury Simkhovitch, Greenwich House, New York City.—There can be no doubt that the elimination of alcoholic poisoning will make America more efficient and powerful. The happiness and peace of women and the welfare and health of children will be immeasurably increased. Prohibition is a great step forward.

But just as the "moral substitute for war" ought to be organized and made effective, so the sense of charm, of heightened imagination, of freedom from the ordinary and the dreary, of accent on the life of fellowship that occasional alcoholic stimulation gives, must find other avenues of expression. The physiologist, the psychologist and the community worker, should combine to study this need. For it is not true that the saloon has been popular as the social center alone. It is alcohol itself that is desired. Especially after long hours of heavy work, some stimulant is demanded. Prohibition without reduction of the hours of labor is arrogant. We have the moral right to enforce such a measure only if we are equally solicitous in reducing industrial strain.

James H. Dillard, Charlottesville, Virginia.—The staunchest upholder of individual freedom must confess, however unwillingly, that in prohibiting the trade in intoxicating drinks the State removes a tremendous obstacle to social betterment. Money spent in liquors is sheer waste; so is the man under the influence of liquor. Comradeship must be supplied in some other way.

The Rev. Samuel Tyler, Rochester, New York.—Prohibition should simplify many social problems by removing one of the chief causes of poverty, vice, dependency and disease. It should help toward the annihilation of the social evil, and make easier the conservation of the wonderful results obtained and the lessons learned in relation to the army and social evil. It should emphasize the necessity for providing a substitute for the saloon on the social side.

The Rev. Charles P. Tinker, D.D., Superintendent of the New York City Mission.—Te Deums will resound from the watch towers of the New York City Mission when national constitutional prohibition of alcoholic beverages becomes a fact, because we labor in public institutions and intensely crowded sections of the East and West side. Years ago our clergy staff voluntarily mounted the water wagon because experience taught them that seventy-eight per cent of the thirty-two thousand inmates whom we daily serve in public institutions were there and kept coming there because of strong drink. And they could not hope to reform them nor bring them to regeneration without the strongest possible example in the direction of total abstinence. All workers in charity hospitals, city prisons, almshouses and insane asylums will agree in believing that eventually half of their problems will be solved when King Alcohol is dethroned.

Edith R. Hopkins, New York Training School for Deaconesses, former head of St. Barnabas' House, New York.—From the vantage-ground of many years of experience among the neediest people of New York, as well as among Americans-in-the-making of various races and creeds, we welcome the prospect of prohibition with devout gratitude.

Only those who deal at first hand with the paralyzed will, the broken physique, and the wrecked homes of those in the grip of the liquor habit, can fully realize the vision which prohibition makes possible.

It has been estimated that prohibition will lessen arrests by sixty-six per cent and this should result in throwing large numbers of laborers into useful occupations.

May not forward-looking people also hope that the energy thus released from charitable and correctional agencies may be focused upon furthering constructive work among the young people of the rising generation? Thus, free from the menace of intemperance and the evils that follow in its wake, our girls and boys may grow to citizenship in full vigor of body, mind and spirit.

Deaconess Virginia C. Young, Director of "17 Beekman Place," New York City.—Prohibition is indeed a vital question in my special work with delinquent women. I live with twenty-five of them in this house (the personnel often changing so that in the course of the year I come into the closest personal contact with nearly three hundred). I also have a weekly Bible class in the workhouse. It is difficult not to feel almost fanatical on this question seeing, as I have done for so long, the terrible soul-destroying effects of strong drink upon women, tempted on all sides, and with such weak wills. I sometimes wish that those to whom the question is "academic" could realize that the surrender of what seems to them their legitimate right to do as they choose in the matter means life or death to weaker brothers and sisters!

I am more than sure that drink is the very most potent "urge" to prostitution—in fact I am sure that without it most women could not continue in the life of the streets. This is the testimony of many of them. At last Sunday's class in the workhouse, I asked the women present (about one hundred of them) how they would vote on this question, suggesting that those for and against prohibition should raise their hands: almost half raised theirs against. I then asked them to rise and give their reasons, and several did, most of them taking the ground that this being a free country they should do as they liked in personal matters. I then asked them to suppose themselves to have, each of them a son of seventeen, with an inherited tendency and weak will; would they then like to see the saloons on every corner and wide open, etc. One by one the hands went down, and we then had a very interesting discussion which ended in all deciding to vote "for prohibition."

I know that the only hope for the drunkard is to be kept away from drink until the will is strong enough to resist—there is no other way.

Stella A. Miner, Secretary Girls' Protective League, New York.—With the passing of the saloon vice and crime will decrease. Fewer young girls will be tempted into immorality through dance halls and cafés where they seek recreation; fewer girls will be driven from home by drunken and dissolute fathers; fewer men will seek out resorts of vice.

NEWS OF THE CHURCH

WOULD MAKE FREE PEWS MEMORIAL TO SOLDIERS

Rector Says Present System Is Barrier to Progress

MONTCLAIR, NEW JERSEY.—The vestry and members of St. Luke's Church here are being urged by their rector, the Rev. Luke M. White, to give serious thought to the subject of rented pews, with a view to abolishing the system. Mr. White first mentioned the matter to the congregation previous to his New Year's sermon. He declared then that the present system is a barrier to the Church's progress, that it is un-Christian, undemocratic and out of keeping with the spirit of the times. In a later reference to the problem which rented pews offer, Mr. White suggested that no finer memorial could be decided upon by a parish in honor of those members who offered their lives in the country's service than the gift of a free church. His plea to the vestry was that its action in this connection crystallize the growing spirit of brotherhood which is manifesting itself in the parish.

CONDEMNS THE PEW SYSTEM

Dr. Gates Says It Is Selling and Leasing the Temple

At the Chapel of the Intercession, New York, the free pew system and the Every Name Canvass have been successfully in use. When asked to express his opinion on the subject of the free church system, the vicar, the Rev. Milo Hudson Gates, said:

When one remembers that the Founder of the Christian Church, our Saviour, Jesus Christ, drove out of the temple those that bought and sold therein, and remembers that what was being bought and sold, most probably, was only what today would be called "articles of worship," one wonders what His action and what His words would be concerning those who buy and sell and lease the very temple itself.

Secondly, the only system possible with a large constituency is the free church system. For this reason a church building—as for example at the Chapel of the Intercession—though large, is not large enough to allow the renting of even a single chair to all who would desire to lease. We should be obliged to turn people away under the renting system. Of course, each person renting a seat will not always be present. There will thus be places to which people may be shown, but the average American does not care to be pauperized by sitting in a place bought and paid for by somebody else. With free seats we are able to accommodate all. As a result we have more people subscribing for the support of the church than could be accommodated if they all came at any one time. When every one, rich and poor alike, feels an equal right and enters the House of God with an equal dignity, the rich man does not sit in the high place and the poor man in the transept and the back pew. The principles of Christ and of the Apostles are treated with respect in every church so conducted. It is idle to defend the pewed church system by arguments labeled "a better financial policy," "the only system practicable here"; for when the defense has succeeded such a success means simply that another select religious club has been established.

My own experience is that the rather sentimental whine that the free church system makes it impossible for families to sit together is not so. First, I have observed that families do not always sit together in pewed churches, the young people from various families being quite apt to flock together. And also I observe that families are just as apt to sit together in free churches as in pewed. Whether a family sits together or not is pretty apt to depend upon the family and not the church system. Lastly, no church can succeed in these times which is anything else than democratic. The church is for the people, all the time, at all the services. I have been asked whether I think the free church system a sound financial system. I do not consider such an argument anything but begging the question, but as I have been asked what my experience has been, I reply that I consider it a much better financial system in every way than the pew system. As a matter of fact, the free church system is the system of practically the whole Episcopal Church in this country.

CLERGYMEN ARE STARVING IN CHURCH OF ENGLAND

Bishop of London Says They Cannot Pay Their Debts

By James Cairns

LONDON.—The Bishop of London does not hesitate to describe the London clergy as being in a starving condition. He accordingly writes a Christmas appeal to the Times to call attention to the matter. There is, he says, a certain grim irony in the fact that, as chairman of the Serbian Relief Committee, he had sent out thousands of pounds to the country which he has just visited, and yet on his return he finds a melancholy tale of letters from his clergy, showing that they simply don't know how to pay their debts. He knew some of these facts before he went out to Salonika, and he had started a fund which has been in charge of Lord Justice Bankes during his absence, but the response has been very meagre.

Here again, as in other matters of Church finance, the layman is apt to retort that the Church has plenty of money. So the bishop meets the objection that the Ecclesiastical Commissioners might see to the matter, by pointing out that this body does not hoard its dividends, but applies them to increase the endowment of the livings, and that it is owing to its action in the past that the London livings are now for the most part £300 a year. They have also given war-bonuses to all clergy in the country whose incomes were less than this sum. But these small grants have been quite insufficient to save large numbers of the London clergy from possible bankruptcy. So the bishop is appealing for £50,000 "to stave off the approaching crisis." He adds that he will give every penny that he can spare himself. And the Times not only prints his letter, but backs it up in a leading article, so there is a good hope for the London clergy.

BOARD OF MISSIONS HAS A DEFICIT OF $269,758.97

Workers in Japan Granted Increased Allowances for Year

At the meeting of the executive committee of the Board of Missions January 14 the most important matter was the report of the treasurer. At the December meeting of the board a deficit of $838,000 was faced. A telegram was sent to each bishop of the Church asking him to bring the situation to the attention of his clergy and people. The response has been most gratifying. The total receipts for the year had been $2,146,915. The total expenditures (including the deficit of 1916-17) amounted to $2,416,673.97, leaving a deficit of $269,758.97, of which $143,309.20 was for the year 1916-17.

Unfortunately, in order to bring about this result, it was necessary for the board to use the balance of the undesignated legacies received during 1917, amounting to $40,587, and the balance of those received during 1918, amounting to $137,627. This leaves no fund in the undesignated legacy account for distribution this year.

In the foreign field, owing to the great increase in the cost of necessities, an additional allowance was granted our Japanese workers of a certain percentage of their present salaries, as a temporary relief, for a period no longer than the present fiscal year.

In the Latin American field, a native assistant was employed in the hospital at Nopala, and Miss Lena Porter Wormeley was appointed missionary in the District of Porto Rico.

TEN-MINUTE SERVICES FOR PEACE CONFERENCE

Dean Dumper Has Daily Services at Newark Cathedral

NEWARK, New Jersey.—Ten-minute services of intercessory prayer are being held daily, Saturdays excepted, from 12:20 to 12:30 o'clock in Trinity Cathedral, Newark, and will be continued, Dean Arthur Dumper has announced, during the deliberations of the peace delegates.

"The war was fought for moral ends," Dean Dumper declared when referring to the services. "Everywhere there is longing now for just and generous international relationship, for a righteous peace and the end of hate, suspicion and selfish rivalry between nations, and the prevention of future wars. The armistice has stopped the fighting; the moral objects of the war are still to be attained. God has blessed our arms; now is the time for right-minded men to ask His blessings upon the deliberations of the peacemakers."

Bishop Lawrence's Condition Improves

BOSTON.—The daily papers have issued conflicting reports as to the condition of Bishop Lawrence. It is permitted to say that the bishop continues to gain, but it is still uncertain as to when he will be able to assume his episcopal duties. He is pronounced out of danger.

PREPARATORY SCHOOLS AND G. B. R. E. IN CONFERENCE

Dr. Gardner Makes Plea in Defense of Expert Opinion

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.—The secondary department of the General Board of Religious Education has just finished a conference here with representatives of some fifteen of our church preparatory schools. Dr. William E. Gardner sounded the keynote of the conference when he pleaded for more sympathy for what some people call "paper programs." Dr. Gardner said: "We need an intelligent policy for the support of our church secondary schools. They must depend more upon a plan, less upon the chance interest of the people and the personal influence of the headmasters. The Church has no adequate method for formulating expert opinion and judgment, and for getting expert executives. This is true of other departments of the Church's work besides the secondary department of the Board. What the Church needs is to get expert opinion, and then to get its expert opinion organized so that it will function."

Dr. McKenzie, of Howe School, chairman of the conference, outlined its purpose and reported on a survey of church school conditions in Texas which was made last year. Dean Carrington of St. Mary's College, Dallas, Texas, said that the growth of its schools was a fair indication of the whole growth of any religious body, and advocated the establishing of a senior college for women in the middle west.

On the first day, it was decided to appoint ten councillors to advise with the secondary department. Dr. Gardner said that in his opinion the next step in organizing the department should be the coming together of the schools in each province to form a provincial organization. On Bishop Page's motion it was resolved that "the General Board of Religious Education be requested to engage a salaried secretary who shall devote his time to the task of secondary education." It was suggested that this secretary might well be a layman.

After a paper on the subject of a sacred study curriculum by the Rev. Latta Griswold, read the second day, a resolution was passed calling for the appointment of a committee to formulate a plan for secondary school studies in this subject.

Those at the conference were: Bishop Beecher, Bishop Burleson, Bishop Griswold, Bishop Page, Bishop Webb, Dr. McKenzie, of Howe School; Dr. Gardner and the Rev. Paul Micou, both of the General Board of Religious Education; Dean Carrington of Dallas, Dr. Rogers and the Rev. Morton Stone from Racine, the Rev. L. B. Hastings of St. Albans School, Knoxville, Ill.; Mr. Newhall of the Shattuck School, the Rev. Latta Griswold, and the Rev. A. W. Griffin.

House of Hope Without Head

Mrs. Florence H. Shults, who has been in charge of the House of Hope Hospital at Nopala, Hidalgo, Mexico, has found it necessary to retire. Since the withdrawal of Dr. D. R. Aves to join the colors some nineteen months ago, Mrs. Shults, who is a trained nurse of large clinical experience, has been carrying on the work as best she could alone, and her record furnishes a fair exponent of the great possibilities and value of specially trained women for this branch of the Church's mission. But the fact that the House of Hope is not only a hospital and medical dispensary, but a hospice and refuge for helpless indigents, and a centre of religious teaching and charitable activity as well, renders the position left vacant by Mrs. Shults one that cannot be easily filled. It is a post that requires not only the gifts of resourcefulness, management and endurance, but of compassionate self-abnegation and courage. It is an outpost in a mountain wilderness (high enough to demand strong heart and nerves), where poverty, ignorance and wretchedness are a constant companionship, and where the social isolation, to be tolerable, must be relieved by an abiding soul consciousness that one is "not alone."

Any woman who wants to respond to the challenge of this missionary opportunity should communicate with the secretary for Latin America, the Rev. Arthur R. Gray, D.D., Church Missions House, New York.

"ALASKAN CHURCHMAN" RESTS AT BOTTOM OF THE SEA

So many inquiries have been made as to the reason for the non-arrival of the August number of the Alaskan Churchman that THE CHURCHMAN correspondent wrote the editor, the Rev. H. H. Lumpkin, at Fairbanks, and received the following telegram:

"Your letter to hand. As far as I can ascertain the August Alaskan Churchman was lost on the Princess Sophia. Will you kindly get notices to this effect in Church papers. Am endeavoring now to ascertain if Government will reimburse us for the loss. If I can secure reimbursement will probably issue another edition."

Thus another chapter to the checkered career of the farthest north paper is written. Difficulties of printing follow difficulties in gathering the news from the vast territory; the cuts which have meant so much in making the Alaskan Churchman the attractive, speaking paper it has always been, must be procured from Seattle, and to cap the climax, the vessel which is bringing the whole edition from Alaska to its subscribers is lost and the edition rests at the bottom of the sea.

And yet the work will be continued, for it is the Alaskan slogan and practice to "get there." And the Alaskan Churchman, despite this great set-back, will continue to bring to us the information of the doings in this hardest of mission fields to man, equip and sustain!

Chicago Rector Dies of Influenza

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.—The Rev. A. H. W. Anderson, rector of All Saints' Church, Ravenswood, died on January 17, of influenza. The funeral was held on Monday, the Right Rev. S. M. Griswold, Suffragan Bishop of Chicago, officiating. Many of the city clergymen were present.

Mr. Anderson, who came to Chicago in 1908, was chairman of the local draft board, having been very active in that patriotic work. He was a graduate of Trinity College and the General Theological Seminary.

Indianapolis Ordination

INDIANAPOLIS, INDIANA.—On Wednesday, December 18, in St. John's Church, Crawfordsville, the Rev. Henry Scott Miller was advanced to the priesthood by the bishop of the diocese. The sermon was preached by the Rev. William Burrows, and the candidate was presented by the Rev. Horace W. Wood. Dean White also assisted in the service. Mr. Miller succeeds Mr. Wood as vicar of St. John's Church, Crawfordsville.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS NOW CHURCH'S SUPREME CONCERN

Edward A. Filene Would Use All Forces to This End

Edward A. Filene, the well known Boston business man and philanthropist, who is a director of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, vice-chairman of the executive committee of the League to Enforce Peace, and long prominent in movements for social betterment, in writing of the opportunity of the Church within the next three months to further the plan for a League of Nations, says:

If I were a bishop or superintendent, I would urge all ministers in my diocese or district to make a concerted effort along these lines. (A League of Nations.)

If I were an editor of a church paper, I would hammer away in every issue upon the necessity for a League of Nations. I would invite the leaders of the movement to contribute articles. I would arrange for symposiums on the underlying issues of the idea. I would strive to get my fellow editors to dedicate their pages to a like effort.

If I were a director of religious education, I would try to turn every unit or group under my jurisdiction into a laboratory of opinion on this supreme issue. I would make use of the more advanced Sunday School classes, men's clubs, and women's organizations.

I know there is an element of impertinence in a layman's speaking in this fashion to the experts of the Church, but I have been asked to write down what a layman regards as the supreme job of the Church at this time, and I have written frankly because I believe with all my heart that if the Church really gets on fire for this crusade it can do more than any other single institution to create a public opinion the voice of which will be heard and heeded at Versailles.

The work for a League of Nations is a crusade. It may not mean for the Church the rescue of any particular holy place; but it will mean something far better; it will mean making all places holy, for in a permanently peaceful world every place will give men the freedom to work out and apply the religion of justice and mercy.

As a business man, I sincerely envy the minister and editor who in this critical time can every week speak to a large and influential constituency.

Bp. Brent Issues Chaplains' Bulletins

About the middle of every month a bulletin from G. H. Q. in France goes out to all the chaplains written and signed by the senior chaplain, Bishop Brent. The purpose of the bulletin is to keep all the chaplains in close touch with G. H. Q. The first bulletin notes the death of four chaplains: Chaplains Danker, Sewell, Keith and Dieman. Since then Chaplain Marsh's death from wounds has been reported. Of the thirteen chaplains singled out for distinction by reason of heroic conduct under intense shell fire, four belong to the Episcopal Church: Chaplains Talbot, Danker, Rollins and Swan. Since this bulletin was printed Chaplain Royal K. Tucker has been cited. An Overseas Chaplains' Fellowship is proposed in the last bulletin received in this country. The same bulletin announces a series of retreats and conferences for such of the chaplains as desire to attend.

VESTRY OF OLD TRINITY ADOPTS FREE PEW SYSTEM

Action Also Effects St. Paul's and St. Agnes' Chapels

In an effort to develop greater democracy in the Church, Trinity Parish will abolish the system of pew leases and make all seats in the parish churches free. This was announced last week following a meeting at which the vestry of Trinity supported a view recently expressed by Dr. Manning, the rector, to the effect that the sale of church seats has always been an obstacle to the spirit of human fellowship in church life.

Although seats in seven of the churches of Trinity Parish are already free, the seats of Trinity Church, St. Paul's and St. Agnes' have been rented as usual up to this time. It will take some months to put the new policy into effect, but the intention is to accomplish it as quickly as possible. The pew leases at St. Agnes' will terminate in October and the Trinity leases will be completed in May.

Many of the pews of Trinity Church are owned in fee, as they are in other old churches throughout the country. It is believed that the owners of many of these pews will give them back to the church.

The vestry of Trinity in taking the progressive action expressed confidence that its example would influence other churches.

The resolution adopted by the Trinity vestry was as follows:

Resolved: That the seats in Trinity Church, St. Paul's Chapel and St. Agnes' Chapel, so far as the same are under the control of this corporation, be made free, as are the seats in the other churches of the parish, and that this action be taken as an expression of thanksgiving to Almighty God for the victory which He has granted to us, and as an evidence of our desire to do all that we can at this great moment in the world's history to make the Church the central place of human fellowship which it should be.

That a committee be at once appointed to formulate a plan for carrying this purpose into effect, and to report the same at the next monthly meeting of the vestry, in order that those who at present rent pews may have due notice of this change in policy.

FOR NEW CHILDREN'S CODE

Churchmen Are Interested in Effort Toward Legislation

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.—A very earnest commission is busily at work in the state trying to get through the legislature a new children's code. Quite recently new impetus has been given to the movement by a big gathering of interested men and women at the Missouri Athletic Club, and a very comprehensive address by Chief Justice Harry Olson of the Municipal Courts of Chicago. The meeting was held under the joint auspices of the St. Louis Chamber of Commerce and the Social Service Conference of St. Louis.

A large number of our clergy and laity are actively interested in the success of the proposed bill which is to be submitted to the fiftieth General Assembly. The proposed code provides for the abolition of common-law marriage, protection for the mother of an illegitimate child, a period of public notice before a marriage license can be secured, raising the age of consent, protection of children born out of wedlock and a number of other important matters looking to the welfare and protection of children. Judge Olson paid Missouri the compliment of saying that our proposed code is so far in advance of the Chicago code that he intended to take a copy of it to Chicago as an ideal to which his city must endeavor to attain.

DR. LUCIUS WATERMAN WILL DELIVER PADDOCK LECTURES

The Paddock Lectures for 1918-1919 will be delivered in the Chapel of the Good Shepherd, at the General Theological Seminary, during January and February, by the Rev. Lucius Waterman, D.D., rector of St. Thomas's Church, Hanover, New Hampshire. The subject is, "The Primitive Tradition of the Eucharistic Body and Blood." The topics of the seven lectures are announced as follows:

January 27, "Eucharistic Pre-Suppositions, Ancient and Modern, and Criticism of Theories now Holding the Field." January 29, "The Ephesine-Roman Tradition, as Shown in Rome, Carthage, Milan." January 31, "The Testimony of the Alexandrian School." February 3, "The Testimony of the Asiatic Schools." February 5, "The Writers Between the Years 381 and 431. A. The Latin Fathers." February 7, "The Writers Between the Years 381 and 431. B. The Greek Fathers." February 12, "Later Writers Pressing the Incarnation Analogy. Points of Sympathy with Modern Thought."

The lectures are delivered at Evensong at six o'clock.

Junior Clergy Missionary Association

BROOKLYN.—On Tuesday, January 14, the regular monthly meeting of the J. C. M. A. of New York was held at St. Ann's Church. The Rev. Charles L. Slattery, D.D., read a most inspiring paper upon the general topic "From Flag to Cross." This subject will probably be the central point in the whole series of addresses to be given this year. The unanimous opinion of the clergy present was that the message was of such vital importance that Dr. Slattery should be asked if he would not consent to have the society publish his address, so that the clergy and others might have it in permanent form. This will probably be done within the near future. Some forty members of the association were present.

The next meeting will be held on Tuesday, February 11, at the Chapel of the Intercession. The speaker will be the Rev. William E. Gardner, D.D.; the topic, "The Church's Reserves or the Religious Training of the Young."

Bishop Davis on War Work

SPRINGFIELD, MASSACHUSETTS.—Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Harris of Maple Street opened their home last week to the members of the Century Club when Bishop Davies appeared in his uniform and told in a delightful manner of his work in "Y" huts overseas. He told of services conducted by him in camps before the day of battle and another conducted in a German prison camp. He described in vivid word pictures the departure of platoons of aviators for the German lines and the celebration at Lille. His entire talk was made all the more interesting by anecdotes, both humorous and grave drawn from his own experiences. Bishop Davies exhibited several fine souvenirs of the war, among them a camouflaged German helmet, German gas masks, many of the latest French posters and the helmet which he himself wore at Verdun.

COMBINED CHURCH DRIVE TO BE HELD IN FEBRUARY

Fourteen Churches Will Unite in Raising $10,000,000

February will be the big month of the combined drive to be conducted by the fourteen Churches which will co-operate in raising a $10,000,000 fund for after-war emergency needs.

Dates of the campaigns to be conducted by most of these Churches have been announced here by the committee in charge of the movement, of which the Rt. Rev. Theodore Irving Reese, Bishop-Coadjutor of Southern Ohio, is chairman. All of the Churches will be centered on the undertaking next month, except the United Presbyterians and the Disciples of Christ, who have completed their allotments.

February 9 has been set aside by the committee as Interchurch Emergency Sunday throughout the country. Clergymen in every state will make strong appeals on that day in behalf of the fund.

In conformity with the committee's suggestion that the intensive drive be held from February 9 to 16, as far as possible, the Episcopalians and Presbyterians have already decided upon that date and most of the Baptist churches will also conduct their campaigns at the same time.

Announcement is made from the office of the director of the Interchurch Emergency Campaign Committee that a series of eleven conferences has been arranged. These inspirational gatherings have been planned by the committee to inform the public as to what the Church has been doing during the war; to impress upon both the public and the Church the fact that the Church has an after-war-time mission demanding both money and men; to create an atmosphere favorable toward giving when the various denominations make their appeal during February.

The importance of these conferences is shown in the following list of speakers already engaged:

The Rt. Rev. Theodore Irving Reese and the Rt. Rev. W. R. Stearly of the Protestant Episcopal Church; Bishop Luther B. Wilson of the Methodist Episcopal Church; Dr. Robert E. Speer, chairman of the General War-Time Commission of the Churches; Bishop William A. Quayle of the Methodist Episcopal Church; Dr. Daniel L. Marsh of the Methodist Episcopal Church; Dr. Charles W. Gilkey of Hyde Park Baptist Church, Chicago, Illinois; Dr. Nehemiah Boynton, sometime moderator of the Congregational Churches.

The Rt. Rev. W. R. Stearly, Bishop Coadjutor of the Diocese of Newark, will take the entire trip. Dr. Speer will speak at four of the conferences.

The cities, dates and public auditoriums thus far engaged are as follows:

New York, January 20, Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church.

Boston, January 21, Trinity Church.

Detroit, January 23, Central Methodist Church.

Philadelphia, January 31, Calvary Presbyterian Church.

One feature of the New York conference will be a large united choir gathered from the co-operating churches; of the Boston conference, a choir composed of forty male voices. The Rev. Alexander Mann, D.D., rector of Trinity Church, is taking an active interest in the Boston meeting.

THEOLOGICAL SEMINARIES UNITE FOR SUMMER SCHOOL

Opportunity for Student Soldiers Whose Courses Were Interrupted

The following important announcement has been made by four of the seminaries:

I. THE PROBLEM

Our theological seminaries, like all other institutions of higher learning, have felt heavily the call which the war has made upon the young manhood of the country. Many of our students enlisted in the midst of their seminary course; many more volunteered or were drafted on the eve of their admission. Some few of these are, at this writing, already discharged and seeking to resume their work; others, in constantly growing numbers, will be returning during the next few months; and these all will have arrears to face. Colleges and universities are adapting their courses to the situation, and arranging for summer schools, in order that their students who have been in the service may be able to make up for the war's interruption of their academic life. What is the student for the ministry to do? For months past, our seminary faculties have had this problem before them.

II. THE SOLUTION PROPOSED

Soon after the signing of the armistice, a meeting of the deans of our Church seminaries was called, to discuss what might be done. It was decided that the best way to meet the situation was to provide summer courses in theology, designed especially for students for the ministry who had been in the national service. This summer school will be a co-operative undertaking. Its faculty will be drawn from different seminaries; and we have assurance that these seminaries will give us of their best. Its immediate management has, by vote of the meeting just mentioned, been put in the hands of the undersigned, deans of seminaries whose comparative geographic nearness makes frequent conference possible.

III. WHAT CAN BE DONE?

It is proposed to hold the school for some ten weeks—divided into two terms. The courses to be offered will be sufficient in number and variety to meet the needs of students at various stages in their theological preparation. These courses will be intensive, they will have daily class meetings, and they will aim at rapid as well as thorough instruction. It is our belief that in this manner a competent and industrious student may be able to accomplish, during the summer, approximately the equivalent of an ordinary half-year's work. Thus, if the school succeeds, and can be repeated in the summer of 1920, a good student ought to be able to complete his full normal course of preparation for the ministry in a little more than two years instead of the usual three. This should be a welcome boon both to the student and to the Church: to the student by enabling him to enter upon his life work almost if not quite as soon as he would have done had there been no war; and to the Church, in that it will secure for it the student's services a year sooner than otherwise would be possible. The latter point seems to us important. For years, the inadequate supply of men for the ministry has been cause of grave anxiety, and the war, short as it has been, will for at least a year gravely lower the already too small number of ordinations. Any step that will expedite the entrance of these returning students upon their life work, without at the same time maiming their preparation for it, clearly ought to be taken.

IV. THE NUMBERS LIKELY; AND THE PROBABLE COST

No exact estimate can yet be made of the number of these soldier-students who would be likely to attend a summer school. The committee in charge are basing their calculations upon an estimated enrollment of forty. They frankly recognize that the number may well be less than that; they think it very possible that it may be more, even much more.

It is their estimate that a school of forty students can be maintained for approximately $7,000 to $8,000. They ask to have the larger sum mentioned guaranteed in advance, that the financial soundness of a venture, which has no invested capital to depend upon, may be assured. This estimate includes these items: (a) the ex-

THE Committee on a Summer School of Theology ask for prompt pledges of assistance; for it is only as these are secured that they can venture to announce their plans to the Church at large and to prospective students, or complete their business arrangements. Payments, however, will not be necessary before the end of May, and may then be made to George Zabriskie, Esq., 49 Wall Street, New York City, who has consented to act as treasurer. Pledges may be made to any member of the Committee of Deans.

penses of the faculty (who will give their services without remuneration, but who should not be asked also to pay their own way); (b) the necessary administrative and overhead costs—for printing, postage, service, and the like; and (c) the board and lodging of the students. The last mentioned item demands a word of explanation. We have good reason to count upon housing the students at little or no expense. But the question of their board is another matter; and we feel it wise to provide that. For probably few of our returning students will have been able, during the war, to lay by anything; and it may well prove difficult for many to secure work promptly. It seems foolish and wasteful that any young man who has made up his mind to study for the ministry, or who is midway in that study, should compete with many others who are looking for permanent employment; or even that he should spend a summer in a purely temporary job—when, at very small cost, he might spend those months in direct preparation for his life work. It seems, therefore, to the committee in charge, and to the deans in general, clearly wise that the Church should offer to take any thoroughly prepared young man, promptly on his discharge; put him at once upon active preparation for the ministry; and, in the meantime, put him also upon its payroll—much as the government, when he entered training camp, relieved him of all charges for self-support. Our project is frankly based upon this conviction of the Church's wise duty; and we unhesitatingly ask for the modest sum necessary to carry it through.

CANADIAN-AMERICAN DAY IS CELEBRATED IN DETROIT

Delegation from Toronto Preaches in Ten Churches

DETROIT, MICHIGAN.—January 12 was Canadian-American Sunday in the Detroit churches when a delegation of four clergy and two laymen from Toronto visited Detroit and preached in ten of the churches here. Last October a delegation from three of the border cities of the United States visited Toronto and this was the return visit to Detroit. On Monday the Michigan Church Club gave a dinner for the distinguished guests which proved not only an occasion of much pleasure but one in which the ties of common speech, literature, parentage and suffering made it an evening of good will and affection.

After a most felicitous welcome from Bishop Williams, Mr. Thomas Mortimer and Mr. Dyce Saunders of Toronto, spoke of the unity which should and does exist between the peoples of the United States and Canada. One very significant fact was brought out that all misunderstandings of the past years have been occasioned by ignorance and that we should see to it that the history taught in our public schools is true and is not a garbled account of events.

FIRE DESTROYS BUILDINGS AT ST. JOHN'S SCHOOL

LEXINGTON, KENTUCKY.—On January 9, the building used as the dining room and kitchen of St. John's Collegiate Institute and Industrial School at Corbin, Kentucky, caught fire from a defective flue and was almost completely destroyed. The prompt and active work of the school fire brigade saved practically everything in the building. The building was partially insured. The main buildings were saved only by the strong northeast wind that prevailed, which blew the flames away from them.

This is a severe blow to St. John's, coming as it does upon the top of a series of hardships covering the past two years. The school has been able to keep its head above water through the last two years of financial struggle only by the grace of God and the sacrifice of its officers and teachers. Subscriptions have fallen off fully 50 per cent., because of the appeals of the various war relief agencies, and expenses have increased fully 50 per cent. The day school, one source of local income, has been closed for some time on account of the influenza epidemic. Lack of missionary boxes, which supplied materials for the "store" from which some income was derived, caused the store to be closed. And now this fire adds considerable financial loss, as it will cost nearly 50 per cent. more to rebuild now.

At present the culinary department is housed in the rectory. Mr. Harold Wentworth, manager, Mrs. Stearns, matron, and one teacher are alone able to be at work and are carrying the load practically alone.

Annual Meeting of C. P. C.

The annual meeting of the Church Periodical Club will be held on Monday, January 27, at 11 o'clock, in the Parish House of the Church of the Heavenly Rest, 3 East Forty-fifth street, New York City. The speaker will be the Rt. Rev. Arthur S. Lloyd, president of the Board of Missions.

Personals

THE REV. HARRY C. ROBINSON has resigned the office of archdeacon in the Detroit archdeaconry, Diocese of Michigan, and has accepted the rectorship of St. Peter's Church, Detroit. Bishop Williams instituted Mr. Robinson as rector on the second Sunday after Christmas, January 5.

THE REV. JAMES H. CLARKE, D.D., for the five years past rector of St. Paul's Church, Sistersville, West Virginia, has accepted an invitation to take charge of St. John's Church, Cambridge, Ohio. Dr. Clarke will be in residence Septuagesima Sunday. His address will be Cambridge, Ohio.

THE REV. WILLIAM WAY, rector of Grace Church, Charleston, South Carolina, has for the third time been unanimously elected president of the New England Society of South Carolina.

THE REV. LIONEL C. DIFFORD, rector of Our Saviour Church, Salem, Ohio, has received and accepted a unanimous call to become rector of St. Stephen's Church, East Liverpool, Ohio, and will commence his duties there on February 1. During his stay in Salem Mr. Difford has been very active in the civic work of the city and has made many friends outside his church. He has built up his church until it has reached the most prosperous condition in its history, both financially and spiritually.

THE REV. D. R. OTTMANN, formerly chaplain at Post Aviation Field, Fort Sill, Oklahoma, has been honorably discharged. He has accepted work at Lexington, North Carolina, and enters upon his duties immediately. All mail for the Rev. or Mrs. Ottmann should be addressed to Lexington.

THE REV. S. S. WARE, retired, who resigned the rectorship of St. Peter's Church, Port Royal, Virginia, last fall, was recently presented by his many friends in Caroline county with a beautiful silver loving cup and plate, in appreciation of his services as rector of St. Peter's Church for thirty years.

THE REV. J. G. CAREY, formerly assistant minister at St. Thomas' Church, New Haven, and at Trinity Church, Pittsburg, assumed his duties as rector of the Church of Our Savior, Middleboro, on the first of January.

THE PERMANENT ADDRESS of the registrar of the Diocese of Fond du Lac is the Cathedral Parish House, Fond du Lac, Wisconsin.

The Death of Lieut. Edwards

Lieut. Frederick T. Edwards, a son of the Rev. Frederick Edwards, D.D., dean of St. Paul's Cathedral in Detroit, Michigan, is reported in last week's casualty list as dead in France from wounds received in action. Lieut. Edwards was a graduate of Columbia University and was a student in the General Theological Seminary when he enlisted in May, 1917. He was sent to an Officers' Training School at Fort Sheridan, Illinois, where he was commissioned, and was attached to the Eighteenth Field Artillery. Lieut. Edwards was wounded in the Argonne on October 5 and died the following day.

The Rev. Frederick Edwards, father of Lieut. Edwards, is a distinguished presbyter. For many years he was rector of St. James' Church, Milwaukee, and before going to Detroit was special preacher in Grace Church, New York, where his sermons attracted wide attention.

Our Weekly News Letters

SOUTHERN FLORIDA

Annual Convocation—The twenty-seventh annual convocation was held in Holy Cross Parish, Sanford, January 7-9. The Rev. W. L. Blaker was appointed secretary and the committee on lay credentials consisted of the Rev. W. W. Williams and the Rev. W. B. Curtis. The following appointments were made: Chancellor, L. C. Massey; vice-chancellor, T. P. Warlow; treasurer, F. H. Rand; registrar, the Very Rev. J. G. Glass; Council of Advice, the Very Rev. J. G. Glass, the Rev. A. S. Peck, A. J. Holworthy and A. Haden; examining chaplains: the Rev. Robert McKay, the Rev. J. H. Davet and the Rev. L. I. Insley. Encouraging reports were given by the treasurer, the chancellor and by committees. The treasurer's report showed only one parish which had not met all assessments in full, and of the eighty missions, seventy had paid in full.

A committee of three clergy and three laymen was appointed to take charge of extending the every member campaign throughout this district, the Tampa parishes and missions having set April 6-13 for such campaign there.

The Rev. W. C. Richardson and L. H. Lothridge were elected delegates to General Convention, the alternates being the Rev. C. E. Patillo and A. J. Holworthy.

BOSTON

Memorial Services for Col. Roosevelt—Major General Leonard Wood delivered the principal address at the Old North Church at the memorial service on Sunday morning. Frederick A. Tupper, a classmate of Mr. Roosevelt's at Harvard, and Mr. R. H. Dana also spoke. The arrangements were in charge of the vicar, the Rev. W. H. Dewart.

In the afternoon a special service was held at the Church of the Advent with an eulogy by Dr. Van Allen, and in the evening the Hon. Charles G. Washburn delivered a funeral oration at the cathedral in the presence of Governor Coolidge and a large congregation.

The Interchurch Emergency Campaign—The following letter relative to the Interchurch Emergency Campaign has been sent to all the clergy of the diocese by Bishop Babcock:

"A meeting in the interest of the Interchurch Emergency Campaign, in which our own Church has a part, will be held in Trinity Church, Boston, on Tuesday evening, January 21, at 8 o'clock.

"The Interchurch Emergency Campaign, under the auspices of the General War Time Commission of the Churches, has the endorsement of the War Commission of our own Church, of which Bishop Lawrence is the chairman, and Bishop Reese of Southern Ohio is the chairman of the Executive Committee. This meeting is held, not for the purpose of raising money or asking for pledges, but to awaken the Christian public generally to the obligations and opportunities which will confront the Christian Church during these days of reconstruction. Each Christian Communion will raise its own budget in its own way, and it is believed that this meeting will attract the attention and will rouse Christian men and women generally to the importance of supporting the after-war work of their own communion.

"The speakers at the meeting will be Bishop Stearly, Bishop Coadjutor of the Diocese of Newark, and Mr. Robert E. Speer."

Training Courses for Laymen—The archdeaconry of Boston has arranged for a series of training courses for laymen to be held at the cathedral rooms on Tuesday evenings beginning this week. The lectures on the Bible, the Prayer Book and the Church are from 7.30 to 8.15 p. m. and those on the faith, the parish and speaking and reading are from 8.30 to 9.15 p. m. so arranged that one can take in two lectures in the same evening. There are twelve lessons in each course.

Course I, The English Bible, the Rev. Ralph Harper; II, The Prayer Book, the Rev. George Hodges, D.D.; III, the Rev. Malcom Taylor; IV, the Rev. Professor Drown, D.D.; V, The Parish, the Rev. W. L. Clark; VI, Reading and Speaking, Mr. R. G. Appel.

CHARLES CHASE WILSON.

ATLANTA

Dean Returns from France—Dean Thomas Henry Johnston of St. Philip's Cathedral, Atlanta, returned last week and preached in the cathedral. The dean is lavish in his praises of the men in whose division he worked. He is an Irishman, and he knows what fighting is.

Dean Johnston entered the service last summer as a Y. M. C. A. worker. And he praises highly the work of this organization.

On the other hand, someone also speaks for the dean. He was not just the tame Y. M. C. A. worker, handing out hot chocolate and sandwiches. One can scarcely imagine that he would be. His commanding officer speaks of his service most highly. And he goes so far as to say that he is the only Y. M. C. A. man that he ever knew to go "over the top" with the men every time.

Council Postponed—The bishop has just sent out a letter announcing that the annual council of the diocese which was scheduled to meet in All Saints' Church, Atlanta, January 22, has been postponed to meet at the same place on May 7. This is the first meeting since the time was changed from spring to winter.

A Lecture on Church History—A lecture on Church history attended by other congregations is rather a new thing. Mr. H. R. Russell-Howland, who loves the Church devotedly and who is a student of Church history, visited the rector of St. James, Marietta, recently, and asked permission to deliver a lecture on this subject. He visited each minister in town, and all except the Baptist minister seemed to enter heartily into the plan. The lecture was given in St. James' Church in the afternoon of the first Sunday after the Epiphany, and of course it dealt with the primitive Church.

New Rector—The Rev. H. A. Willey has accepted the call extended him by the vestry of St. George's Church, Griffin, and took charge on the first Sunday after the Epiphany. Mr. Willey was locum tenens at the cathedral while Dean Johnston was absent in France, and his work there was splendid and much appreciated by the people of the parish.

INDIANAPOLIS

Council Meets—The 82d council of the diocese met in the cathedral, Indianapolis, January 15-16. All the reports covered a period of only eight months since the meeting of the last council in May. Owing to the closing of the churches for many weeks during the influenza epidemic and to the shortened year, the statistics showed a decrease in the number of communicants and of baptisms. Routine business only was transacted. The bishop's address dwelt largely on the lessons to be learned from the war and on the necessity of better support for the clergy in these days of expensive living. Speaking of the return of the soldiers from abroad, he said: "These men are not coming back to show us, as some have prophesied, what true Christianity is, but inevitably to ask whether our Christianity is true. We cannot escape the responsibility. As Christians, we cannot engender hate, we dare not advocate revenge. We have fought for truth and justice. We must ourselves be true and just. A League of Nations, both from a Christian and an economic point of view, is an end for which we should strive, a consummation which would bring nearer the realization of the Kingdom of God." He noted with dismay the proposal of the Secretary of the Navy that the United States should have the greatest navy in the world.

Dealing with the question of the support of this clergy, he said: "A Christian congregation has no greater moral right to compel its minister to live on an inadequate salary than has a merchant to pay less than a living wage."

The council adopted the following resolution: "Unable to understand how any people calling themselves Christians can withhold sympathy and cooperation from those who are endeavoring not only to safeguard the results of the most righteous victory which has been won, but also to order international relations in such a way as at least to lessen the chance of war and prevent the recurrence of conditions before which mankind stands today appalled, we feel that we would be false to our Christian profession if we did not interpret the recent struggle as war against war and plead for a righting of that decision in the peace terms."

The deputies to the General Convention are: the Rev. J. D. Stanley, the Rev. J. E. Sulger, the Rev. J. W. Comfort, the Rev. Lewis Brown, Judge T. L. Sullivan, Judge John L. Rupe, Professor Thos. E. Moran, Mr. J. D. Bielow.

NEW YORK

Death of George R. Sheldon—Men of international prominence in the financial, industrial and political world went to the Church of the Holy Communion last week to pay final tribute to the memory of Mr. George R. Sheldon, banker and one-time treasurer of the National Republican Committee. Mr. Sheldon died at Carbondale, Illinois, on January 14, from injuries received in an accident while inspecting a coal mine there. The funeral was held in the church of which he and members of his family long had been parishioners.

Famous Indian Fighter Dies—Capt. Francis Marion Gibson, U. S. A., retired, who was under command of General George A. Custer at the time the famous soldier was killed and his supporting battalion was wiped out by Indians, at the battle of the Little Big Horn, died in New York last week. He was seventy-one years old. He had been in the United States Army from 1867, when he was appointed a second lieutenant by President Johnson, until he retired in 1891. When the United States entered the world war Captain Gibson offered his services to the government and was assigned to recruiting duty in Brooklyn, where he served for more than a year.

The burial service was sung at St. Agnes' Chapel; the interment was in Arlington Cemetery.

Lee Birthday Celebration—A service of thanksgiving for the solidarity of the American people incidental to the anniversary of the birth of Robert E. Lee was held last Sunday at St. Mark's-in-the-Bouwerie. The birth anniversaries of three other great Americans—Alexander Hamilton, Benjamin Franklin and "Stonewall" Jackson—are within ten days.

F. L. Stetson Ill—Mr. Francis Lynde Stetson, one of the most active laymen of the diocese, is ill at his home in New York. Mr. Stetson is senior warden of the Church of the Incarnation; he was the law partner of Grover Cleveland.

Death of Parish Worker—Miss Dorothy Morgan, a member of the staff of Grace Parish, died in the Presbyterian Hospital on January 12. Miss Morgan was active in the work of the choir school and the work for the children of the parish.

G. F. S. Party—New Year's Day was happily observed at the war headquarters of the G. F. S. in New York by keeping open house through the afternoon and evening. Fully 150 associates and members were present. Refreshments were served at a table decorated with Christmas greens and with a huge Jack Horner pie as the center piece. During the afternoon Mrs. Wallace King entertained the company with several amusing monologues and Miss Nellie Scott told fortunes in a mysterious palm-reading booth at the end of the room. Miss Anita Lachmund's dancing was a delightful part of the evening's program and a forerunner of the general dancing which took place later.

Every Name Canvass—An Every Name Canvass was held Sunday afternoon, January 12, in Grace Parish, Nyack, of which the Rev. A. L. Longley assumed the rectorship November 1. Fifty men left the church at two o'clock, while the ladies prepared supper in the parish house. At six all of the workers had returned, and after supper reported a gain in pledges for current expenses of over $3000 and a gain for missions and benevolences of over $600.

MARGARETTA MILLER.

VERMONT

Death of the Rev. T. F. Turner—The Rev. Thornton Floyd Turner, rector of St. Peter's Church, Bennington, died on January 10, 1919. The funeral services were held at Calvary Church, New York, the following Monday afternoon at three o'clock and the interment was at Mastic, Long Island, the following day.

Mr. Thornton entered the Officers' Training School at Plattsburg as early as 1916, and in 1917 he sought eagerly an appointment as chaplain in the army when already his days were numbered. It would be difficult to exaggerate his interest in anything he deemed helpful to his Church, to his country or to humanity. His parishioners admired and loved him.

G. R. BRUSH.

BALTIMORE

The Diocesan Convention—The diocesan convention, which should have been held the last week in October, was postponed on account of the prevalence of the influenza. It will meet at the Memorial Church, Baltimore, on Wednesday and Thursday, January 29 and 30. It will be preceded on Tuesday night by a mass meeting under the auspices of the Social Service Commission at Lehman's Hall, at which Bishop Murray will preside. The speakers will be the Rt. Rev. Edwin S. Lines, Bishop of Newark, and Miss Vida D. Scudder, professor at Wellesley College, upon the subject, "The Church and Reconstruction." WYLLYS REDE.

CHICAGO

Choir Dinner at the Cathedral—On Tuesday evening, January 14, a choir dinner was held at Sumner Hall at the cathedral, at which many who had been connected with the cathedral in former years were present: former deans, former choir-masters, and former choir boys. Besides being a good dinner in the ordinarily accepted use of the word, it proved a veritable feast of reminiscences about the early days of the cathedral. The first speaker was Mr. Peter C. Lutkin, dean of the Music School of Northwestern University, who was a member of the choir under Canon Knowles. He joined the choir in 1867, at which time it was the only vested boy choir west of the Allegheny Mountains, and played the organ in the cathedral at the age of fourteen. Mr. Weddertz, the present organist and choirmaster, gave an outline of the history of the cathedral choir, and then called upon Bishop Anderson, who told some stories about his early ministry in Canada, and urged upon the choir boys the two duties of courtesy and reverence, gentlemanliness toward men and gentlemanliness toward God. Among the other speakers were the Rt. Rev. S. M. Griswold, suffragan bishop of the diocese, and the Rev. George D. Wright and the Rev. J. B. Haslan, both in former years in charge of the work at the cathedral.

Special Preachers—On Sunday, January 12, Bishop Pagc, of Spokane, was the preacher at St. Paul's Church, and the Rev. George A. Beecher, Bishop of Western Nebraska, preached at St. Chrysostom's Church in the morning, and at Christ Church in the evening.

The "Chicago Plan"—The whole city is pushing the development of the "Chicago Plan," with a program for extensive civic improvements, as a reconstruction measure. The "Boulevard Link," which was started some time ago, connecting the boulevards of the North and South sides by a new bridge over the Chicago River, is almost completed. Other features of the plan include the building of two new railroad stations, the filling in of land for a new park along the lake front on the south side, and the opening of new diagonal streets connecting different parts of the city. Sunday, January 19, was kept as "Nehemiah Day" by most of our churches, and sermons were preached on the need for aiding in this work of improving and beautifying Chicago.

CHARLES L. STREET.

CENTRAL NEW YORK

A Growing Parish—The new Mission Church of All Saints at Johnson City has just made a remarkable record of progress, under the priest in charge, the Rev. T. Raymond Jones. Services were started about two years ago in this growing town. With some assistance from the neighboring parishes in Binghamton, a piece of land was purchased on the main street in a central location, at a cost of $3,300. A temporary church has since been erected, an unusually large number of candidates for Confirmation have been presented to the bishop coadjutor, congregations have grown so rapidly that the church has been enlarged, and recently an every member canvass was held which resulted in pledges through the envelope system of $2,500 and cash subscriptions sufficient to pay the indebtedness of $2,400 on the church and grounds. The parish hopes soon to become independent with a larger and more beautiful permanent church and a rectory. At Endicott, which is also for the time in charge of Mr. Jones, there is a fund on hand for building a rectory.

Progress of New Hartford—During the rectorship of the Rev. Henry Smart, who has just resigned from St. Stephen's Church, New Hartford, after five years' service, many memorials have been given to the church and the parish debt considerably reduced. Mr. Smart's resignation takes effect March 1.

NEWARK

Grace Church Free of Debt—Grace Church, Newark, was able to begin the New Year free of debt as the result of the Christmas offering for parish expenses. This amounted to about $1,300, plus a $500 Liberty Bond, given by a member to be used at the discretion of the rector, the Rev. Charles L. Gomph. During the Board of Mission's fiscal year of fourteen months, the parish gave more than $1,300 for general missions, thus more than meeting its full apportionment. In 1918 its gifts for diocesan missions and interests exceeded $1,200; while the Church School gave $150 to general missions and nearly $100 for special missionary objects.

Quiet Day for Clergy Scheduled—A Quiet Day, for meditation and conference, will be observed by the clergy of the diocese in Trinity Cathedral, on St. Matthias' Day, February 24.

At St. Paul's Church, Hoboken—At the service at St. Paul's Church, Hoboken, on the evening of the First Sunday after Epiphany the branch of the Girls' Friendly Society was admitted after Evening Prayer. Five working associates and twenty members pledged themselves to the rules of the society and were presented with the G. F. S. badge by the rector, the Rev. Henry Baldwin Todd. A goodly congregation was present and interested. At the early service in the morning the society made their corporate Communion and presented the church with a beautiful pair of brass altar vases which were set apart for use at that time. The vases are a gift of remembrance of their admission, executed by The Gorham Company.

Montclair Rector Honored—The Rev. Luke M. White, rector of St. Luke's Church, Montclair, has been elected vice chairman of the commission on evangelism of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, of which James M. Speers of Montclair is chairman, and Rev. C. L. Goodell of New York, executive secretary. Other representatives of the Episcopal Church on the commission are Bishop Ethelbert Talbot of the Diocese of Bethlehem, the Rev. Dr. Floyd W. Tomkins of the Church of the Holy Trinity, Philadelphia; George Wharton Pepper of the Board of Missions, Edward H. Bonsall, president of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew; the Rev. James E. Freeman of Minneapolis, and the Rev. C. P. Tinker of New York.

The aim of the commission is to aid in bringing together denominational commissions, to help forward federated and simultaneous evangelistic meetings throughout the country, under the direction of the pastors and also to co-operate in the educational evangelism of the home and Sunday School wherever desired.

New Rector for Newark—The Rev. Frederick Alfred Coleman of Trinity Church, South Norwalk, Connecticut, has accepted a call to St. Paul's Church, Newark, and will begin his duties there in March. In coming to St. Paul's Mr. Coleman is returning to the diocese in which he was ordained and where he began his ministry. After graduating from the General Theological Seminary he served at Little Falls and Butler in this diocese, before going to St. John's Church, Stamford, Connecticut.

GRACE MCKINNEY.

MINNESOTA

Results of the Advent Call—A writer in St. Clement's Chimes, St. Clement's Church, St. Paul, has the following to say with reference to the Advent Call: "Thank God, the Advent Call came and please God, we shall keep it with us." Its effect upon everyone concerned was wonderful. The faith of the intercessors was deepened by the fact that as they prayed they realized they were bringing before God Himself the needs of our Church and Nation. The hearty welcome given to all of the messengers made them feel that those whom they visited were in the most hearty accord with the whole movement. They had been carefully prepared for their work by the inspiring addresses given by Bishop McElwain on the quiet day."

Theodore Roosevelt—Throughout the state of Minnesota, on January 12, Sunday, special reference was made in almost all of the churches to the life and work of our late ex-President, Theodore Roosevelt, with special emphasis on his Christian character.

A Successful Campaign—An Every Member canvas was inaugurated in the Church of St. John's Evangelist, St. Paul, about the middle of last December. The report to date shows a total of approximately 275 new subscribers, and a net gain in parish income of $9,100. It is expected that this amount will be increased by over $500. When it is remembered that the original number of subscribers in the parish when the campaign opened was only 291, and is now nearly 600, it will be easily understood how successful the campaign was.

Consecration of Church—On Sunday, January 19, the church of St. Timothy, Minneapolis, was formally consecrated by Bishop McElwain. This church, under the leadership of the Rev. F. L. Anderson, has been successful in freeing itself from all indebtedness.

Twin City Clericus—After reviewing Mr. Fosdick's article in the January Atlantic Monthly, "The Trenches and the Church at Home," the Rev. G. G. Bennett of St. Paul's Church, Minneapolis, at a recent meeting of the Twin-City Clericus, stressed the necessity of the clergy's emphasizing the following: 1. That both the clergy and laity should learn the opinion of the men returning from the old world, with reference to the Church. 2. That the social side of Church life should receive greater attention than in the past. 3. That larger consideration should be given to the unified efforts of the various Churches to spread the Kingdom of Christ. 3. That the clergy should go through the searching self-examination of their preaching.

F. D. TYNER.

NEW JERSEY

Sunday School Institute Meeting—The semi-annual meeting of the Camden district of the New Jersey Sunday School Institute occurred in St. Paul's Church, Camden, January 15. A majority of the twenty-four Sunday Schools in the district were represented by 65 delegates. The Rev. Frederick A. Warden of Moorestown presided. The evening service, which consisted of the Litany, was said by the Rev. H. E. Thompson of Woodbury. More than usual of the clergy were present, the Camden Clericus having met at the same place earlier in the day.

The election of officers resulted in the choice of the Rev. Henry O. Jones as president; the Revs. John Wallis Ohl and Robert G. W. Williams, vice-presidents; Mr. E. B. Jillard of Collingswood, secretary; Mr. Millwood Truscott of Camden, treasurer.

In the afternoon contributed questions were answered by the Rev. Charles S. Lewis of Burlington, and an address on teacher training was made by the Rev. Llewellyn N. Caley of Philadelphia. At the evening session the address was by the Rev. Eugene S. Pearce of Rome, N. Y., on "The War and Religious Education."

Institution Office at Asbury Park—The Rev. C. Canterbury Corbin, formerly of the Diocese of New York, was recently instituted as rector of St. Augustine's Parish for colored people, Asbury Park. The Bishop of New Jersey was the officiant, the preacher was the Rev. Robert MacKellar of Red Bank. Ten priests were in attendance, and a large congregation.

There was Evensong on the evening of the same day, with a sermon by the Rev. Charles S. Sedgewick of Plainfield.

Mr. Corbin succeeds the Rev. August E. Jensen in the important work of St. Augustine's.

H. E. THOMPSON.

WASHINGTON

In Memory of Col. Roosevelt—Under appointment of the Bishop of Washington, the services at the cathedral at 11 o'clock on Sunday, January 12, were a memorial of the late Theodore Roosevelt. The national ensign was carried in procession, Mr. Roosevelt's favorite hymn, "How Firm a Foundation, Ye Saints of the Lord" (636 of the hymnal), and the national hymn were sung in the service, and commemorative prayers were offered. The bishop was assisted by the dean and Canon De Vries. Bishop Harding was the preacher, taking his text from Ecclesiasticus, "Let us now praise famous men." He illustrated his sermon with many personal reminiscences of the Colonel. The bishop took for his theme the brief tribute of Senator Lodge in the Senate the day Mr. Roosevelt died, to the effect that he was a great patriot, a great American, and a great man.

Ordination to the Priesthood—An interesting service took place at St. Augustine's Chapel, Kansas City, on St. John's Day last when the Rev. Henry E. Rahming was advanced to the priesthood by the bishop of the diocese, the Rt. Rev. Sidney C. Partridge, assisted by a number of the city clergy. The sermon was preached by the Rev. M. E. Spatches, and the candidate was presented by the Rev. E. A. Moore. The Rev. Mr. Rahming will have charge of St. Augustine's, Kansas City and St. Matthias, St. Joseph. CHAS. A. WEED.

IOWA

St. Katharine's School Full—St. Katharine's School Davenport, the diocesan school for girls, enters upon a new era of prosperity this year, when it reports sixty-eight boarding scholars, and the creation of a waiting list.

This enrollment is the largest the school has ever had, and takes its capacity. Such a condition makes necessary the building this year of the separate building for teachers, which was deferred last year on account of the war conditions. A modest structure costing perhaps $10,000 is proposed, a nucleus for the fund being in hand, and assurances that many friends of the school will be ready contributors to it. It will be a memorial to Marion Crandall, the St. Katharine's teacher who was killed by shell fire while in Y. M. C. A. work on the French front.

ALLEN JACOBS.

WESTERN MICHIGAN

New Dean at Work—The new dean of St. Mark's Pro-Cathedral, Grand Rapids, the Rev. Leslie Fenton Potter, late of St. Simon's Church, Chicago, entered upon his duties January 1 and will occupy the deanery with his family as soon as his household goods are transported.

Receives an Automobile—The Rev. G. P. T. Sargent of Grace Church, Grand Rapids, is rejoicing in a Christmas present to his parish of an Overland coupe which will enable him to drive about protected from rain and snow.

A Children's Play—The touching little play, The Magi of To-day, which was distributed by the G. B. R. E. before Advent to interest and instruct Church people and children on the needs of the orphans of Armenia and Syria, was beautifully rendered by the school of St. Paul's Church, St. Joseph, on New Year's Eve. (So far as known this was the only response made in the way to the appeal of the Armenian and Syrian Relief Committee in the diocese.) The educational and inspirational value of the play was appreciated and a splendid offering resulted.

BETHLEHEM

Archdeaconry Meeting Successful—A most successful meeting of the archdeaconry of Scranton was held at St. Luke's Church, Scranton, January 7 and 8.

Instead of the usual evening service on the first night of the archdeaconry, a round table conference on parochial problems was held. At the conference the new domestic secretary of the Board of Missions, the Rev. Francis S. White, led in the discussion.

Archdeacon Durell of the archdeaconry of Reading led in the discussion of the missionary outlook of the diocese. Both topics proved so interesting that the evening's program could not be completed. The relation of the General Board of Missions to the individual rector and the problems arising out of the present deficit were thoroughly analyzed and the clergy felt that they had secured a new point of view.

At the all day meeting on the 8th after the Holy Communion, breakfast was served in the parish house, and at the business succession the Rev. J. Talbot Ward, rector of St. Clement's Church, Wilkes-Barre, nephew of Bishop Talbot, was elected archdeacon of Scranton. The Rev. E. G. N. Holmes of Trinity Church, Carbondale, was made secretary, and Mr. C. J. Arnold was elected treasurer.

A Presbyterian minister, the Rev. George W. Wellburn, D.D., one of the committee of three in the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, to frame the resolution calling for a conference on Organic Union, spoke on this movement in a thoroughly sympathetic way, showing his appreciation of the position of the Church and the many problems related thereto.

At the luncheon the retiring archdeacon, the Ven. D. Webster Coxe, D. D., received the felicitations of both the laity and the clergy. A purse of $450.00 in gold was presented to him in behalf of his friends throughout the diocese. Archdeacon Coxe was made at the suggestion of the bishop, archdeacon emeritus. He has served 25 years as archdeacon and 34 of a ministry of 50 years in the missionary work of the dioceses of Central Pennsylvania and Bethlehem.

An Epiphany Call—Seven of the clergy of the district, including the archdeacon of the Niobrara deanery, Dr. Ashley, and three rural deans, gathered in Sioux Falls on January 2 and 3 for a conference, and to take part in the ordination of the Rev. David Clark to the priesthood. The meetings were held at the deanery and the bishop's house. The subjects discussed were the deanery system, methods for home study, subjects for class study during Lent, and the extension of the Advent Call to men. As a result of the discussion of the last named subject an Epiphany Call was sent out by the bishop to all of the clergy. The plan is to gather the men together once a week in discussion in Bible class groups where the spirit of prayer and preparation for service might be developed. "The assembling of men, for conference and mutual development, once a week—this is the Epiphany Call." The following topics for such classes were suggested: 1. Why pray? 2. What is truth? 3. Do we need a new religion? 4. Can we have Church unity? 5. How to use the Bible. 6. Why are you a Churchman? 7. Why is profanity an evil? 8. Social reconstruction. As the bishop says in his call: "We may not accomplish great things, but we can make a start. There is no greater need in South Dakota than to make earnest Christians and loyal communicants out of our 'confirmed persons.'"

Ordinations—On Friday morning, January 3 in the cathedral at Sioux Falls the ordination to the priesthood of the Rev. David Clark took place. The candidate was presented by the Rev. E. F. Siegfriedt, and the sermon was preached by the Very Rev. E. B. Woodruff, dean of the cathedral. Mr. Clark is stationed at Rapid City. He is the second son of the Rev. A. B. Clark, who for some thirty years has been the missionary to the Indians on the Rosebud Reservation. His brother, the Rev. John Clark, is at present the missionary on the Rosebud.

On Sunday, January 5, Bishop Burleson ordained to the diaconate in Christ Church, Yankton, Prof. A. P. Larrabee, who is a member of the faculty of Yankton College. Prof. Larrabee, for two years past, has been doing useful and effective work as a lay reader at Yankton and outlying missions. He continues his work at the college and will assist the priest in every possible way.

Death of Mrs. Mitchell—Mrs. Albert Mitchell, the only daughter of the Rev. William Holmes, our superintending presbyter on the Santee Reservation in Nebraska, died just before Christmas. She was a young woman of unusual mental ability and Christian character and her death is a great loss to the family and the community.

Bishop Remington to Return Soon—Bishop Burleson has received word from Suffragan Bishop Remington that he expects to leave France shortly after the new year and will take up his work in South Dakota by the first of March. It will be remembered that Bishop Remington went directly into service on the day of his consecration and has, up to this time, done no work in South Dakota.

COLORADO

Festival of the Three Kings—Elaborated and presented year after year by the late Rev. John H. Houghton, but omitted last year in his memory, the Festival of the Three Kings was again observed at St. Mark's, Denver, by his successor, the Rev. F. Ingley. A long procession down the aisle in ancient garb culminated in the typically dressed characters of the mythical Gaspar, Melchior and Balthasar, kings of the Orient.

At the Convalescent Home—The living room of the Church Convalescent Home, Denver, has been furnished in a most artistic and cheerful way by the Lectern League. Here as usual a Christmas party of friends of the home assembled by invitation to see what the committee could do. The Sisters brought the children and a gift was presented to every patient in the house.

The Epidemic—The Rev. Thomas Worral was handed a warrant on Thanksgiving Day for holding service for his congregation of seven persons at Longmont; otherwise the usual business of church closing went on in Colorado as elsewhere in thus attempting to check the influenza, while places of business and latterly theatres as well were wide open. A heavy toll of lives was taken and sporadically the disease still threatens, but everywhere churches and schools are open again, and as an epidemic the ravage is past and the death rate normal although it is reported that some parts of the state were dreadfully depopulated.

RHODE ISLAND

Clericus Rehearses New Hymns—At the January meeting of the Clerical Club at Grace Church, Providence, the Rev. Frank Damrosch, Jr., of Trinity Church, Bristol, addressed the club on the new hymnal, using the piano for illustration, and led the clergy in the singing of some of the new hymns.

The Last Member—The recent death of the Rev. Edmund A. Angell, in Brooklyn, on January 11, removed the last surviving member of the Rhode Island diocesan convention which elected Bishop Clark to his episcopal office in 1854. In his early years Mr. Angell was a vestryman of St. Peter's Church, Manton, during the period when the present church edifice was erected.

English Church News

A series of vesper services is being held one Sunday afternoon a month at the First Baptist Church, Providence, this winter, as the gift of ten churches of Providence to Brown University. They are in continuation of similar services held in previous years by the university itself in a college hall. Three of our parishes are participating: All Saints', Grace, and St. John's. The Rev. Dr. W. S. Rainsford preached in November, and Dean Brown of Yale University, in December.

CONNECTICUT

Archdeaconry Meeting Held—The Epiphany meeting of the Hartford archdeaconry was held at St. John's Church, Hartford (W. T. Hooper, B.D., rector), January 9. The Rev. George T. Linsley of Hartford, preached a strong sermon on the use of the Prayer Book during the war and during the period of reconstruction.

The chief business of the meeting was the election of archdeacon in place of J. H. S. Harte. The Rev. E. T. Mathison of Rockville, was elected. Other elections were as follows: The Rev. N. H. Heermans, secretary-treasurer, and the Rev. E. Livingstone Wells, secretary of the clericus.

The newly elected archdeacon was appointed chairman of a committee to investigate the matter of Sunday moving pictures in Hartford. The Rev. S. R. Coloday, and the Rev. H. T. Hooper were chosen to work with Mr. Mathison, and together with two laymen were given power to act in the matter before the next meeting of the archdeaconry. If it be thought wise, the matter is to be brought before the assembly now meeting in this city.

Clericus Meets—Immediately after the meeting of the archdeaconry, the Hartford clericus assembled. The Rev. S. R. Coloday of Christ Church, Hartford, gave an excellent address on Mormonism. Mr. Coloday's close association with Bishop Spalding gave him a particularly clear grasp of the subject.

PHILADELPHIA

Clerical Changes—The Rev. Charles C. Pierce has resigned the rectorship of St. Matthew's Church and was made rector emeritus. Dr. Pierce is in charge of the registration and care of graves of all troops who have died abroad in France and Belgium, Italy and England. It is the importance and length of this work that has led him to sever the tie with his parish. The parish testified to its regret at the necessary loss of its loved leader, and at the same time its pride in the work he has done in the service of his country. The rank of lieutenant-colonel has been given to Dr. Pierce, which is the highest rank a chaplain can hold in the army.

Another chaplain has been called to St. David's Church in Manayunk, the Rev. Francis B. Barnett. Mr. Barnett was, before the war, rector of the parish in Ridley Park. When the war came, he went overseas as chaplain of the Roosevelt Hospital Unit. Later he was commissioned a captain in the chemical service of the army.

The Rev. Joseph H. Earp has resigned the rectorship of St. Paul's Memorial Church, to go into social service work. The Rev. Granville Taylor is supplying at St. Paul's for the time being.

The Rev. Addison A. Ewing, formerly an examining chaplain in the diocese of Delaware, has accepted a curacy at the Church of St. Luke and the Epiphany.

Church Finance—The Challenge returns to its text this week, on the subject of Church finance. It admits that money is needed, especially for the training of ordinands from the army. But it points out that the appeal is too complacent; it appears to be an attempt to move with greater facility on existing lines, and sums up its purport thus: "Here is the Church of England, 'without spot or blemish or any such thing' but rather short of cash. Can anyone behold its beauty and not desire forthwith to add to its resources?" Reform, adds the Challenge, is more important than money. There is no headquarters staff: everything pivots round the person of the Archbishop of Canterbury. And again comes the question as to who is to have the administering of the fund when raised.

An Objection on the Spiritual Side—

There is another objection, besides the practical one of the Challenge, which is voiced by the Rev. J. H. Peile in the Church Times. In effect, the archdeacon takes the "tainted money" stand. He objects both to the principle and the methods. "Rich churches have never been strong churches spiritually: I do not believe the Church of England would be better equipped for spiritual work if it were given the five million pounds to-morrow." Which is, perhaps, a little unfair of the archdeacon: some critic is sure to point out that the sum in question would by no means make a rich church. An annual distribution of the interest would do little more than remove all the clergy, as well as the London ones, from the risks of bankruptcy. And an even unkindly critic will discover that the archdeacon holds a benefice, which is not of the poorest, as well as his archdeaconry. But he is on surer ground in objecting to the methods employed, which he describes as a pale imitation of those made familiar to us during the war, in connection with recruiting, food economy, and war bonds. The motives for giving are frankly worldly, and the Church is presented to the laity as an agency for getting money out of their pockets. The archdeacon holds that the Church ought not to touch money which is given for an irrelevant motive, but "only what is pressed upon it for the love of God." And only the conviction that the Church is what it professes to be, and that what it offers is indispensable, will make men liberal and cheerful givers.

Exchange of Pulpits—There are still sporadic evidences of a desire to break down the isolation of the Church from Nonconformists by individual actions. The latest case is from Peterborough, right under the eye of the bishop, so to speak. The clergyman in question has arranged an exchange of pulpits with a Baptist minister. The bishop's attention having been called to the matter, he writes that the clergyman did not see fit to consult him before making the arrangement, but Dr. Woods does not give any indication of what he proposes to do. The Church Times, which has always been quite appreciative of this bishop, although he belongs to the Liberal Evangelical school, is trying to stiffen him in the matter. "If the bishop does not prohibit the execution of this plan we shall be left wondering what episcopal authority means." It describes such acts as a trifling and insincere treatment of the great problem of reunion, and declares that if they are not arrested, the end of it will be "a large exodus from a Church which has no mind of its own."

Clerical Combatant Gets V. C.—

There were but three Victoria Crosses awarded to chaplains, and one of the three was killed at the end of the war. But there was a fourth whom we may also claim, though he was also killed a month before the end. But in this case the honor was won, not as chaplain, but as combatant. Bernard Vann was one of those who made friends everywhere, and of course an athlete. He was ordained only three years when the war broke out. He immediately threw up his mastership at Wellingborough School and joined up as a private. But he quickly gained promotion, and at the time of his death he held the rank of captain, with brevet rank of acting lieutenant colonel, in which capacity he commanded a part battalion of the Sherwood Foresters. His V. C. came as a posthumous honor. The London Gazette details the story of his bravery in leading his men against heavy odds at a time when everything depended on the advance going forward, in knocking out a field-gun detachment, and otherwise showing great courage. But what the Gazette does not tell is that Colonel Vann carried about with him a portable altar and his vestments, so that he was able to celebrate the Sacrament for his men. The war, as the Church Times remarks, has been fruitful in many strange ways. But surely this one of the brave soldier, who never forgot that he was also a priest, "stands alone amid fine records of the English clergy, and indeed of the army."

JAMES CAIRNS.

Diocesan Educational Day—Wednesday, January 22, will be observed as Diocesan Educational Day by services and meetings at the Church House at Twelfth and Walnut Streets.

Message from Bishop Lawrence

The War Commission has issued an appeal to the Church which appears in facsimile as the supplement of THE CHURCHMAN this week.

The Open Forum

Theodore Roosevelt

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

I would be untrue to an impulse born of profound love and gratitude for Theodore Roosevelt, if I failed to acknowledge to you my personal appreciation of the editorial appearing in the issue of THE CHURCHMAN of January 11.

The eloquence of Mr. Roosevelt's life makes it difficult to define adequately in mere words the high spirit prompting his "unwasted days." Such character of soul one feels able to interpret but meagerly. My thought of him is quite well satisfied by your masterful eulogy.

I am conscious, too, that there is a similarity of the gift of expression in your editorial of Mr. Roosevelt which characterizes much that appears in THE CHURCHMAN. Your contribution to the spread of Christ's Kingdom is a large one, because you show the way to more perfect life with added clearness. It is a loss to the Church that every churchman does not read THE CHURCHMAN.

Thank you for your editorial on Theodore Roosevelt. WARREN HIRES TURNER.

Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

The Concomitants of War

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

Your issue of January 11 is so remarkably full of splendid articles that I dislike to suggest a single flaw.

But it seems to me that you miss the mark in this sentence on page 38, under the head "Women and Peace," viz.: "A little more careful study of history, however, reveals the fact that . . . the violation and enslavement of women has gone hand in hand with the killing of men." I am not a deep student of history but my idea is that this statement is utterly untrue as to all wars with civilized peoples for a great many years and is entirely untrue as to English-speaking races. It is not true as to the Franco-Prussian War or any of the wars in England or America, barring the red Indians of America who were made to pay dearly for their barbarities.

When Cornwallis, during the Revolutionary War, marched through this section towards Guilford Court House, he camped in the County of Halifax, North Carolina, and a woman went to him and complained that she had been outraged by one of his soldiers. He drew up his soldiers in line and asked her to identify the guilty soldier. She did so and he called a drum head court martial and heard evidence, after which the soldier was promptly shot.

Your articles in this issue on Roosevelt and on Wilson breathe out such a fine tribute to the American spirit that the sentence in question seems very reactionary, where one would have expected a ringing statement that those who had waged war on women, like the American Indians, should be treated as outlaws and executed. It does not become us to recognize outrages as natural concomitants of war. Anglo-Saxon and French civilizations do not allow them.

THOS. H. BATTLE.

Rocky Mount, North Carolina.

The Porto Rico Hospital

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

As you reported in your paper some time ago, the hospital of St. Luke's in Ponce, Porto Rico, was badly damaged by the great earthquake which shook that island last fall. Though the building was by no means destroyed, the foundations were so badly cracked that the bishop has informed us they will have to spend $5,000 or $6,000 before it can be used again.

Towards this the bishop has already received two gifts of $500 each, one of $400 and one of $100; this last from a missionary whose resources are all too small. Will you be kind enough to publish this letter in the hope that we may secure some further contributions so as to complete the sum necessary?

It would be of interest to all to know that during the last two months the hospital staff has taken charge of the emergency hospitals, where sufferers from the influenza epidemic were cared for. Could the readers of this know what a godsend the services of our hospital staff have been to thousands of people down there, they would pour in their offerings in the same spirit and for the same reason that they have been giving to the Red Cross.

The British Labor Program

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

In the recent discussion of the Peace Message of the Social Service Commission, defenders as well as critics ignore one point: the Message nowhere endorses the program of the British Labor Party; it calls on the Church "seriously to study" that program, an attention which might be wisely bestowed on the plans of the Prince of Darkness himself; and it remarks that the leading points of the program are "likely to form the basis for reconstruction policies," a statement convertible but innocuous.

Personally I agree with Mr. Jessup that to endorse the program might be unsuitable on the part of the Commission. That Commission, appointed by the Church at large, should be above partisanship and propaganda. But I disagree with Mr. Jessup, and that earnestly and vehemently, in regard to the position he appears to take—that consideration of a political program is none of the Church's business. This position is a common one; in these critical times it is fatal. Unless Christians turn to their holy faith for guidance in a right attitude toward the grave practical problems of shaping the collective life which press on our generation, they might as well slip back into monastic individualism and be done with it. Nothing is a more imperative duty for a body like the Social Service Commission than to undermine the old heresy that opinions on political and economic problems are irrelevant to Christianity.

Why Hooverize?

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

We have given up sugar, we have given up wheat, we have given up meat gladly—but why hooverize in our prayers and praises?

Is there any more spiritual uplift left for other people because we go without, and rush through the service as if it were a movie show or a snap-shot?

I was brought up to think that one of the blessings of belonging to the Episcopal Church was that we of the congregation were protected by its ordered service from the idiosyncrasies of individual clergymen—but now, everyone "hath a psalm, hath a doctrine" (generally one psalm, in place of the Psalter), and every man seems to do that which is "right in his own eyes."

The layman goes to church, after perhaps preparing himself by some little thought and reading for the special service of the day, and takes his seat.

The clergyman enters and plunges into the service wherever his whim takes him. The general exhortation is cut out as so much dead wood, without regard to its purpose as a sort of vestibule, wherein you may divest your mind of its outside wrappings, preparatory to entering into the presence of God.

Recently I have known the confession and absolution and Lord's Prayer to be omitted, on the ground of their "penitential character" not being appropriate to the Christmas festival season. But are not the people especially entitled to absolution during the season of the birth of the Christmas child, Jesus, Saviour of His people from their sins?

You would like, during the service, to pray for the "all sorts and conditions of men" who come within your acquaintance. If so, you must do it privately, for that prayer is no longer fashionable with the clergy.

With the omission of the epistle and gospel, the very kernel of the service for each Sunday in the Christian year is lost, except for the communicants.

As for the lessons, I will leave them to someone who knows where they come from and what rule directs their use! The changes are too bewildering for me. I only know that I mourn bitterly over the loss of some familiar ones, so perfect for the occasion that you never read them in your Bible without fitting them to the familiar day. They were interpreted for us by their use on certain days.

Are our children of the next generation to have no such associations with a complete and well-balanced Prayer Book, designed not so much to "please the people" as to educate and train them in Christian knowledge and character?

There are many beautiful new prayers written, and they will doubtless stand the test of time and be at length incorporated in our Prayer Books. But the old prayers pray better in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, and the war brought out shades of meaning in them that we never thought of in peace times.

And let me say in conclusion, that there is a brevity of service which conduces more to restlessness than the dignity of a longer one. Surely an hour and a half—the time given to an ordinary concert, and not quite half the time given to an opera—is not too long for a service offered to Almighty God, if it be conducted with reverence and “sanctified common sense.” Our forefathers knew this when they constructed a service which would train us to worship God “in the beauty of holiness.”

When is this hooverizing to cease? How much longer must the laity endure the use of so many substitutes?

S. WOODBURY.

The Plagues

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

When I was a boy, in northern Massachusetts, all the people attended church. The long pew contained father and mother, all the children, and sometimes the grandparents. Do all the people attend church now? If they did the churches would not hold them. Does God care about this? Yes, He smites us. We all have to suffer. He has struck us twice in quick succession. He has struck us hard. He has struck us with the war, and with the plague that is now upon us.

The ancient Egyptians had ten plagues, we have had two. God grant that we do not have to have ten.

Conscientious Objectors

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

I have had so much sympathy with the spirit of the new management of THE CHURCHMAN that I am the more disappointed with the editorial on conscientious objectors in the issue of January 18, and I feel constrained to express my protest. The editorial seems to sympathize with the objectors, and to judge the military authorities on reported accusations without asking for facts. I write to urge that before indulging in sentimentality over a group of persons who are certainly “objectors,” but whose conscientiousness is at least open to question, THE CHURCHMAN should get the facts for itself. The law provides alternate non-combatant service for men who belong to a religious body which forbids its members to fight, and many such members have availed themselves of the provision for their scruples and have accepted such service. Indeed, the great majority have done this, and the number of those who have refused is small. Has THE CHURCHMAN seen a list of the names of the “martyrs” who would not accept the alternate service offered by the Government? A perusal of the names goes far in explaining why they cannot claim membership with religious bodies fore-swearing war—for even the Sinn Feiner among them cannot make that claim, and his desire to thwart any government in alliance with England needs no explanation.

Cruelty and illegal methods are to be condemned everywhere, and I have no brief for such when they exist, but apparently to condone conscientious objectors because they may have had maximum sentences seems too much like the silly women who gush over felons condemned to death. The fact that these objectors come under discipline is not because the military authorities are endeavoring to make them fight when their consciences forbid it, but because they refuse to perform the alternate service required by law. In other words, they are law-breakers, and sentenced as such; and from information I have received, their efforts seems to have been devoted to embarrassing the authorities as much as possible. What better methods could pro-Germans, Sinn Feiners and Socialists with Bolshevik sympathies employ? The sanity of more than one is probably open to question, but the responsibility of “passing” a mental defective into the army is the fault of the draft boards, and not of the hapless army officers who have to handle such defectives. The sincerity of others would be an interesting subject for study. It is notorious that the “conscientious objectors” in England paid their taxes (a most vital help to the war), as otherwise their property would be seized, and they were unwilling to bear financial loss, although not averse to the cheap fame that their notoriety as “martyrs” brought them from pro-Germans and pacifists. Before assuming the American objectors are martyrs, let us get the facts from the authorities at the camps where the alleged cruelties are said to have occurred. The accused military officers deserve justice and a hearing as much as the law-breakers with whom they have had to deal, and who are vociferous over their treatment, but who omit to mention that in some cases they have refused to even keep their quarters clean in the interest of health.

A. RANDOLPH.

SCOUTS WILL CELEBRATE

War Record Gives Them Right to Big Good Time

The Boy Scouts of America celebrate their ninth anniversary in the week of February 7-13 inclusive. The scouts come up to this birthday event with a record to be proud of. And they are going to celebrate in true scout fashion.

The war service rendered by the Boy Scouts of America is tabulated by scout headquarters as follows:

In three Liberty Loans (figures from fourth drive not yet available), made 1,343,018 sales, amounting to $206,862,950.

Tentative returns of over 363,000 subscriptions totaling $48,050,450 in value indicates over $100,000,000 of sales in the Fourth Liberty Loan Campaign.

Sold War Savings Stamps to the value of $22,997,260.

Located 20,758,660 board feet (5,200 carloads) of standing walnut.

Collected over 100 carloads of fruit pits, enough to make over one half million gas masks, and were still going strong when the armistice was signed.

Responsible for over 12,000 war gardens actually reported, with thousands more not reported in detail. In addition to this, many thousands of scouts worked on farms.

Distributed over 30,000,000 pieces of Government literature.

Assisted the Red Cross continuously in its work, and served in every membership and financial drive.

Assisted the United War Work Committee's campaign for money.

Performed many services for the selective service boards and the Government Intelligence Bureau.

MEMORIAL

ABRAM ROBINSON McILVAINE

The death on November 27, 1918, of Abram Robinson McIlvaine, Rector's Warden, senior member of the Vestry of St. Andrew's Church, West Philadelphia, and a most faithful member of the Congregation, as was his father before him, has removed one of the best and noblest from our midst. He was ever distinguished for his unswerving devotion to the interests of God and His Church.

In the years of his long connection with this congregation, he saw St. Andrew's pass through all stages of its development, from its renewal in the old restored chapel, once burned, at 36th and Appletree Street, in the second church erected in 1865, now our chapel, to the present church erected in 1883, at which time he served as a member of the Building Committee, and also at the restoration of the chancel after the destructive fire of 1896.

For forty-five years he was a member of the Vestry, and for many years the Rector's Warden. One of his most loving services was rendered as Chairman of the Chancel Committee, the beautifying of which was his constant delight. He brought to every task, a spirit of consecration, humility, persevering labor and the influence of a gracious personality.

His sweetest affections were centred upon this church and its work. Its every interest was his deepest concern. The Religion of Jesus was, to him, joy and life and power.

A lover of beauty and nature, a lover of God and his fellows, ever a kindly gentleman, a devout and humble-minded Christian, a sincere friend, a generous and often secret benefactor, the world is the better and richer for his life, and everyone who had the joy of his friendship can well say: "I thank my God upon every remembrance of you."

The Vestry of St. Andrew's Church directs that this Minute be placed upon their records, as a testimony of their affectionate regard and as an expression of their deep personal loss, and of sympathy with his beloved family;—and also that a copy be engrossed, and signed by the Rector and Clerk of the Vestry, and forwarded to them.

WILLIAM J. COX,
Rector.
HARRY W. POWELL,
Clerk.

BROTHERHOOD OF ST. ANDREW

Brotherhood of St. Andrew in the United States

An organization of men in the Church for the spread of Christ's Kingdom among men by means of definite prayer and personal service.

The members of the brotherhood accept special responsibility at this time to co-operate with other Churchmen in preparation for the return to their parishes of these men now enlisted in the service of the Nation.

The Brotherhood, therefore, is promoting during 1919 its new Advance Program of accomplishment, calling to enlistment therein all the laymen of the Church. This program has seven objectives in the work of laymen, and correspondence is invited, regarding the application of the work in the parish.

THE GOSPEL OF THE HEREAFTER

Do we live when men call us dead?
If so — where do we go?
Is it our final abode?
What kind of existence shall we have?

THE BISHOP OF LONDON says: "For the first time it makes the life beyond the grave so attractive as to be something to be looked forward to, something men and women could enjoy. I have just given away twenty copies."

Upon a subject of supreme importance this book uncovers for the enlightenment and comfort of perplexed enquirers "the light that lighteth the world."

A gift every CHURCHMAN reader might make this year to a friend that is troubled and tried.

The New Hymnal

with both Words and Music

It has a large number of new hymns which are of high poetic excellence. These include hymns by:

WORDSWORTH	KIPLING	WHITTIER
LOWELL	TENNYSON	OXENHAM

It has additional hymns for national days, with new music for Kipling's Recessional.

It has new and stirring processionals.

The principal aim in the adoption of the musical hymnal is to encourage congregational singing.

A CHAPLAIN'S EXPERIENCES IN CUBA—I

By the Rev. E. Clowes Chorley, D.D.

MY experiences have been many and varied—some pleasant; some otherwise. Foremost among the pleasant ones was the stay in Havana and the gracious hospitality of Bishop and Mrs. Hulse. The episcopal residence is spacious without being palatial and the spiritual head of this missionary district is a living example of plain living and high thinking.

My destination, however, was some five or six hundred miles from Havana—Santiago—and as Cuban trains are not conspicuous either for speed or comfort the prospect of a two days journey was not particularly alluring. With ill-concealed joy therefore I discovered the Rev. Ernest Leroy Paugh, chaplain in the navy and a priest of the American Church wandering around Havana, and bound for the naval station at Guantanamo to report there for duty. For more than two-thirds of the journey our ways lay the same and we left Havana with light hearts expecting to arrive at the end of the journey the following night.

All went well till we arrived late in the evening at Santa Clara where the train was to run over the tracks of the Cuban railroad. There we were scheduled to wait for forty-five minutes. As things turned out that wait was lengthened out into three days and a half. At four o'clock that afternoon every employee of the road had gone out on strike and not a wheel was moving. Some American business men who knew Cuba better than we did shrugged their shoulders and took the next train back to Havana. We were more hopeful but not nearly so wise.

At the end of twenty-four hours the strikers said if we would obtain a letter from the governor of the province they would permit us to go out the next morning on the mail. We found the governor in a moving picture show, but he gave us the necessary letter and we were ordered to be ready by six o'clock on Wednesday morning. After a hurried breakfast of dry bread and coffee we boarded the mail van at the appointed hour. Our compartment measured about four feet by eight and our traveling companions consisted of a doctor and nurse on their way to a city stricken by influenza, and a Cuban private soldier who concealed beneath his military cloak a rooster. The Cubans never by any chance hurry; neither did the train. At the end of an hour the mayor of the city arrived and demanded to see our official papers. He admitted that they were in due and proper form, but shrewdly remarked that there was nothing in them to show that it was necessary for us to travel on that particular train. We tried to assure him to the contrary but as he talked Spanish and we answered in good old English we did not know how far we had succeeded. One hour later came a policeman who gently removed us from the train which then went on without us. However, late in the evening there came an order from the secretary of state in Havana directing that we should be sent out on the first mail train. Again we rose at five of the clock; partook of the same frugal breakfast and boarded the train which finally started at eight.

This time we traveled as far as Camaguey in a dirty baggage car but managed to commandeer empty boxes for seats. At every station where the train stopped for mails a committee of strikers came and looked us over. Paugh's uniform—mine was in my trunk—saved us again and again from being forcibly ejected; when the strikers saw that they shrugged shoulders, said "Americanos," and left us in peace. The fact that I was in civilian clothes proved nearly fatal at Camaguey, but I managed to scrape through. At the place we transferred to a mail van we slept on the mail bags. Paugh left us at two o'clock in the morning to take a branch line to Guantanamo, and just two hours later our locomotive and single van pulled into Santiago.

Three weeks have passed and the strike is still on. With the solitary exception of the mails no train has come in or gone out. And now the strikers have extended the boycott to the mails. For the past five days we have had no communication with the outside world. Even the daily paper in Santiago have suspended publication. Our only knowledge of what is going on outside is obtained by wireless, and that is very meagre. Owing to a sympathetic strike there are no street cars running and no public conveyances; even the laundrymen are on strike and now the stores threaten to close. Last night the electric light was cut off and camp and city were in total darkness. No food is coming in the city; the wharves are piled high with produce which the stevedores will not handle. The last egg was consumed ten days ago; prices of food have soared at the outlook is most serious.

Thoughtful men who follow closely the intricate way of politics in Cuba believe that we are on the eve of another revolution.

lution. This eastern end of the island is the storm center of Cuban politics. It was here that the revolution of 1917 was hatched and Santiago was literally cut off from communication with the outside for six weeks and finally the Marines were called out to police the city. Now, wherever Americans congregate the word "intervention" is whispered. A vast amount of foreign capital is invested in the sugar plantations. The entire crop of this year has been purchased by the British and American governments at an enormous expense. The harvesting has begun and also the spasmodic firing of the sugar cane in the disaffected districts. Railroad transportation is needed to move the crop to shipboard and the continuance of the strike endangers the entire output. Unless conditions improve quickly it is believed that the government of the United States will be compelled to intervene not only in its own interest but also in the best interests of Cuba. This island is amazingly rich in undeveloped possibilities, but the Cubans have manifested no ability to develop their own resources. Politics are riddled with graft on a scale which Tammany might well envy. In short, Cuba has shown no capacity for self-government.

But this is no disquisition on politics. If you walk down one of the side streets in Santiago and observe closely, your eye may catch a small sign attached to what seems to be a private house. The sign reads "Iglesia Santa Maria." That modest building houses the American Protestant Episcopal mission in Santiago. The chapel is a plain structure built out longways from the street and seating about seventy-five people. Pathetic attempts have been made to suggest a churchly appearance but I devoutly wish that someone at home would make it possible to furnish this chapel worthily. Here we have a Spanish service on Sunday mornings and an English service in the afternoon. On my first Sunday in camp I learned for the comfort of one's own Church service and found my way to this chapel. I was the only white person present. The congregation is composed exclusively of Negroes from Jamaica many of whom come to Cuba to work on the sugar plantations. They are all loyal and devoted children of the Church of England. It was very evident that they were thoroughly familiar with the service and they sang with conspicuous heartiness.

The missionary in Santiago, the Rev. John Mancebo, is one of those quiet workers of whom the outside world never hears. The size and excellence of his library bears witness to his scholarly attainments, but above all he works persistently and patiently. He is deprived of associations with ministerial brethren; he sees his bishop about twice a year; he is surrounded by a distinctly Roman and unfriendly atmosphere, but, like Columbus, he sails on. "Doing here a little, and there a little, he is laying a foundation strong and deep. His people are poor; they can give but little, but in spite of poverty, hostility and not a little discouragement, his faithful shepherd cares for the sheep. He asks nothing of the Mother Church, but I could not help noting the wistful look which stole into his eyes when he said to me: "A few years ago I could have built a worthy church here for five thousand dollars." Alas! that we at home are so slow to realize the opportunity.

I have bought and read with great care and interest and approval Dean Hodges' HOW TO KNOW THE BIBLE. I can unhesitatingly recommend the book as a most helpful one for giving both teachers and students a summary of the entire contents of the Bible.

BOYD VINCENT, D. D., Bishop of Southern Ohio.

How to Know the Bible

By GEORGE HODGES

Dean of the Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, Mass.

More than a commentary, HOW TO KNOW THE BIBLE is a guide to intelligent reading and a stimulus to a daily study of the scripture. By its clearing up of difficult passages in the Bible it increases faith in this book of books.

In Dean Hodges' HOW TO KNOW THE BIBLE the results of scholarly research and the consensus of reverent scholarly judgment are embodied, and are set forth by it in a very helpful way.

Daniel Sylvester Tuttle, D. D.,
Bishop of Missouri.

A book which can revive a general interest in the Bible is the special need of our day. Dr. George Hodges' book on "HOW TO KNOW THE BIBLE" fills that need. Everyone who reads it will yearn to place it in every home in the world.

RUSSELL H. CONWELL, D. D.,
The Temple, Philadelphia.

The practical everyday usefulness of HOW TO KNOW THE BIBLE is shown by the chapter headings listed below.

IN THE SUMMER of 1917 the Rev. James A. Muller, then an instructor in the Episcopal Theological School at Cambridge, asked the Board of Missions if there were any special temporary need abroad he could fill. Just at that time the British Government had called upon the Rev. Edward Walker of Boone University, Wuchang, to accompany a large detachment of the Chinese labor corps to France. As a British subject Mr. Walker gladly obeyed, and the Board of Missions gave him indefinite leave of absence. Mr. Muller kindly agreed to take Mr. Walker's place. Mr. Muller's article in this issue records some of Mr. Muller's activities and impressions during his first year in China.

THE REV. E. CLOWES CHORLEY, D.D., is the rector of the Church of St. Philip-in-the-Highlands, Garrison, New York. He is serving temporarily as chaplain at the naval station at San Juan, Cuba. The Rev. William Sheafe Chase is the rector of Christ Church, Brooklyn.

Things in General

ON the birthday of Robert E. Lee a service is always held in Alexandria, Virginia, usually out-of-doors. This year the service was held in Christ Church in order that a plate indicating the spot on which General Lee knelt when he was confirmed might be dedicated. At the beginning of the service General Lee's favorite hymn was sung, "How firm a foundation," a hymn that we have recently heard was the favorite of another great American. Dr. McKim of Washington, once rector of Christ Church, preached. He described how at the close of the Mexican War, won largely through Colonel Lee's leadership, the colonel was confirmed in Christ with a daughter kneeling on each side of him. After the Confirmation the bishop had said to him, "I hope you will always be as good a soldier of Jesus Christ as you have been of the United States." Then Dr. McKim indicated another spot, a little farther along the Communion rail, and said, "And here at that same Confirmation service knelt that most distinguished of Virginians, that most distinguished of Americans, that lady known as well as any lady in the world, Miss Sally Stuart."

WHEN the new Seamen's Church Institute in New York was opened several years ago, there was considerable discussion as to the advisability of serving beer to the sailors; the argument was put forward that unless the sailor could have this creature comfort, the Institute would fail in its avowed competition with the saloons and lodging houses of the waterfront. Beer, however, was ruled out. Instead a soda-water fountain in the main lobby was substituted, but with the familiar brass bar running around its base. One can never enter the Institute without finding a crowd of salts lounging around the "fountain," with elbows on the counter and their feet on the bar. The capacity of this "fountain" has been enlarged three or four times in the brief time since the Institute opened its doors, and the sale of soda-water brings in a not inconsiderable revenue.

THE Y ON THE FIRING LINE

A WAR of words has been waging about the ears of the Y. M. C. A. The Literary Digest in republishing the article that appeared in THE CHURCHMAN, and the New York Times in giving publicity to the criticisms which are floating through the army in France of the methods of the Y, have invited an answer from Dr. Mott to some of these criticisms. His answers satisfy fair-minded people. Nobody ought to have accused the Y of trying to cheat the soldiers out of gifts which had been donated for their use. Nobody ought to suspect the Y. M. C. A. of trying to make money out of the war. There were a good many other petty accusations, leveled at this organization, that ought not to have been made. Some of the criticism the Y can and will profit by. It would be childish in their leaders to take the attitude that any adverse criticism is unjust. They have not, for the most part, taken such an attitude. Certainly Dr. Mott has not done so.

The Y. M. C. A. has been a victim of its friends and its prosperity. Its friends, some of them, have done it much harm in claiming for it a vocation it is entirely incompetent to master and which, we believe, most of its leaders had no intention of assuming. For example, there was a time at the beginning of the war when certain ministers like Mr. Odell suffered brainstorm over what they supposed to be the collapse of the Churches. In their mind the Y was the only visible expression of Christianity on the spiritual horizon. Well, the Churches have not collapsed, and no one in his senses today would say that the future of Christianity in this or any other country lies with the Y. M. C. A. The returning soldier may not become a docile member of the Church; but he certainly will not take his religion from the Y. M. C. A.

This reflects no discredit upon the Y. M. C. A. It merely discredits the loose and shallow enthusiasms of some of its friends. The Y. M. C. A. may become forty times as big as it is today; we hope that it will become so, but it can never become a Church. For the intensive, spiritual interests of the Church it has shown neither capacity nor desire. This is no discredit to the organization. Its specialization is precise. It has known what type of service it is fitted to render, and it has tried conscientiously to render that service. But an opaque secretary here and there, and a good many friends everywhere, have done the organization no little disservice by "slopping over." The Churches will stand, never fear! They will not, we pray God, stand still. But whatever they become in the troubled future that lies just ahead of us all, they will not be transformed into any likeness to the Y. On the whole, the Churches are pretty humble over their shortcomings. We are not quite sure that the Y is in a chastened mood of humility. The Y is a child of the Church. So are all the charitable organizations of Christendom. The Church is proud of its children, even when they are a bit bumptious. Success is a heavy draught for youth. The child can remind the parent, without presumption, that it is time to be up and doing. Even if the Y had done no other service to the age, it has done one superb thing which justifies its existence. It has demonstrated to the Churches their ability to act together. For, after all, we must not forget that the Y. M. C. A. is merely the Churches acting together along a certain line of social service. It will be a tragic blunder if competitive spirit prevents in the future the heartiest co-operation between the Y and the Churches.

CHURCH PAPERS

THE following letter came recently to the office of the editor of THE CHURCHMAN:

I cannot pay for THE CHURCHMAN now. I know my subscription has expired. Three of my children are sick with the influenza and one has been in the hospital at great expense to me. Could you not let it go this year?

We quote this letter with diffidence. It was personal, but because it is typical of many letters that come to the circulation department of all church papers, it is perhaps no breach of confidence to let our readers share the appeal. A good many churchmen do not value church papers. They would perhaps value them more if they subscribed to them. On the other hand, familiarity might breed an even greater contempt. We shall let that pass. But the publishers of church papers know that there is a very wide constituency in the Church that does value highly the service which these papers are rendering. Letters come into the office by the score telling of the help which the church papers are to rectors and to parishioners who read them. We doubt whether the publishers of The Living Church, the Southern Churchman, The Witness or THE CHURCHMAN would continue issuing a paper another month if they were not convinced that they are serving the Church. One of the most gifted editors of a church paper in this country once remarked to the editor of THE CHURCHMAN that he had discovered that it was useless to look to the bishops or other clergy for substantial help in getting a church paper before the laity of the Church. That may have been the editor's blue Monday. But we suspect that he had reason for the faith that was in him. He had perhaps tried to get lists of parishioners from rectors that he might appeal to them personally to buy his goods. The letters remained unanswered.

Every conscientious rector aims to break down parochialism in his parish. He knows that he can never make Christians out of his people unless he can break down the walls that divide parish from parish, parish from diocese, and diocese from the whole of Christendom. The parish that is not interested in missions is not interested in Christianity. The parish that is not interested in what the whole Church is doing, is not really interested in what any part of it is doing. The only reason that church papers exist is that the people who edit and control them are wholeheartedly convinced that the parishioner who reads a church paper, by so doing gets a wider and more intelligent conception of the whole Church. The rector of one of the chief parishes in America asked the editor of THE CHURCHMAN recently what could be done to get people to take a church paper. "My parishioners," he said, "think that Christendom rises and falls in ——— Parish." Well, the rector who felt like that had pretty nearly solved the problem. We venture to predict that if his rectorship in that parish continues over a decade his people will discover that the Church as a whole has interests larger than those of any parish. They will probably discover that there are church papers.

We started with the touching appeal of the man who could not afford to pay his subscription to THE CHURCHMAN. If that old subscriber does not continue to get his CHURCHMAN, it does not mean that the publishers are lacking in the bowels of compassion. It means that there is no fund available for giving free subscriptions. There would not exist a single church journal in America today, or in England either, for that matter, if there were not little groups of generous men who believe that church journalism has an important service to render to the Church and are willing to back their conviction with money. What these men sometimes on blue Mondays complain of is that bishops, priests and deacons take a church paper for granted. They use it for their appeals, they appeal to it for publicity, they praise it and condemn it, but they seldom help it beyond the price of their subscription. If they would back church journalism, the man who wrote the letter which we quoted above would not be deprived of his paper because of the lack of funds to pay his subscription.

Church journalism has an important part to play in the immediate future. The journal of opinion, with the decline of the influence of daily papers, has come to its own. The measure of the service our church papers render is determined by the support the Church is willing to give. We are not begging alms. We offer a service.

FORCING OUR HANDS

WHY not have a League of Christians to enforce peace among the Churches? Get the clergy and the ecclesiastical laymen (it is the ecclesiastical laymen who will be found fighting in the last ditch against unity) into a convention, shut them up in a well-ventilated room and give them forty-eight hours in which to get together. If they can't get together, let the rest of us get together without them. One more schism won't hurt, provided we can save the Church.

The idea is hasty and lacks statesmanship; but it occurred to us in a conversation last week with a young architect who does not go to church, but who has very Christian ideas of community welfare and worship. "I wonder if you people know," he said, "how people feel about the Churches." We ventured to remark that we had suspected something from occasional words let drop in journals of opinion. Then he made an ominous remark: "The Church will never become democratic in government, doctrine and worship till the people force the hand of the clergy. That is what happened to the Jewish Church. Jesus appealed to the people. Some day we will take it out of your hands."

"We are inclined to think that nothing will be done till you do. You ought to have done it long ago," was our answer.

THE WEEK

Chronicle and Comment on Current Events

FREE PEWS

THE action of the vestry of Trinity Church, New York, in making Trinity and its chapels free, was the sensation of the week in church news in New York. There have been some outstanding examples during the past few months of parishes, strong in their communities, abandoning the rented pew system and becoming "free churches." All Saints', Worcester, Massachusetts, after a vigorous campaign for free pews by its rector, Dr. Morris, becomes free. Christ Church, East Orange, under Mr. Hutchison's leadership; St. Mary's, Wayne, Pennsylvania, of which Dr. Anthony is rector, and St. John's, Knoxville, Tennessee, Dr. Whitaker, rector, have been added to the free list. We congratulate these rectors upon their leadership in bringing about the change. We congratulate also their parishes for willingness to surrender privileges and sentiment in the interests of larger fellowship.

We have still to remember that free pews is only a means. Christian fellowship cannot be induced by a vote of the vestry. It is one of the fruits of conversion. Abolishing pew rentals merely removes an undesirable symbol. What has brought the pew rental system into disfavor with strangers is the timid method in which it is administered as much as the system itself. People who rent pews are permitted by rectors and vestries to buy more than they pay for. They are permitted to keep from a third to a half of every popular New York church vacant for nearly ten minutes after the service begins. During those ten minutes visitors stand at the end of aisles while late arriving pewholders are given an opportunity to claim their places. There are some appealing arguments in favor of the pew system. Dr. Stires presents some such in his clean-cut statement which we publish in our news columns. But there can be no reasonable defense of the system as it is administered in nearly every popular city church.

BUSY BODIES

THE Senate is busy at the work of reconstruction; but it is not too busy. These patriots have time for everything. Just now they are hard at work making Bolsheviks. They don't like Bolsheviks, but they have been engaged in making them so long that they can't stop even when the market is glutted. Last week, while Paris was discussing a league of nations to a listening world, our Senate modestly, quietly, without ostentation, was writing into its records the names of sixty-two dangerous characters. Jane Addams heads the list. We feel the way Mr. Paul U. Kellogg, editor of the Survey, did in his letter to Mr. Baker:

In the name of common-sense, fair play, and a decent regard for the public service to our common country of some of the truest, most far-seeing, and courageous citizens our generation has produced, let me urge you to repudiate that indiscriminate, brutally unjust, fool-in-the-head list of Americans put under the ban by the Military Intelligence Division of the United States War Department at the Senate hearing yesterday. If Woodrow Wilson had been outside the White House his utterances would have put him on the list. You have done a big job too tremendously well to let your administration and its breadth of spirit be dragged down at the eleventh hour by this outcropping of a cross between modern Prussianism and the mediæval taboo.

HUMAN NATURE AND THE LEAGUE

DEAN ROBBINS in his sermon last Sunday at the New York cathedral urged it as a duty of Christendom to back the legislators in Paris in the most vital issue that has confronted Christians in generations. There is an enormous amount of apathy to be overcome, he said:

People are provincial, they are not usually interested in things which do not immediately concern them. We need to press the fact that this is the most vital issue which has confronted Christians in generations.

And, finally, Christian opinion—The non-Christian is usually a pessimist. He has a sad and plaintive little wail: "Human nature doesn't change." Didn't it change when slavery was discovered to be wrong? Didn't it change when duelling was abolished? Hasn't it changed enough to enable the prohibition amendment to be ratified by forty states? What is Christianity for except to change human opinion?

So give your thought and give your energy and give your prayer and give your support to an ideal which will prevail because it is the will of the Master of the World, and which, when it does prevail, will bring blessedness to men, because the doing of his will means justice, liberty and peace.

TO THE MEN AND WOMEN OF GERMANY

THE following message was signed by a large number of representative people in England and sent during Christmastide to the men and women of Germany:

At this Christmastime, we, British men and women, send you a message of goodwill and hope. The war is virtually ended, but there is still much to be done in creating a new world of peace and freedom. A new era is before us and its fashioning will be the common task of all humanity. It is our earnest hope that the shadow between the nations shall pass away, and that, in the great light of the future, we, with all other nations, may go forward in peace and friendship, each contributing of its best to the common task of turning discord into harmony so that the old evils shall pass away and a true community of nations be realized.

Who were the people who signed this Christian message of good will? Were they pacifists, who had held aloof from the war? Were they pro-German agents? It does not appear so. We find the names of men like L. P. Jacks, who have sent sons to France. It is hard to escape the conclusion that England's suffering has brought her farther along the road of compassion and brotherhood than our war experience has brought America.

WORTH HEEDING

WE hope that every reader of THE CHURCHMAN read in last week's issue Dr. Jefferys' meditation. It seems to us so fine in the spirit of Christian fellowship, so wise in its conception of liberty in unity that those who speak and pray for the unity of Christendom cannot afford to neglect its teaching. "Would we have a Protestant Episcopal world if we could avoid it?" he asks. "We are too formal, too classy, too indifferent." Will anybody deny his assertion? The spirit of schism is rife among those who claim greatest sensitiveness to that sin. There can be, we are sure, no Christian unity till there are some conversions to Christianity in the ranks of the people who talk loudest about "our unhappy divisions."

The nations of the earth are being drawn together on the basis, not of scraps of paper and agreements to accept each other's form of government or articles of national faith, but on the basis of the recognition of each other as human beings of equal rights to breathe the air that God made and to think the thoughts that God gives them. There will never be a world the nations of which will submit to the arrogant domination of any one nation's culture. Thank God for that! Thank God that we are not to be Prussianized! Thank God, too, that the world is not to be even Americanized; that there will be no rainbow of humanity made up of one dull color, but that the white light of liberty, tolerance and love will be a blending of all the colors of the nations and of all the classes, all the individuals. We cannot desire uniformity, even of saints. It would prove dull, to say the least.

The new religion, I cannot but feel, will be the Christianity of Christ, Whose Mind is universal, all inclusive, and which does not congratulate itself upon being better than anybody else, to which Pharisaism, separatism, is the complete antithesis, which loves the other fellow as oneself, not because of a sense of virtue, but because we are all one bunch by nature, by Fatherhood, and some day by glad preference.

THE POOR OLD CONSTITUTION

IT isn't what it used to be when we were young. Edgar Lee Masters feels this sadly, vociferously, in a letter dated Chicago, which reflects his musings (shall we call it musings when one is swearing mad?) over the prohibition amendment. This is certainly a strange day we are living in. One must rub his eyes every morning to be sure he is seeing straight. People all over the world are cutting one another's throats in the interest of larger liberty while the latitude of one's personal freedom is narrowing day by day.

We don't condemn the drift of things as Mr. Masters, the Spoon River poet, does; we simply wonder. What is the answer to this contention of his?

I make my record briefly in this way: The right to eat, drink, think, speak, write, does not come from the State. These are rights which Louis the Fourteenth and others limited or destroyed. This Republic was set up to protect these rights and did not assume to grant them. They were regarded by the founders of the Republic as rights which inhere in life itself. But what is the difference between Demos and Louis XIV? If the majority can make any law, what have we gained by setting up a Republic and getting rid of a Louis XIV? Here is the twist that these silly obscurantists give to the principles of democracy: Whatever the majority decides, is right and legal. So it is that a constitutional amendment would be valid creating a state religion, or granting titles of nobility, or restoring the feudal system, or giving the president a life term, or bringing back Negro slavery, or other slavery—anything, in short, that has a majority back of it is right and can be done. All you need is a constitutional amendment. You don't even need a majority of the people; for the vote of Nevada is one, and the vote of New York is one, and no more. Two hundred thousand people count for as much as ten million on a question of diet, religion, or anything else, through the trick of a constitutional amendment. I am in favor of abolishing the Constitution—the whole thing. An English constituent assembly that can make a law and take it back has our system beat a mile—proven by experience. England could try prohibition by act of parliament and then repeal the act. It will take thirty-six states with Nevada, New Mexico, Rhode Island, counting as much as New York, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, Illinois, to get rid of this constitutional amendment.

The precedent is fixed. There will be other fanatics in the course of time who will want some particular despotic power. Will they get it? Why not?

SATURDAY NIGHT SERMONS

BY THE REV. GEORGE THOMAS DOWLING, D.D.

To Those Who Are Shut In

Thou compassest . . . my lying down.
—Psalm CXXXIX—3.

MY Dear People—(for I venture to call you such, though the most of you I have never seen). During the past months I have received many letters from you; from as far north as Alaska and as far south as Liberia; from as far west as California on the shores of the Pacific, and as far east as France on the shores of the Mediterranean. With all my heart I thank you. They have cheered me more than you can know.

It seems a long time since I last spoke to you from THE CHURCHMAN pulpit, and since then God has led me through deep waters, but—he has led me through. Sometimes after the surgeon's knife had done its work, as the weary weeks crept on, it seemed to me that I could catch the roll of the Jordan; and then I thought that perhaps those were the waters through which He was leading me; and sometimes it seemed as though I could almost see the other side of the river, and beyond, the gates wide open leading into the City. And if it had been so it would have been all right. For He knows better than we.

But He has brought me back again; back to the dear ones in the home, and to my associates on THE CHURCHMAN staff, and to you, to whom in these Saturday Night Sermons, I have ministered during these several years.

And so I feel that in this opening sermon of the new series I can select no better topic than that which I have chosen: "To Those Who Are Shut In."

When the friends of that sturdy old Scotch preacher, Robert Murray McCheyne, said to him when he was ill, "I wonder why God has placed you on your back?" he smiled and answered, "I do not know, unless it is that I may be the better able to look up."

He knows all about it, and all about you, and all about me, and we can safely trust Him even when we cannot see Him. "O, Lord, Thou hast searched me and known me. Thou knowest my down-sitting and mine up-rising; Thou understandest my thought afar off. Thou compassest my path and my lying down, and art acquainted with all my ways."

We have had strange experiences you and I since last I spoke to you. For the first time in the life of most of us we have been threatened with a death-dealing plague. We have seen all places of public convention, even our churches, closed, and we never saw that before. There is not one of us to whom there has not come a new and more vital meaning to that pathetic little phrase, "shut in."

And so I want to remind you that when these silent hours of life come, as sooner or later they will to us each, though we may be shut in, we never need be from Him shut out.

There are times when it is easy to believe in His knowledge of us. It is easy to believe that He "compasseth our path." An active life always commands attention. It is not strange that He "knoweth my down-sitting and mine uprising." Others do that, for every life is a public life, and more public than most people dream. No man need feel lonely when he is playing his appointed rôle in the drama. But when the curtain has fallen, and the crowds have gone, and the lights are put out, and he who was erstwhile filling his part is now compelled to lie quietly, separated from the great world in which he has been a factor, then he begins to realize the meaning of a text like this: "Thou compassest . . . my lying down!"

And so God puts us on our back that we may be better able to look up. And when we come forth from these hours of silence, I do not think that any of us would be willing to go back and be in all respects exactly as we were.

During those weeks I had many serious thoughts, as I tried to weigh in His scales the work which I had done. I recalled the words of the Rev. John Watson, known throughout the world as Ian MacLaren, when he was retiring from the active ministry, and he said, in preaching his last sermon in the Sefton Park Presbyterian Church in Liverpool:

If I were beginning, instead of closing my career, I would be careful about three things in particular: I would preach shorter sermons, I would be more attentive to my English, and I would preach more comfortingly.

And I wondered if I had preached enough comforting sermons; and determined that when I should return to you such should be the first sermon that I would deliver, and that if possible it should be the keynote of all the remainder of my ministry.

And so today after these months of quiet I can testify from my own experience that these pauses in life, like the moments of silence in the bird's song, are all a part of the music; that the strains would be incomplete without them; that He compasseth even our still hours, "Thou compassest . . . my lying down." These quiet seasons lead us nearer to Him. It is in the night that the Star of Bethlehem shines the brightest.

This then is the opening message which I want to bring to you. I am surer of it than I have ever been before. You are not forgotten. Your life is planned. He knoweth thy down-sitting and thine up-rising; He understandeth thy thought afar off; He compasseth thy path and thy lying down and is acquainted with all thy ways. You may be shut in, but no one save yourself can shut you out.

Among so many can He care?
Can special love be everywhere?
A myriad homes, a myriad ways,
And God's eye over every place?

So many and so wide abroad,
Can any heart have all of God?
From the great spaces vague and dim,
May one small household gather him?

I asked;—my heart bethought of this.
In just that very place of His,
Where He hath put and keepeth you
God hath no other thing to do.

RESERVATION: BUT NOT FOR ADORATION—II.

BY THE RT. REV. BOYD VINCENT, S.T.D.

SO much, then, for the Bishop of Oxford's main point, viz.: the historic origin and the doctrinal and devotional development of the practice of adoration before the Reserved Sacrament.

But in addition to his main point the bishop discusses several other related and almost equally important points.

One is the question of the original purpose of the Divine Presence in the Sacrament. The true aim of Anglicanism, he says, is the restoration of what is both catholic and primitive; and he has shown what the dominant ideas of the Sacrament were for the first thousand years. So that here "What is at stake," he says, "is not the doctrine of the Real Presence, or the real objective Presence, but the use to which it is put." He believes that "the Presence is perpetual." "But Rome," he says, "introduces a new purpose of the Presence and establishes a permanent, external shrine which we have no reason to think was at all part of the Divine intention." On this point the bishop speaks much more fully in his book, The Body of Christ. At the original Institution, he there reminds us, commemoration and communion were plainly ordained; but do we find that anything more was divinely intended? Can we assume that there was, without being wise above what is divinely written? At any rate, so far as the ancient liturgies are concerned, "there is no separate worship of the Incarnate Christ as specially made present on the altar in virtue of the consecration." There are allusions to such an idea in some of the Fathers; "but the mind of the ancient Church in general is in the canon of the African Council (of Hippo in 393), viz.: 'When we stand at the altar, let the prayer always be directed to the Father (or to the Holy Trinity.)'" Now how are these facts to be accounted for? "Probably because Christ was believed to be already present" (as High Priest and Consecrator): and "that what consecration brought about was not the presence of Christ—He was already there—but His adoption of the Church's gifts to become His Body and His Blood." Even understanding Christ's gift or presence in the Eucharist in the most spiritual sense, still "the presence is controlled by the purpose." The purpose was that we might "partake of a heavenly under the form of an earthly nourishment." This one purpose is constantly declared, too, in the ancient liturgies in the most formal and express way.

We cannot fail to be struck, then, with the apparently light-hearted security with which this obvious intention of the Sacrament according to the mind of Christ himself has been enlarged in later practice . . . in order that the Church might have a permanent external Presence of Christ in her midst in a particular spot in the church.

All this as a part, too, of modern development, not so much of theological science as of popular devotion. Yet it is, he continues, "a most serious lowering of the level of Christian devotion, if a permanent external presence of Christ among Christians comes to be the most usually entertained idea of His abiding with us, instead of the only sort which the New Testament suggests—the indwelling of Christ in the members of His Body, of which it is the glory of the Sacrament to be the earthly instrument. And it ought to raise in all minds . . . the question whether, when the purpose of the Sacramental presence is so vitally changed, we have the right to feel secure of the permanence of the presence itself."

Again Bishop Hall (in Considerations) is no less express and emphatic on all this.

The Eucharist is the great occasion for the worship of our Lord Jesus Christ. There we glory in His victorious sacrifice and call forth its virtues. . . . But the Object of our worship is enthroned at God's right hand. He has not returned to earth to be personally present on the altar. . . . The Sacrament reserved for communion was in early times treated with great honor . . . but not as the shrine of the presence of Christ, for a centre of prayer. Such a third purpose of the Sacrament has no warrant in either Scripture or antiquity. Such a human service for approaching God without divine sanction seems to be full of peril. . . . Our Lord is not presented to us in the Eucharist to be the object of our worship. . . . The main stream of eucharistic adoration and prayer, . . . as of all the Church's worship, is directed to the Father as the representative of the Godhead.

(Anyone examining the Prayer of Consecration in our Communion Service will see how literally true this last statement by Bishop Hall is in our own case. The prayer addresses itself expressly throughout, in each separate part of the prayer, and especially in its opening and closing words, to the "Father" in the unity of the Godhead. Even in the Gloria in Excelsis the address is still distinctly to "God on high" and to "the Son" only as "sitting at the right hand of God the Father.")

Another special point in Dr. Gore's address is the unlawfulness at present, in the Church of England, of reservation for any purpose. Being asked whether the regulations in the proposed rubric to prevent devotion to the Reserved Sacrament were not unprecedented in Christendom, the bishop replies:

Surely no. Surely the whole revision of the Prayer Book in the sixteenth century was directed by that sort of motive . . . a desire to combat the pre-Reformation doctrine, . . . with a view of cutting at the roots of a growing cultus which there was a desire to get rid of.

Again, in answer to a question, he says:

It is not competent for any priest to reserve the Blessed Sacrament at all, still less to reserve it publicly in the church, at his own discretion.

As to whether the abolition of reservation (for the sick) was an over-violent dealing with a Catholic custom, he replies:

I think it was a needless abandonment of a Catholic custom. . . . But if I submit myself to the Prayer Book, I am quite sure that I cannot possibly claim the liberty to restore reservation at my own discretion.

In his diocesan magazine (1915) the bishop writes:

It is plain that the Prayer Book of 1549 intended to abandon the previous practice of permanent reservation and provided for carrying the Reserved Sacrament to the sick after the open Communion in Church. In the book of 1552 this practice (in turn) was abandoned, and the clinical (private) celebration of Holy Communion, then provided for, alone survives under the present Prayer Book (of 1662). Although it is probable that the rubric directing immediate consumption was directed not against reservation but against profanations, yet the rubric could hardly have been worded as it was if reservation had not been quite outside the purview of the compilers.

And he concludes:

It must be acknowledged that this later Western use of the Reserved Sacrament as a permanent center of devotion has not behind it either Catholic or ancient authority. The Eastern Church does not know it and the ancient Church did not know it. It has not the sanction of our own part of the Church, the Church of England.

Here again, in view of all these plain facts, it is difficult to understand how otherwise clear and fair-minded writers can be satisfied with such special pleas as they make. For instance: that the removal in the Book of 1552 of all mention of reservation for the sick "simply left the priest at liberty to do as he pleased"; that such plain language as that of Article XXVIII (viz.: that the Sacrament was not by Christ's ordinance reserved . . . or worshiped) "fails to say that reservation is either unlawful or excluded"; that the rubric of 1662 positively ordering consumption of the remaining consecrated elements (without some reference to reservation as if existent) was "an inadvertence"; and that the ancient pre-Reformation canon law of England which once provided for reservation is still not abrogated by disuse or contrary custom. But the Bishop of Oxford says here:

There is no question at all that desuetude coupled with independent legislation in another sense abolishes old canons; and that is what we have here. The Church of England, rightly or wrongly, made other legislation, other provision for communicating the sick.

How much more convincing, too, to the average mind is the simple, direct reasoning of the great Archbishop Temple in his Opinion (1900) on the subject:

Such a practice (reservation for the sick), he says, was quite consistent with the Christian faith and there was nothing in it that was wrong in itself. . . . But the Book of Common Prayer contains no order and provides no opportunity for the practice of reservation. The language of Article XXVIII cannot be taken otherwise than as condemning the practice altogether. To say that "the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper was not by Christ's ordinance lifted up, . . . or worshiped," is to say that those who do these things use for one purpose what was ordained for another. . . . I am obliged to say that the Church of England does not at present allow reservation in any form.

Just as unhesitatingly, too, the report (1906) of the Royal Commission declares that "Reservation of the Sacrament under conditions which lead to adoration" is among "practices clearly inconsistent with and subversive of the teaching of the Church of England."

As to the present authority of the English episcopate to regulate reservation—this is sufficiently covered, the bishop thinks, by the phrase

"Except so far as shall be ordered by lawful authority." The bishops are wishing to act regularly and to regularize their action in a revised Prayer Book. Meanwhile the situation is so serious that they must do something in the interval. . . . I do not think we have any alternative to episcopal action except an absolute refusal to go beyond the letter of the Prayer Book, and then you can have no reservation whatever. We have fallen back on the powers inherent in the episcopate.

And finally the bishop warns against easy sophistries here.

It is absurd to say I am only reserving for the Communion of the sick, if in fact I am reserving with another purpose prominent in my mind—the desire to have the Sacrament as an object of worship. . . . We must not juggle with words. . . . Here is a group of enclosed nuns. They are none of them sick and there is no difficulty about any of them being communicated if they are sick; but they desire passionately the Reserved Sacrament for worship.

Again we are told that the practice "works"; it gets people to church; it develops devotion. The bishop is very skeptical as to the extent to which that is true. There is a great deal of what is best in England that is not at all attracted but alienated by this devotion. No doubt these and other developments are attractive. But I am not prepared to open the door to them unless I feel sure that in their ultimate issues they are going to lead us aright.

As to falling back upon mere Roman authority for such devotions, or hoping to promote unity with Rome by means of them:

There is nothing in the world which is more impossible than to accept the Roman authority in bits. Romanism without the pope is, of all futilities, the most futile.

There is strong temptation, of course, in the light of this address, to go on to discuss directly the proposed new rubric on reservation in our own Office of Holy Communion. But such a discussion here would be no proper part of this particular review.

A CHURCH COLLEGE IN CENTRAL CHINA

BY THE REV. JAMES ARTHUR MULLER

I ARRIVED in Shanghai on September 4, 1917. On the afternoon of my arrival I had a glimpse of St. John's University, which is as pleasant and beautiful as the best of American colleges; on the same evening I proceeded up river in company with Bishop Roots. By the middle of September I was at work at Boone, six hundred miles from Shanghai.

For some unaccountable reason the authorities at Boone mistook me for a compendium of universal learning. They set me at teaching English composition in the preparatory school, American history, in the college; and, in the divinity school, Medieval and Reformation Church history, New Testament introduction, New Testament theology, ecclesiastical polity and canon law. This term my schedule has been pleasantly varied so as to include English history, modern Church history, New Testament Greek, English New Testament and English grammar.

Some years ago I fell into conversation with a venerable darky on a railroad train. He told me how he had taught school in his youth. "In them days," he said, and he waved his hand with a dramatic flourish, "in them days I manipulated the curriculum!" That is what I am doing at Boone!

Were Esperanto or sanitary plumbing to be introduced I am sure I would be asked to teach them. As it is, I have assisted the bricklayers in "turning a corner" in the cloister-walk of the divinity school, and have become an expert in the theory of scaling the city wall with a rope ladder to rescue the ladies of St. Hilda's from riotous revolutionists. Fortunately the revolutionists have not yet appeared.

Besides my regular teaching I have conducted a voluntary Bible class for a group of preparatory school students and have had no little opportunity for making addresses, sermonizing and holding services in English.

I cannot help feeling that there was something of irony in a remark which Bishop Roots made to me on the way to Boone last fall. He advised me to go in for research in Chinese history, "for," he said, "you will have plenty of free time on your hands at Boone!"

The contrast between Boone and an American school is not nearly so great as I anticipated. Of course it does seem a bit like living in a fairy tale, or perhaps I should say in a moving picture melodrama, to be residing in a medieval Chinese city, with its narrow, tortuous, smelly streets—oh! the smells!—and its huge embattled city wall whose gates are closed at sunset and opened at dawn and guarded by soldiers day and night. But when you enter the Boone campus, or "compound," as we call it here, you leave the middle ages behind, except for a vagrant odor that occasionally gets by the gatekeeper.

The compound is a pleasant, shady place, with walks and gardens and tennis courts and football field and class rooms and dormitories and chapel and library and faculty houses—quite like an American institution, except for the fact that most of the buildings are architectural monstrosities, which is not so very un-American either. If Mr. Ralph Adams Cram, or some other architect who is also an artist, wanted to write a book on styles to be avoided he could illustrate it completely by a set of photos from Boone! This is not entirely due to the fact that the buildings were erected in that era of bad taste from which institutions at home are but just recovering, it is also due to lack of funds. It is a pity that the most representative American institution in central China should be ugly and crowded. It is a pity that, in artistic quality, the buildings of a Christian college should not surpass those of a second rate Buddhist temple.

However, Mr. Howe is making a valiant effort, in spite of lamentably limited resources, to remodel the most atrocious of the buildings. The interior of the Divinity School chapel, which is entirely his work, is worthy of the best traditions of collegiate architecture.

As I have said, we are not only ugly, we are crowded. Yet we ought to erect at once a science hall, a gymnasium and a new dormitory. Unless we are empowered to buy more land Boone will be indeed an architectural mess.

The students here are not much different from American students after all. From the Chinese students we meet in America, who are picked men, we are apt to get the idea that all Chinese students are at once industrious and brilliant. We learn better at Boone. Here they average up, or perhaps we should say average down, pretty well to the American student body. A few are brilliant, many are plodding and mediocre, some are just "bone heads." The one striking difference between the Chinese and the American student body is the absence in China of any very large class who come to college merely for the social prestige or the delightful extra-curriculum activities which a college education affords. The Chinese youth has not outgrown the naïve assumption that one comes to college to get learning. He would stare in bewilderment at the motto so frequently seen in the room of the American undergraduate: "Don't let your studies interfere with your college education!" Whether bright or dull, the Chinese student usually works.

The mere suggestion of thirty-three hours a week in class would stagger the student in America, but that is exactly the number of hours the student at Boone spends with his teachers. He has the arduous task of assimilating those branches of western learning which we have come to regard as prerequisite to a degree in arts or science, and at the same time of acquainting himself with the literature and history and philosophy of his own land.

All branches of western learning he studies in English—he has studied and used English from his entrance into the first or second form of the preparatory school—and he uses it, if not with distinction, at least with moderate fluency. At the same time he must learn to express himself with ease and correctness in his own tongue.

Like Greek at the time of the Renaissance, English in China today is the key to a new culture. It is more. It is the key to a high-salaried position, for it is the commercial language of the East. That a large percentage of the graduates of Boone, in spite of this, enter the ministry or the profession of teaching, indicates that the youth of China are not without an idealism which is willing to express itself in service and that Christian education is not without fruit.

Though many of the students are not more clever than their American contemporaries, there are enough exceptional men in each class to make us regret our inability to send them to America for further training. There is not one of them who would not jump at a chance to go. The Boxer indemnity fund is far too small to send to America all Chinese students who might go with advantage to themselves and their country; and there is some doubt whether there will be any Boxer fund at all in the near future.

If you hear of any prosperous manufacturer who wants to invest his war profits in a venture for international understanding, assure him that a scholarship at his alma mater, endowed for Boone students, would bear fruit a hundredfold.

In spite of thirty-three hours a week in class, and reading and study out of class, and chapel twice a day, the students get quite enough exercise to keep them healthy and happy. Every morning at seven they have twenty minutes of setting up exercises—the rising bell rings at six-thirty, and it rings as if the place were on fire. After long practice I have acquired the ability to hear this in my subconsciousness only, and to sleep on, the troubled sleep of the unjust, troubled by succeeding bells at unholy intervals for getting ready for exercises and for starting exercises, and for ending exercises, and for getting ready for chapel, and for starting chapel, and for breakfast following chapel. All this bell ringing between six-thirty and seven-forty!

Then there is the band, or rather two of them, for the collegians have a brass band and the younger boys a drum and bugle corps. The musical students are excused from the setting up exercises in order to practise, so in addition to the clanging and the banging of the bells, the piccolos and the flutes and the trombones are going at one end of the compound and the bugles set the wild echoes flying at the other. And the echoes are wild! But I started to tell of the extra-curriculum activities of the students, not of the bugles and the bells.

In spite of the age-long national tradition that physical exertion is unbecoming a gentleman, the students of Boone hurdle and high jump and put the shot and throw the discus. They play tennis and soccer and basket ball. The boy scouts of the preparatory school—Boone has the distinction of having the first troop of boy scouts in China—wigwag and tie knots and build straw huts and cook meals in the open and rescue comrades from third-story windows ablaze with imaginary flames—in short, they do all the amazing and useful and absurd things that boy scouts are wont to do at home.

Confucius' birthday was celebrated by a football game. One imagines Confucius turning in his grave.

That the spirit of co-operation and loyalty, what we mean in America by "college spirit" in the best sense, has been developed at Boone, no one who has been here can fail to realize, but it is interesting to have the testi-many of the students themselves concerning it. One of the boys in my class in English composition in the preparatory school recently wrote an essay on Boone. He mentions the fact that his early training was received at another school and says that the thing which impressed him most on coming to Boone was this spirit of co-operation. He notes how students come from all over China and how diverse traditions and dialects might easily lead them "to form parties and make enemies of each other." "But," he adds—and I give his inimitable English without correction—"the students have no that kind of bad conduct, for they say they are all Boone students. For this reason you can hardly see once that such and such student fight with each other during the whole term. But this is still a small matter, the most honorable point is that they can unite themselves together and help each other. We have seen that in the football match, how they arrange themselves and prepare themselves, and get ready for each others shot. So also in everything they act in the same way, and I think they can get the first prize in every matter, if they can keep their affinity always with them!"

THE ARCHBISHOPS' REPLY TO BISHOP GREER

READERS of THE CHURCHMAN will recall that on December 21 a cablegram, signed by Bishop Greer and eighty-two bishops of the American Church, was sent to the Archbishops of Canterbury and York calling upon the Anglican Churches through them to "do their utmost to prevent a repetition of the hideous crime" of Turkish suzerainty over Armenia. Bishop Greer has received the following letters in answer to the cables:

OLD PALACE, CANTERBURY

MY DEAR BISHOP GREER:

I have today received the telegram you have sent in protest against the possibility of Armenia being, in the coming arrangements, left under Turkish rule. There are very few subjects upon which we can more certainly than on this secure the unanimous and eager support of Christian people generally without distinction of denomination. The Government here is well aware of the strength of public opinion on the subject. It has been voiced, not only by ecclesiastics, though we have voiced it to the best of our power, but also by men like Lord Bryce, and many others.

I am at once transmitting to the Foreign Office a copy of your telegram together, of course, with a further letter from myself. I presume that the President of the United States is fully aware of the Christian sentiment of America on this subject, and I doubt not that he will himself press the matter upon the attention of the representatives of the Allied Powers. No honest and capable man will fail to see that the practical question of how the thing is to be done is surrounded with difficulty, but these difficulties have to be overcome, and certainly on my part no effort will be lacking to support those who are working for that end.

I am, Yours very truly,

RANDALL CANTUAR.

December 24th, 1918.

BISHOPTHORPE, YORK

MY DEAR BISHOP:

Let me acknowledge your telegram which you sent to me on behalf of 82 of your brother bishops of the American Church on the subject of Armenia. I do not know at all the source of the sinister rumor to which you refer in that telegram or the weight which can be attached to it. But I am quite sure that the liberation of Armenia is one of the terms of peace upon which the Allied Powers will insist; and I have reason to know that quite recently representations have been made to our own Foreign Office urging the necessity of putting this matter in the forefront of the demands which will be made at the Peace Conference. There may be of course details as to exact boundaries and the like which may present difficulties; but in this country I have not heard any suggestions that Armenia should be restored to the control of the Turks, and if there appeared to be any suggestion of this kind I am satisfied that it would provoke a storm of indignation in this country.

May I add that I hope your own health and that of Mrs. Greer is better than it was when I saw you in New York; and remembering all your kindness to me I pray with a heart of very real friendship that every blessing may be with you in the new year.

Yours sincerely,

COSMO EBOR.

30th December, 1918.

REVELATION

BY CLINTON SCOLLARD

THE light and night are both to me divine,
Whichever rules the sky's o'erspanning arc,
Whether the sun in clear ascendant shine,
Or broods the enshrouding dark.

The frost, the glistening dew, the unfolding flower,
They each and all some lofty message teach;
I learn the lesson of a guiding power
Within the rillet's speech.

Bird-flight, wind-murmur, whisper of the sod,
The long surge of the sea upon the shore,
The prescience and omnipotence of God
Proclaim forevermore!

A NEW ERA FOR MOTION PICTURES

BY THE REV. WILLIAM SHEAFE CHASE, D.D.

THE new era is almost certain to reconstruct the moral tone of the motion picture. It will demand that it picture life as it is, and not infect the life of the young with the morals of the underworld.

Congress now has this great issue before it in the form of the Randall Federal Motion Picture Commission bill (H. R. 14077). It logically follows Mr. Randall's success in prohibition. It seeks to provide substitutes for the saloon by cleaning up the movies.

Every other effort to purify the motion picture has failed. The so-called National Board of Review is not official or national. The worst pictures are not even presented to this volunteer board, as no national law requires pictures to be reviewed or censored. The state censorship in Ohio, Kansas, Maryland and Pennsylvania are the most successful measures for the moral control, but so long as bad pictures are manufactured they are likely through graft or through inefficient or careless censors to be shown even in those states. As long as forty-four states have no censorship laws, bad pictures are likely to be produced.

The only feasible way of preventing the manufacture of bad pictures is by using the licensing power of the Federal Government and by refusing to license any films for interstate commerce, which do not conform to the moral standards of our land. The United States Supreme Court denied the claim that such law is contrary to the freedom of the press when it upheld the Ohio Censorship Law.

The Randall Bill as it provides for appeals does not authorize censorship nor does it interfere with liberty of thought or expression, except as it effectively requires that every film which seeks the privilege of interstate commerce shall come up to a certain recognized standard of public morals. It is similar to the city's refusal to license a place of public amusement unless it comes up to the requirements of the building and fire laws. All films now in existence are exempted from the provisions of the bill. News, education and scientific films are also excepted.

One of the advantages of the federal commission over every other form of control is that the salaries of $8,000 and $7,500 to be paid the commissioners to be appointed by President Wilson will command a higher type of man than the city or state censor and form a board similar in influence to the Interstate Commerce Commission. Graft will be practically impossible. Chicago is much stirred up now about the bad films shown there in spite of its city censorship law. Corrupt politics makes it easy for bad pictures to be exhibited in spite of laws or censorships. The recent congressional investigation concerning the brewers showed that the brewers had such a control over motion pictures in twenty-six states that they could prevent the showing of any picture which injured the saloon business.

The best motion picture leaders like Mr. W. W. Hodkinson, founder of the Paramount Picture Corporation, have joined in the drawing up of the bill. They see that it is better to have no official federal commission than forty-eight state censorships and one in every city and town. It may be called an anti-censorship bill because, while it will not legally prevent state or town censorship, it will, if wisely administered, make such local censorships unnecessary and thus indirectly will abolish them. When the federal commission has set the standard and given its license, the manufacturer will have no fear of any state or local censors. The substance of this act known as the Hughes bill was unanimously favored by the H. R. Committee on Education in 1915, and again in spite of severe criticism by opposing motion picture interests it was favorably reported in May, 1916.

Such a law will give the public an increased confidence in the moral influence of the movies and greatly increase public patronage. The best men in the business have a true public spirit and wish to have their business protected from the few pirates who exploit the weakness of the lower human nature and pander to vice. A few such vampires have so much demoralized the whole business that the most reputable motion picture men with ambitions to place their business among the most respectable factors of life, will be glad to welcome this reform.

THE armistice has not ended one of my real war-time diversions. I am still able to barge unexpectedly into American soldiers idling in the streets of London and carry them off to see interesting places and entertain them with stories of the quaint manners and customs of the great city. It is a diversion that brings me more than a passing pleasure; these American boys are so keen to express their appreciation of an Englishman's friendly overtures. Let me give an illustration. The other day in the Strand I picked up two lads of twenty wearing the dark tunic and light blue trousers of American marines. They received my offer to show them round with an embarrassment that clearly amounted to suspicion, and when I had won their confidence I found out why. A professional "guide" had picked them up earlier in the day, and for taking them round some of the sights had fleeced them each for the amount of a day and a half's pay. I took them to the Tower and other places, and when I left them I warned them against the professional guide. They gave me a delicious reply. "Sir," said one of them. "I guess we don't mind meeting a crook in the morning if we can meet a white man in the afternoon."

But that was not all. I took them to my rooms and gave them coffee and cigarettes. They were delightfully entertaining and, as I found later, keenly observant. Three days afterwards I found at my rooms a letter and a package. "Sir," the letter ran, "this is to say, 'Good-bye' and 'Thank you.' We would have liked to have bought you a souvenir, but our money is all gone. Sir, we noticed that while you helped us generously to sugar with the coffee you used very little yourself, although you said you disliked coffee without sugar. The enclosed package contains the balance of our sugar ration for the week. Will you please have a few cups of really sweet coffee in memory of two grateful boys from U. S. A.?" The package contained a pound and a half of sugar, and it is the sweetest sugar I have tasted since we went on rations.—Manchester Guardian.

NEWS OF THE CHURCH

BISHOP BRATTON'S HOUSE IS DESTROYED BY FIRE

Contents Total Loss, and Family Barely Escape Death

JACKSON, MISSISSIPPI.—On January 16 the historic episcopal home at Battle Hill, the home of every bishop of Mississippi, burned to the ground, absolutely nothing being saved. The bishop's wife, his daughter, Miss Marion Bratton, and Mrs. William Bratton with her two little children barely escaped from the building. Though the building was insured the contents was a total loss, the bishop's valuable library and his office files, all the furniture and clothing being destroyed. Bishop Bratton is in France.

After the fire friends of Bishop Bratton held a meeting and arranged to raise a purse for him.

Those elected officers of the committee to raise a purse were: J. L. Enochs, chairman; W. D. Hannah, treasurer, and A. F. Wortman, secretary. None of these men are churchmen. The following letter is being sent to friends over the state:

"At a meeting of a committee of friends, regardless of denomination, of Bishop Bratton and family, held subsequent to the disastrous fire which this morning destroyed their residence with its entire contents, including the extensive and valuable library of the bishop, it was the opinion that his friends throughout the state would be glad to avail themselves of the privilege of subscribing to a fund which would enable this worthy and beloved citizen of our community to replace, as far as possible, the heavy loss suffered.

"This loss, coming as it does, while the bishop is in France serving his nation and the cause which represents his lifework, and with his sons all in the service, adds incentive to his friends to make good, as far as possible for them to do so, this irreparable loss.

"We are sending this letter to as many of the bishop's friends throughout the state as we have been able to get the names of. We should be glad to have such contributions to this fund as you may feel able to make. We have not tried to address a letter to all the numerous friends of Bishop Bratton, nor could we have done so. We would appreciate it if you would use such means as may be convenient to bring this matter to the attention of others who might wish to participate in this expression.

"We enter into this endeavor in no other spirit than that of wishing to seize this opportunity of showing this distinguished citizen the respect and affection in which he is held by the citizens of the state, irrespective of creed. Remittances may be made to W. D. Hannah, treasurer, Jackson, Mississippi."

WESTERN SEMINARY GETS BEQUEST OF $100,000

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.—The Western Theological Seminary has just received something over $100,000 from the will of Miss Mary Murdoch, of Charleston, South Carolina. Miss Murdoch died in October, 1917, making the Western Seminary legatee.

The bequest will not mean any immediate enlargement in the scope of the seminary's work, but for years the institution has been running in the face of an annual deficit of four or five thousand dollars, and the income from this new gift will just about cover that deficit. It will put the seminary on its feet, and leave the trustees free to use further gifts for developing new plans of usefulness to the diocese and the Church.

The Western Seminary has been considering various plans for meeting the needs of older men who may want to enter the ministry of the Church after the war, but who will not feel that they can give as long a time as three years to their preparation. It has been decided not to adopt the

Bishop Greer

IT is no wonder that nothing seemed too good to be said about Bishop Greer yesterday, on the fifteenth anniversary of his episcopate, because in the thirty-three years he has been laboring in this metropolis for its uplift, civic as well as spiritual, he has endeared himself to every one who has come in contact with him by his simplicity, his sincerity, his democracy, his seriousness of purpose and his unsparingness of self.

So unassuming is he in manner that he never even wears a round collar, having long ago declared that if his own bearing did not let the world know he was a minister of the Gospel something was wrong.

Although by his very office Bishop Greer has through all the eighteen years of his rectorship of St. Bartholomew's Church and later as Bishop of the Diocese of New York been thrown with men who are leaders in the world of finance and affairs, he has ever sought to be the friend of the poor and unfortunate. St. Bartholomew's parish house and clinic, in East Forty-second Street, will ever be a monument to him. These he not only built but secured an endowment for.

Shortly after the cathedral was opened the bishop had a service for the inmates of the city's almshouse, taking the old people there in special stages. He never delegates to a brother bishop the annual Confirmation at Blackwell's Island or at the church for deaf mutes.

Bishop Greer is not in good health, but his will power makes even that sink into insignificance. May he long be spared.—From the New York Herald.

plan of the eastern seminaries, of running a summer school for these men, but to prepare them in two ordinary seminary years for their examinations for the diaconate. It is pointed out that this will not require any change in the policy of the seminary, as the three year course leading to the bachelor's degree has always demanded a full year's work more than the examining chaplains require for deacon's examinations.

BISHOP GREER'S FIFTEENTH ANNIVERSARY OBSERVED

Affectionate Words of Eulogy Are Spoken at the Cathedral

Although Bishop Greer had directed that no service should be held in commemoration of his fifteen years as Bishop of the Diocese of New York, his career in that office during this period was the subject of eulogy at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine last Sunday by the Very Rev. H. C. Robbins, D.D., of the cathedral, and the Rev. William E. Gardner, D.D., secretary of the General Board of Religious Education.

"We expressed the hope this morning that Bishop Greer might be with us this afternoon so that we could tell him some of the things that we are thinking about him and that we can't say even to one's bishop oftener than once in five years," said Dr. Robbins.

"He has shown himself a most American bishop, simple, unaffected, the friend of the people and quite easily approached by them. He has shown himself a devoted bishop who never spares himself. In fact, if I have any quarrel with him it is because he never takes care of himself. During his recent illness, it was all his doctor and nurse could do to keep him from getting out of bed, at the greatest risk to himself, and attending a meeting, because he thought it was in the interest of the diocese."

Dr. Gardner said that Bishop Greer had taken the lead in sweeping away conventionalism, which separated the clergy from the members of their congregations and deprived religion of its vital force.

"One of his greatest messages," said Dr. Gardner, "was a plea for the destruction of this false conventionalism. The stand taken by Bishop Greer has given thousands the power to think freely on religion. He has always refused to admit the existence of walls and barriers that imagination and the tradition of the ages have been prone to force upon us."

Bishop Touret Undergoes Operation

ROCHESTER, MINNESOTA.—The Rt. Rev. Frank Hale Touret, Bishop of Western Colorado, was operated upon for appendicitis January 22, by Dr. William J. Mayo in St. Mary's Hospital here. The distinguished surgeon assures the bishop that he should enjoy many years of good health and useful activity. The bishop is recuperating rapidly after this successful operation.

Bishop Brent Due in New York

Bishop Brent sailed early last week from a French port on the Celtic. He was due in New York about the middle of this week. He has called the diocesan council of Western New York for February 6. It is understood that he will remain in this country for only a short time.

Bishop Lawrence Much Better

BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS.—Bishop Lawrence is improving steadily and is now strong enough to sit up for a while each day. "He is getting along splendidly," is the report of the bishop's physician.

CHRISTIAN COURTESY NOT ATTAINED BY FREE PEWS

Clergy Have Promised to Care for Definite Group, Says Dr. Stires

In an interview given to the New York Evening Post, the Rev. Ernest M. Stires said concerning the pew system:

"I hold no brief for any specific plan in the so-called pew problems. True Christian courtesy will not be attained merely by the system of free pews, and true Christian courtesy will not be prevented merely by the system of rented pews. I have had twenty-seven years of experience with both methods. In the question under discussion, as in almost all questions, the plan which is unwise and wrong under certain conditions is both wise and right under certain other conditions. It is a mistake to attempt to apply a hard and fast rule and experience teaches that such a rule seldom improves the situation.

"The new era upon which we are entering will be largely influenced by the power of a simple and genuine Christianity. If the renting of pews prevents Christian hospitality in any church then that church should quickly change its method.

"No method, however free, will administer itself; and no method is without its inevitable dangers. There are churches in which pews are free and unassigned, and yet these pews, by an understanding with the ushers, are occupied regularly by the same persons. Strangers availing themselves of such free and unassigned pews have had unhappy experiences.

"There are at least a few churches where pews are rented, and where many people of small means are found in the middle aisle, and many of large means are in the side aisles. Vacant pews are offered to those applying for them, and in the order in which the application is made, without regard to wealth or any other consideration. There are churches which because of convenient location, or because of an attractive service, appeal to a large number of small means visitors. It is not unusual for such visitors to come an hour before the time of service, and they often come a half hour ahead of time. Frequently their number would represent at least half of the seating capacity of the church. All these visitors should be welcomed cordially. But the families who regularly attend that church should not be neglected. I will go further and say that if desired a pew should be assigned to each family, for the Sunday morning service only, on condition that they come to church in good time. The habit of occupying the family pew is a good habit, and there are memories which make it a very sacred spot.

"The church is for worship and instruction. Instruction must be regular and constant if it is to be effective. That means a place for each pupil enrolled in the school, and each pupil in his place. There must be intelligent system even in a free school. Let us make the church genuinely free, but let the clergy not forget that as teachers and pastors we have promised to take care of a very definite group of people committed to us. We will gladly care for more to the limit of our ability. This seems to me just, democratic, sensible, and Christian."

Stephen D. Thaw Ordained

Stephen Dows Thaw, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Thaw, of New York City, Pittsburgh and Newport, was ordained a deacon in the Church of St. Mary the Virgin last Saturday by the Rt. Rev. Cortlandt Whitehead, Bishop of Pittsburgh.

Mr. Thaw was for some time a missionary of the Presbyterian Church in Syria. For some months he has been a special student at the General Theological Seminary.

A brother of Mr. Thaw was Lieutenant Blair Alexander Thaw, who was killed in France last August in an airplane accident.

The Rev. Wm. Mercer Green Elected

JACKSON, MISSISSIPPI.—The Rev. William Mercer Green, rector of St. Andrew's Church, of this city, was elected bishop coadjutor of Mississippi last week on the first ballot. He will accept the election.

WILLIAM MERCER GREEN

Mr. Green is a native of Mississippi, having been born in Greenville, Mississippi, 1876. He was ordained deacon in 1899 and priest the following year by Bishop Thompson. The greater part of his ministry has been spent in his native state.

N. Y. Berkeley Alumni Meet

The annual meeting of the New York Berkeley Alumni was held at Browne's Chop House on Tuesday, Jan. 21, with a large representation present, including the Bishop of Newark. Resolutions of regret were passed in memory of the late Rev. William H. Vibbert, D. D., president of the association from its founding to his death, and of the Rev. Storrs O. Seymour, D. D., of Litchfield, Connecticut, who had been a regular attendant at the meetings.

A vote of congratulation was passed to Mr. Charles E. Jackson, of Middletown, on the completion of his fiftieth year as treasurer of the school.

Dean Ladd then spoke of the present state and future prospects of the school. The number of students has increased, and the probability is that there will be further increases next year, which will call for increased expenses, and increased support. A period of reconstruction and readjustment has set in, and the theological seminary must have a wider field than merely the training of young men for the ministry. It should become a center of inspiration and leadership in all phases of church thought and activity.

PORTRAIT OF BISHOP HARE HUNG AT STATE CAPITOL

Impressive Ceremonies Held in Connection with Its Unveiling

PIERRE, SOUTH DAKOTA.—An event of particular interest occurred in the capitol here on January 15, at the ninth biennial meeting of the State Historical Society, which was held in the representative chamber of the state capitol, when a portrait of the late Bishop Hare was unveiled. The presentation of the portrait was made by Bishop Burleson and was graciously accepted by his excellency, Governor Peter Norbeck. It will hang permanently in the halls of the state capitol.

The portrait was unveiled by Dr. Helen Peabody, principal of All Saints' School. The invocation was offered by the Rev. Luke Walker of Lower Brule, who was the first Indian minister to be ordained to the priesthood by Bishop Hare. During the exercise the large audience sang Bishop Hare's favorite hymn, "The King of Love My Shepherd Is." Colonel P. F. McClure, president of the Historical Society, presided, and the principal feature of the evening was a paper prepared and read by Bishop Burleson, dealing with Bishop Hare as a citizen and his service to South Dakota.

A representative body of some twenty or thirty men and women who had been associated in close ties of friendship with Bishop Hare and had been helpers in his work, acted as a presentation committee.

For many years there have been portraits in these halls of men closely connected with the history of South Dakota. The absence of Bishop Hare's portrait was particularly noticeable, for no man has done more for the upbuilding of South Dakota than did this apostle to the Indians. To him is due more than to any one man the Christianization of the Dakotas. But his work as a citizen was by no means confined to his Indian brethren. At a time when South Dakota was a by-word in the country for its loose divorce laws, Bishop Hare fought the evil often almost alone, extending the old ninety-day residence act to the present law. He founded schools, not merely among the Indians but also among the whites, which made a tremendous contribution to the development of the state.

FARMER AND MERCER GAIN GOOD RESULTS IN OHIO

CLEVELAND, OHIO.—An important work was begun a couple of months ago by Messrs. E. C. Mercer and Thomas J. Farmer, who came to the diocese at the invitation of a special committee of the bishops of Ohio and some of the clergy. This is a new departure for the Church, but the message which these men have for our congregations is well worth while. At Lima, St. John's, Youngstown, and the Incarnation, Cleveland, these men have accomplished a great deal, especially among men and boys. Their work consists of a preaching service held each night, and this is supplemented by addresses made to the high schools, shops and factories.

Death of Lieut. Anderson Confirmed

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.—Bishop Anderson has recently received letters from abroad which have satisfied him that his son Patrick was killed in an air battle in France in the early fall. The report that the bishop is going abroad to look for his son is without foundation. Bishop Anderson is contemplating a trip to Europe early in the spring, but it is on business connected with the World Conference on Faith and Order.

HAVANA HAS TWO GREAT MEMORIAL SERVICES FOR COLONEL ROOSEVELT

Roman Bishop Forbids Attendance of Romanists at Episcopal Cathedral

WIDE-SPREAD CONDEMNATION FROM THE HAVANA PRESS

HAVANA, CUBA.—On the day of the burial of the late Colonel Roosevelt the city of Havana officially held a great memorial service in the National Theatre, and on the following Sunday a similar service was held in Holy Trinity Cathedral.

At one time the National Theatre was one of the four great theatres of the world. It can accommodate about 5,000 people, and on the day of the burial of Colonel Roosevelt and at the same hour with it this theatre was filled from pit to dome with a most reverent and dignified congregation, for the purpose of attending the memorial service to be held under the management of the president of the Anti-Germanic Club. The boxes were filled with representatives of the diplomatic corps, and of the Cuban Government, while the stage was occupied by other representative people and a deputation of members of the Red Cross nurses.

A committee from the Rotary Club waited upon Bishop Hulse and Dean Myers, asking permission to hold another service in Holy Trinity Cathedral at which one or the other of the clergy of the cathedral should deliver a funeral oration, and that the service should be in conformity with the use and customs of the Episcopal Church.

To this request of course a very willing consent was granted and on the next day a notice of invitation appeared in all the papers of the city.

Now, rather curiously in the issue of the Diario de la Marina on the succeeding day the following letter from the Roman Catholic Bishop of Havana was printed:

"Senor Doctor Jose Rivero y Alonzo, Sub-Director of the Diario de la Marina.

"My distinguished friend:

"In the edition of your paper of to-day's date I have seen a mortuary notice of invitation to the religious services which will be held in a Protestant church of the Episcopal rite in memory of the Honorable ex-President of the United States, Theodore Roosevelt.

"Inasmuch as the Catholic Church has fulminated the decree of excommunication against all Catholics who attend religious services performed by whatever religious sect, I perform my duty by making this public, reminding all faithful Catholics of the existing prohibition, with its penalty, in order that none may incur it by attending religious services performed by the so-called Episcopal Church.

"Reiterating my best wishes, I remain very attentively your most affectionate friend.

"(Signed) THE BISHOP OF HAVANA."

None the less the service was held in the cathedral on Sunday morning by the clergy of the cathedral, the bishop making the address, and the building was filled to the doors. At least one half of the members of the Rotary Club were present, and representatives of the full diplomatic corps of the allied nations, together with Dr.

Montoro, representing the President; Dr. Nicholas Azcarate, the secretary of justice; Dr. Francisco Domingo Roldan, secretary of public instruction; the secretary of war, and many other Government men.

It is said here that the president of the Rotary Club was the man who was most interested in securing the use of our cathedral for the memorial service; that he was one of the committee who waited upon the bishop and the dean asking for the use of the building and soliciting their services on the occasion; that he sent out the notices to all the members of the club, and that he even took the trouble to call them up by telephone, so that none of them should fail of his presence.

Then appeared the letter of the Bishop of Havana on Saturday afternoon, and the president of the Rotary Club sent out notices to the effect that good Cubans who had any conscientious scruples need not attend the service—and he himself was not present. An effort was also made at the last hour to transfer the service to the Roman Church Cristo, where English is the language for the sermons.

I hear that the president of the Rotary Club is to be called to account by the club at its next meeting next week.

WHAT WAS THE ANIMUS?

It is a little difficult to know just what was the animus that prompted the publication of the letter from the Roman bishop. It may have been just the zeal of the Roman Communion against all so-called heretics; or it may have been a natural result from the fact that a large part of the Roman clergy here are Spaniards, and so, naturally, are not especially devoted to the memory of Colonel Roosevelt; or it may have been that the Roman Church, seeing that the "so-called" Episcopal Church is at last coming to the front, and making a great impression upon the more prominent and more thoughtful of the Cuban people, and so far that reason is no longer to be ignored.

At any rate the people of Havana have had the opportunity to gather once more within walls that represent a more Catholic faith than that of the Roman Communion, and on the broad lines of a common humanity to worship. God free from the dictates of an intolerant religion. Once more the people of this devoted land which lay for so many long years enslaved beneath a double tyranny, of State and of Church has had the opportunity of making the acquaintance of a larger, freer form of the Holy Catholic Church, which while defending in all its integrity that form of sound faith which was once delivered to the saints, yet stands for all that is free in the liberty of conscience, and personal freedom of religious action, as against all forms of religious, or other tyranny. Possibly the Bishop of Havana has not forgotten that it was owing to the sufferings and imprisonment of a priest of the same so-called Episcopal Church that religious freedom was obtained and proclaimed to all the inhabitants of this land.

At any rate the Cuban people are awakening and taking notice of this Church.

In connection with the letter from the Roman Catholic Bishop, the Havana Post, the leading daily published in English in Cuba, said:

"With infinite regret we have read in the Diario de la Marina the anathema by the Bishop of Havana upon any member of his flock who should attend the memorial services for Theodore Roosevelt held yesterday in the Protestant Episcopal cathedral of this city.

"We are over apt fondly to say that certain things cannot happen, but the above proves too sadly the folly of such conviction. Cardinal Gibbons or Cardinal Mercier could not have written the above letter, but by the fact that he has done it, we know that the Bishop of Havana could—forcing us to the same horrid conclusion which ensued upon the sinking of the Lusitania—that nothing is impossible in this disordered world.

"St. Paul, who wrote many epistles, would not have written the one which we have reproduced above in translation. . . . The tenets of it are not Catholic—they are simply Spanish!"

This editorial by an American citizen is interesting, but even more so is the following, from La Noche, a Cuban paper:

"The Episcopate of Havana has deemed it to be his duty to announce publicly and impress upon the memory of the faithful Catholics (which means that either there are faithful people who are not Catholics, or that through the act of not being Catholic, one is not necessarily unfaithful), the existing prohibition of the Catholic Church which holds the fulminating penalty of excommunication against those who attend religious services, held (or to be held?) by whatever sect, and consequently those which were held in the Protestant Church of the Episcopal rite in memory of that superman who honored the office of President of the foremost nation in the world, and who was the pride of all humanity, Mr. Theodore Roosevelt (may he rest in peace!).

"At the religious ceremony celebrated to-day all those, Catholic or no, who believed that it was not a horrible sin worthy of an excommunication, that of doing honor to the dead, and that human gratitude is above all opinions and creeds, were present.

"It is certain that without the efficacious intervention of Roosevelt the Cuban Bishop of Havana would not now be exercising the functions of a bishop, and for this reason the act was magnificent, for not all the Cubans are ungrateful."

This same paper then gives the following notice of the service:

"With all the solemnity that was to be expected, this morning religious services were celebrated in the Episcopal Church, situated at the corner of Neptuno and Aguila streets, under the auspices of the Cathedral of the Most Holy Trinity, . . . which church is known to be Catholic and Apostolic, but not Roman."

FROM ANOTHER PAPER

One of the important Havana papers, El Mundo, says editorially, under "Monseñor Gonzalez Estrada, Victim of an Error":

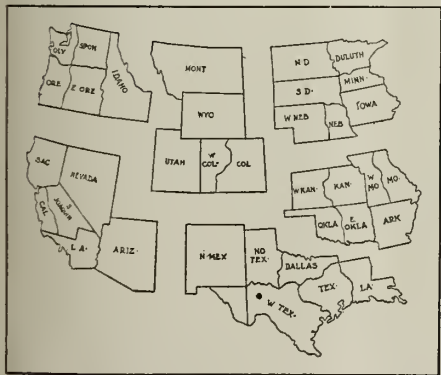

"The Bishop of Havana, lord of all our respects, has just uttered a discordant note. And a lamentable one, for we all desire for Mons. Gonzalez Estrada that he may put forth his best powers in order that at some time we may give vent to that ardent desire to applaud his actions which we entertain. Because for some time past the Bishop of Havana has not wished to grant us the satisfaction of declaring us his friends, or of the number those who speak of his talents which should be many, and his virtues which should be unmeasurable.

"To the Señor Bishop of Havana it has appeared an evil thing that the Rotary Club should celebrate funeral services in the Episcopal cathedral in memory of him who was the great and good friend of the

New Arrangement Will Be More Practical

It is clear that if the provincial system is to be effective, plans must be worked out so that (a) general attendance at synod meetings will be possible; (b) that the various committees and commissions may find it practicable to hold frequent meetings and do thorough work in their provinces.

- (a) Far smaller area.
- (b) Better transportation.
- (c) Common interests.

5. Would you be willing to present some such plan for redistribution to your next convention or convocation?

PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA.—A special service for the Guild of St. Barnabas for Nurses was held at Holy Trinity Church, Sunday afternoon, January 19, when hundreds of nurses were present. After the service the nurses met the visiting clergy at the home of Mrs. E. Bowman Leaf. The addresses at the service on "Work Among War Nurses" were made by the Rev. Thomas J. Crosby, chaplain general, Guild of St. Barnabas, and Mr. Frank W. Bigelow, war secretary of the Guild.

TARPON SPRINGS, FLORIDA.—The Greek Epiphany, which fell this year on January 19, was celebrated here with unusual ceremony. The Rev. T. J. Lacey, of the Church of the Redeemer, Brooklyn, was appointed by Bishop Parker to represent the Anglican Eastern Church Association. He bore a beautifully engrossed letter of greeting and was given a place in the church and the public procession and appointed to read the gospel in English at the service. The local Episcopal church omitted its service in order that the congregation might unite with the Greeks for the great celebration.

RICHMOND, VIRGINIA.—Through the Colonial Dames of Virginia, St. George's Church, Gravesend, Kent, England, has been presented by Mrs. Woodrow Wilson with a signed photograph of herself, which will be hung beneath a portrait of her ancestor, Princess Pocahontas, in the vestry of the church.

"One feature of the Roosevelt Memorial service that every church should observe will be the singing of the Ex-President's favorite hymn, 'How Firm a Foundation.'"

KNOXVILLE, TENNESSEE.—St. John's Church, of which the Rev. Walter C. Whitaker, D. D., has been rector for the past twelve years, has just abolished the pew renting system and made the pews free. This action was taken by unanimous vote at the annual parish meeting on January 14, following similar action by the vestry taken in December on recommendation from the rector. At the parish meeting the "rotating vestry" plan was rejected by a majority vote. The parish has paid all current expenses from current income, overpaid its missionary apportionment of $1,015, has built its orphanage endowment to $17,000, and is now about to put into operation the budget system for all obligations. The parish now numbers 867 communicants, a net increase of 63 over last year, when the canonical pruning knife was applied to the list and more than a hundred names were dropped.

The spirit of get-together was very marked. The rector of Trinity Church, Rev. Archibald H. Bradshaw, published the invitation of his vestry and wardens, in which he and Bishop Talbot join in the following words: "We welcome our brethren of the First and the Brainerd-Union Presbyterian and St. Paul's Lutheran Churches into our midst for divine worship. May all differences of opinion be set aside so we may be one in Christ and every one members of one another. Brethren, we offer ourselves in the right hand of fellowship. All we have is yours and not because we extend what we have, but because it is also yours by divine right. The riches of the Gospel are ours together and we are joint heirs of Christ."

WAR COMMISSION'S WORK ONLY TWO-THIRDS DONE

Everybody in the Church Must Stand by on February 9

All the machinery at the War Commission office is whirling these days in preparation for the appeal to the Church on February 9 for funds with which to see its work through until every Church boy is safely home from the front. Messages are pouring in from chaplains urging the Church not to think that its obligation to our men ended with the signing of the armistice. "I am sure that the hardest and most difficult task is to be done in the months that remain before the army disbands," writes one. Another says: "Not for one moment should it be assumed that as the days of fighting draw to their close the work of the chaplain will lapse or the need for supporting him diminish. During the days of peace negotiations and the subsequent long months before transportation home can be completed the chaplain will be a figure twice as important as he was before and his work double in range and volume."

In an appeal Bishop Lawrence sends out another of his clarion calls to every clergyman and layman.

"Peace has come suddenly, and the future of the army and navy is uncertain," he says. "But one thing is certain. The period of demobilization will call upon the moral and spiritual forces of the churches and communities with even greater insistence than the activities of war."

"With the war still going on the Church would have needed $1,000,000 for work in 1919."

"With demobilization, and the number of men to be reached constantly decreasing, at least $250,000 will be needed to complete the war work of the Church."

"The Church has gone two-thirds of the way with its soldiers and sailors. It must complete its task—the task of every one in the Church."

Records at the War Commission office show some interesting figures. For example, there have been 528 Episcopal clergymen engaged in war service. "The War Commission thinks this isn't a bad showing for the Church," said a layman the other day, "and you can't help agreeing. The men and women and kiddies in the parishes and missions who gave to the first fund made it possible, too. We ought to remember that this fine showing goes back for its origin to the individual in the pew. I hope people will remember that on February 9."

On the first of January there were 269 chaplains still in service, and for the work of these men $40,000 more will be needed. When one is told that the commission supplied to the chaplains 16 portable organs, 146 typewriters, 144 portable altars and 153,000 Prayer Books, one realizes that war work costs money.

The Army and Navy Council of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew has kept in personal touch with more than 60,000 of our men, even to the point of sending every one in the service a Christmas card.

What that useful organization, the Church Periodical Club, has done can be gathered from these figures of its gifts:

Bibles, Testaments, Prayer Books and Hymnals.....	9,960
Books (Religious and Secular)....	1,493
Religious Leaflets and Cards.....	96,536
Christmas and Easter Cards.....	174,800
Subscriptions (Church and Secular Papers)	251

Stationery (Sheets of Paper with Envelopes)	182,700
Games	2,406

To continue the work of the Church Periodical Club this year will require $7,000.

It would be to the point to tell something of the story of the Girls' Friendly Society through its War Emergency Committee, something of the industrial work through the Joint Social Service Commission, besides the overseas work, the Seamen's Church Institute work and the other special efforts of the War Commission. But any churchman can secure these facts from his rector, or directly from the War Commission.

URGE COOPERATION WITH INTER-CHURCH FEDERATION

PHILADELPHIA.—Bishop Talbot and the Rev. Dr. Grammar have made eloquent and forceful appeals to the Clerical Brotherhood for an understanding and undertaking of the work with other clergy, which has the name of Inter-Church Federation. Dr. Grammar, who is the president of the federation in this city, was the special speaker of the day at the last meeting. He gave an outline of the political and social reforms that the association had accomplished and intended, as well as the plan to prevent overlapping and competition between religious bodies.

It was brought home clearly that such work was hindered by a lack of co-operation on the part of the clergy, and by the criticism of influential laymen when it was undertaken. Both of the speakers made a plea for federation in work as a first and necessary step toward any organic union.

At this meeting a motion expressing confidence in a prominent clergyman of the Lutheran Church was proposed, the Rev. Dr. Delk, who has been most active in efforts to compel the police to "clean up" the city.

Mountain School Needs Friends

WINCHESTER, KENTUCKY.—The Rev. F. B. Wentworth, archdeacon of Lexington, has sent a very urgent letter to his people in regard to the deficit which is facing the Board of Missions and the special needs of St. John's School, Corbin, Kentucky. The letter says in part:

"Surely, in the joy of a righteous victory, we should not fail in our duty toward those, who, all things considered, have more largely contributed toward that victory than any other class of patriots—the missionary and the school-teacher. Theirs it has been in the years that have past, and must needs be in the years to come, to forge and temper the sword of the 'American spirit'—the victorious 'morale' that has led the armies of the world to a righteous peace."

"Among such patriots, thus forgotten, are the teachers and other workers of St. John's Missionary School, in the mountains of Kentucky. It has succeeded in keeping up the fight only through the personal sacrifices of its officers and teachers. Now a deficit of $5,635.23 has to be paid."

Mrs. Whipple Honored in Italy

Mrs. Whipple, the widow of the great bishop, whose heroic work in Italy has been reported from time to time in THE CHURCHMAN has been made a citizen of Bagni di Lucca. The only other foreigner ever honored in this way was F. Marion Crawford.

SHOULD A MAN PREACH WITH NOTHING TO SAY?

Dr. Dearmer Thinks It Would Thrill People to Say "I Won't"

PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA. — The first of four lectures on the "Art of Public Worship" by the Rev. Dr. Percy Dearmer, was delivered at Holy Trinity parish house on January 21, on the Bohlen Foundation.

One of the expected flashes of humor that stood out was: "Suppose the rector of the congregation would announce on Sunday morning that he was not going to preach a sermon, because he had nothing to say. What a thrill it would give us. When he did preach, the congregation would have the comforting knowledge that he really had something to tell them."

Dr. Dearmer said: "There can be no public worship without art; however bad that art may be. The art of ceremonial must be somehow present in every religious gathering. The Bible cannot be read without the art of elocution. However badly a man preaches, he must use the art of rhetoric. Among the Puritans art was not held high, it had been a wicked thing; but during the nineteenth century, Christendom began to win back its own."

TO OBTAIN FIVE TIMES USUAL EASTER OFFERING

AUBURN, NEW YORK.—The parish of St. John's Church has undertaken a novel method to obtain five times the usual amount in the Easter offering. The vestry expect to raise $1,000 and to pay off some long-standing debts. Parishioners and friends are being invited to join a ten-dollar Easter Club, the members of which pledge themselves to raise or give ten dollars for the Easter offering. The vestrymen are taking turns as four-minute men, so that one of them will speak in furtherance of this project at every church service before Easter. The idea is being taken up with enthusiasm and already the club has a considerable membership. During last year, under plans initiated by the rector, the Rev. Ralph Bray, St. John's Parish raised $3,800 for the purchase of a rectory.

The Rev. Charles M. Niles

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.—The Rev. Charles Martin Niles, D. D., rector of the Church of the Ascension here, died last week. He was born near Rutland, Vermont, and served as rector in that city, in Columbia, South Carolina, and at Ossining, New York. Prior to his assignment to this city he served as archdeacon in Pensacola, Florida. Dr. Niles was married twice, his first wife being Mary Webster Parker, of Poughkeepsie, New York. The Rev. C. E. Niles, of Jordanville, New York, is their son. Dr. Niles' second wife was Mary F. Doyle, of Wilmington, North Carolina. She and a young son survive him.

National Thrift Day and the "Y"

How to meet the economic needs of men in the reconstruction period has engaged the close attention of the leaders in the Industrial Department of the Y. M. C. A. A new program has just been announced, and most appropriately. National Thrift Day, February 3, will be celebrated by hundreds of Y. M. C. A.'s throughout the country as the beginning of a new emphasis on thrift activities and of a standardized economic program.

REMARKABLE RESULTS IN EVERY MEMBER CANVASSES

Central New York Parishes Pay Debts and Double Income

SYRACUSE, NEW YORK.—Bishop Fiske has been active in furthering every member canvasses in several parishes, and through addresses to men's clubs, in the organization of study classes in the Bible and in Christian doctrine in a number of parishes.

Emmanuel Church, Elmira, one of the mission parishes of the diocese, has, as a result of a recent canvass, paid off all accumulated indebtedness, doubled the stipend paid the priest in charge, made improvements to the parish house, and started a second campaign to clear off by Easter a mortgage debt of $2,800 on the church building.

Trinity Church and Christ Church, Binghamton, have recently completed a most successful every member canvass. In the former parish, although a canvass was made two years ago, the new canvass showed envelope pledges more than doubled, a gain of over $4,300. Christ Church had a similar gain, though the figures of the canvass are not yet complete. The Church of the Good Shepherd, the third parish in the city, is to have its campaign later.

In Trinity, Binghamton, an interesting feature of the canvass was that it led to a desire on the part of the men canvassers to organize for definite Church work. On January 15 a men's dinner was held, with a hundred and twenty-five present, and after an address by Bishop Fiske, sixty-five men pledged themselves to membership in a study class which will begin February 27.

Grace Church, Waverly, the Rev. A. T. Doughty, priest in charge, has had a very successful campaign for payment of the debt for the improvements to the church, undertaken by Mr. Doughty's predecessor. In two weeks the entire debt of $1,400 was raised or pledged by the people of this mission parish, and in addition $200 was spent for other necessary improvements. The basement of the church has been converted into a parish hall. In the neighboring mission church at Wellsburg a house near the church has been purchased for use as a parish house.

FOURTEEN CHURCHES HOLD INSPIRATIONAL CONFERENCE

Dr. Reiland's Criticism Answered by Dr. Robert Speer

"These men and women who say the Protestant churches cannot act together are wrong; we can act together and we have acted together since America entered the war," declared Robert E. Speer last week at an important inspirational conference held in the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church to launch the Interchurch Emergency Campaign of fourteen denominations to raise $10,000,000 for after-war work.

Dr. Speer's words were taken as an answer to the criticism of the "drive" made January 19 in St. George's Church by the Rev. Karl Reiland, the rector. Dr. Reiland described in advance the meeting of last week thus: "Not unity, but money, is the text; not coöperation, but contributions; not a getting together for the faith, but a getting together for the funds; not a great union of fourteen denominations in this great crisis going before us to go before the whole country with the sign of the cross, but to go out after the dollar sign."

John R. Mott, who was the last speaker, promised the coöperation of the Y. M. C. A. and the Y. W. C. A. in the campaign. He answered criticisms against the Y. M. C. A., saying that that organization was now sending to France two hundred of the most widely known clergymen in this country.

Other speakers were Bishop Reese, chairman of the Emergency Campaign, and Bishop Luther B. Wilson.

G. B. R. E. HOLDING ANNUAL MEETING IN NEW YORK

The annual meeting of the General Board of Religious Education is being held in New York as we go to press. January 28 was devoted to department meetings and the following days to the annual meeting of the board. On Thursday the board made their corporate Communion at Calvary Church at eight o'clock and the service was followed by breakfast at the National Arts Club. Matters of great importance came before the board, among them the report of the committee on theological education, consideration of the proposal of the Board of Missions and Social Service Commission to present a single budget to the Church, consideration of the plan to ask General Convention to appoint a national executive board to take charge of the work heretofore carried on by various boards and commissions, consideration of the National Student Council, and other matters of interest and importance.

CLERGYMAN DRIVES HOME IN WRONG AUTOMOBILE

NEWPORT, R. I.—The Rev. Stanley C. Hughes, rector of Trinity Church, drove his automobile to Washington Square one evening this week to make several calls. Having made them he got into an automobile and drove home. There he learned that this automobile was not his, although one of the same make. The owner of the machine meantime had notified the police that it was missing.

An exchange of automobiles closed the incident.

Tribute to Bishop Courtney

The following letter, signed "A. B. H.," appeared among the letters to the editor of the New York Evening Post:

The death of Bishop Frederick Courtney will bring deep sorrow to all those who were privileged to know him during his long and useful career. A simple, unaffected man of great piety, charitableness, tolerance, sincerity of purpose, eloquence of speech, and commanding ability, the passing of the Rt. Rev. Frederick Courtney is a distinct loss to the pulpits of two continents which he has adorned for more than two generations. Being a very devout man, he belonged to that old school of theology—now, more's the pity, fast disappearing—which has always looked askance at any and all attempts at sensationalism in any of its forms or ramifications in the house of God. In his firm and unyielding attitude in this regard he was the very embodiment of a vicar of Christ. And it is not too much to say that, now that his long, useful and exemplary life has ebbed away, it will be many a long day before we shall look upon his like again.

ARMISTICE DAY CELEBRATED ON THE MOUNT OF OLIVES

Bells in Kaiser's Church in Jerusalem Proclaim the News

The following account of events in Jerusalem during the month of November was written to friends in America by Joseph E. Spafford, an American missionary:

JERUSALEM, Nov. 26, 1918.—The eleventh of November is the greatest day that for ages it has been given to man to rejoice over. The news reached us after six in the evening. Immediately we thought we ought to show our joy and gratitude, so all the brothers went out in a captured wagon, with their brass instruments, which for four years have hung on the willows, to the headquarters of the Occupied Enemy Territory Administration to the Mount of Olives; there they serenaded the general and his administration. The men were wild with joy, they danced, they sang.

It had been previously arranged with some of the officers that if the armistice negotiations went through the most appropriate thing to do with those idle German bells was to have them sound forth the glad news and toll the overthrow of the Central cause of all this world calamity. These bells are in the new German church, "The Redeemer," very near the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, opened by the German Emperor a few years ago, when the hole in the wall was made, near the Jaffa gate, for him to enter the city. So to our joy out rang these bells, especially that one marked "Kaiser" and one marked "Prinz Eitel Fritz." Meanwhile the children lighted up a bon-fire of such things as we had, and a general gathering in the lower court sent up its heartfelt praise to God for his wonderful deliverance. The children collected all the bells they could find, school, camel, etc., and all the tins and made all the noise they could.

It will interest you to know that Mrs. Vester now runs an industrial school next to her house, where ninety girls are kept off the streets and taught needle lace, sewing, etc., besides having an hour each day of English and Arabic; besides being taught they are paid for the work that they can make. For a while also they were given their dinner.

In connection with this school there are two hundred women who carry away needle lace work to their homes and come once a week to get designs and pieces of work which, when complete, are paid for. Wages are very much higher than before. Their work is sold and the proceeds are turned over again for the industrial school to give the women work.

We are also running a small orphanage of thirty girls in the two last houses overlooking the Valley of Jehosaphat, near the northeast corner of the wall. The children are mostly those who have lost either one or two parents during the war and the servants such as have been widowed. The porter of the school had been condemned with two others to be hung. The hanging of the two was effected and the porter was prepared, just as the pardon came, too late for them, but just saving him. He has never recovered from the shock.

The new drive made among the Turks had this one disastrous effect, yet thereby we have been able in a manner to sympathize with you. It has not left a turkey for Thanksgiving this year. "Pigs is Turkeys!"

Our Weekly News Letters

NEW YORK

Church Club Meeting—The Church Club is planning a very interesting meeting for February 10 at the clubrooms. Dr. Percy Deamer, who expects to return to England about the middle of February, will speak on the Liturgy, and Dr. Slattery will discuss the new hymnal. T. Tertius Noble, organist of St. Thomas's Church, will illustrate the new music in the hymnal and for this purpose will bring several members of his choir to the meeting. The Church Club is inviting the clergy of the diocese as well as the members of the club.

Choir Back at Cathedral—Influenza disbanded the cathedral choir school temporarily, but last Tuesday the boys returned and the regular music has been resumed at the cathedral. Dr. Miles Farrow has been ill himself, but is now recovering and will soon be able to resume his duties.

The Churchwomen's Club—The annual business meeting of the Churchwomen's Club was held at the Church Club last week. Mrs. Richard Aldrich was re-elected president and Miss M. J. Hobart secretary. Mrs. Howard Robbins, Mrs. Vladimir Simkhovitch, Miss Edith Hadley and Mrs. J. G. Crosswell were elected vice-presidents. The club drew up plans for interesting work for the year. The membership of the club is increasing steadily.

Here and There—A service with procession of the guilds was held Sunday night at Calvary Church; Bishop Lloyd was the preacher. Bishop Sage will be the speaker at the next meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary, diocesan branch, at Zion and St. Timothy's parish house on February 4. The Rev. John F. Steen, D.D., will complete forty-nine years as rector of Ascension Memorial Church on Sunday, February 2. The Chapel of the Intercession has heard that another of its parishioners, Lieutenant William Stanley Miles has been cited for heroic conduct in action.

Bequests for the Church—Many charitable and religious bequests were contained in the will of Agnes Lathers. The testatrix, who died December 25, left an estate of $52,000, exclusive of her share in the estate of her father, Richard Lathers, in which she had a life interest. Among the beneficiaries were: Cathedral of St. John the Divine, $1,000; Cathedral of Peter and Paul, Washington, D. C., $1,000; Trinity Church of New Rochelle, $1,000; Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society, $5,000; Church Periodical Club, $2,000; the General Clergy Relief Fund, $3,000; Church Temperance Society, $2,000; St. Luke's Home for Aged Women, $1,000; Abby House Day Nursery, $5,000; Free Church Home for Incurables, $5,000, and St. Luke's Hospital, $5,000.

Colonial Dames at Grace Church—The Society of Colonial Dames held their second annual service at Grace Church on Sunday afternoon. Dr. Slattery preached, taking as his subject the life and work of Rose Elizabeth Cleveland.

Chaplain to Return—Calvary Parish is rejoicing in the expected homecoming of the Rev. Raymond Brown, one of the assistants, who has been serving in France again. His cable said: "No more mail, as a chaplain of Base Hospital No. 9. The rector has received word that Chaplain Brown will soon be back in the parish Home by March."

MARGARETTA MILLER.

BOSTON

Recognition of Poland in Religious Services—Governor Coolidge issued a proclamation calling upon the people of the commonwealth to observe Sunday, January 26, as "Polish Day," a suggestion which was widely followed.

Armenian Pageant—On the evening of January 19, at St. Luke's Church at Chelsea, the Rev. G. A. Barrow, Ph.D., rector, a pageant written by Newart Madenigian, one of the Armenian girls of the parish, was presented. Following the pageant, Mr. G. H. Papazian gave an historical address and made a strong appeal for the independence of Armenia.

Annual Report of Cathedral Services—Dean Rousmaniere gives some very interesting statistics in his annual report to the cathedral congregation.

Number of services: Sundays, 241; weekdays, 1,455; total, 1,696 (including 471 celebrations of the Holy Communion). Attendance: Sundays, 91,986; weekdays, 79,299; total, 171,285 (about 30,000 more than in 1917). The average Sunday attendance was 1,877; weekdays, 270.

The note of the services in 1918 was the endeavor to express and to guide the spirit and feeling of a nation at war, allied to the progressive nations of Europe. Distinguished visiting preachers spoke of the part taken in the war by their respective countries, Great Britain, France and Italy, and upon the conditions of Serbia and Belgium. The cathedral commemorated Bastille Day, the Fourth of July, Lafayette Day, Victory Sunday, etc. A series of sermons has been preached since the armistice on America's indebtedness to her Allies. We have kept in constant touch with our 152 men and women on the honor roll. One was killed in battle in France, three have died in camps in this country. One has been decorated with the Croix de Guerre by the French Government. Throughout the year the uniforms of both army and navy have been seen in good number at the cathedral services.

MISSISSIPPI

Annual Council—The ninety-second annual council of the diocese met at Jackson, in St. Andrew's Church, January 22. This was the first meeting of the council under the rule of a permanent place and expenses of the delegates to be provided by their respective parishes. In the absence of Bishop Bratton in France, the council was presided over by the Rev. J. Lundy Sykes, president of the Standing Committee.

As announced elsewhere in these columns, the Rev. William Mercer Green of Jackson was elected to be coadjutor bishop. This action was in the nature of a confirmation of Mr. Green's election last June, which election he declined on account of a repeated vote from one of the parishes.

The proposed Prayer Book changes as sent down by the last General Convention were ratified by the council unanimously. The council took up the matter of replacing the home of Bishop Bratton, destroyed by fire. Fifteen thousand dollars for this purpose was apportioned to the diocese, Mr. R. H. Purnell of Winona being chairman of this apportionment committee and the Rev.

J. H. Boosy the secretary. The committee began work before the council adjourned; it hopes in the immediate future to place an agent in the diocese to collect the apportionment so that the new home may be begun at once. At the same time, a building committee was appointed to make plans for the erection of the building.

The following officers were elected by the council: Secretary, the Rev. Albert Martin, Yazoo City; registrar, the Rev. Nowell Logan, D.D., Pass Christian; chancellor, Mr. A. M. Pepper, Lexington; treasurer, Mr. I. W. Richardson, Meridian; treasurer of diocesan missions, the Rev. W. S. Simpson-Atmore, S.T.D., Hattiesburg. Standing Committee, clerical; the Rev. J. Lundy Sykes, Laurel (president); the Rev. Albert Martin, Yazoo City (secretary); the Rev. L. W. Rose, Greenwood; the Rev. Chas. E. Woodson, Vicksburg, Lay; Marcellus Green, Jackson; R. H. Green, Jackson; Dr. Dunbar Rowland, Jackson; Mr. S. P. Gardiner, Laurel. Deputies to the General Convention, clerical; the Rev. J. Lundy Sykes, Laurel; the Rev. Albert Martin, Yazoo City; the Rev. G. Gordon Smeade, LL.D., Jackson; the Rev. Walter E. Dakin, Clarksdale, Lay; Mr. Marcellus Green, Jackson; Mr. A. M. Pepper, Lexington; Mr. P. S. Gardiner, Laurel; Mr. Frank H. Andrews, Vicksburg. Alternate Deputies, clerical; the Rev. H. H. Sneed; the Rev. E. S. Gunn; the Rev. R. E. Boykin; the Rev. Chas. E. Woodson, Lay; Dr. Dunbar Rowland; Mr. L. E. Davis; R. H. Purnell; I. W. Richardson. ALBERT MARTIN.

VIRGINIA

St. Philip's (Colored) Fifty-Fifth Anniversary—St. Philip's Church, Richmond, the Rev. R. A. Jackson, rector, celebrated its fifty-fifth anniversary on Sunday, January 19. The Rev. James S. Russell, D.D., of Southern Virginia, and principal of St. Paul's Normal and Industrial School, Lawrenceville, preached both in the morning and evening. In the afternoon he preached in Hope Chapel, South Richmond.

Apportionment Overpaid—This diocese has paid on its apportionment of $19,135 for 1918 to General Missions, $30,311, which is a 157 per cent payment on the amount apportioned.

Clericus Elections—The Richmond Clericus on January 13 re-elected the Rev. W. H. Burkhardt, rector of Grace Church, president, and expressed thanks to him for his faithful services during the past year. The Rev. F. E. Warren, rector of St. Thomas' Church, was elected secretary in succession to the Rev. J. Lewis Gibbs, who has gone to Staunton, Virginia.

Church School—In the parish house of Holy Trinity Church, Richmond, the Rev. Dr. J. J. Gravatt, rector, a Church School is being conducted every Thursday evening from eight to nine-thirty. Lectures on Church history are given by the Rev. Messrs. W. E. Cox and J. F. Ribble; on the history and contents of the Book of Common Prayer by the Rev. E. E. Osgood, and on Old Testament history by Mrs. E. E. Osgood. A course in Child Study is given by Mrs. Randolph Watkins; missions in the Bible by Miss Sarah Brooks, and the life of Christ by Miss Sallie Deane.

Notes—The Rev. Sewell S. Hepburn of Kennedyville, Maryland, who is now on a brief vacation, will preach on Sunday, January 26, in St. Paul's Church, Hanover, Virginia, where he was formerly rector for some years.

The Rev. J. H. Taylor, locum tenens at St. John's Church, Wilmington, North Carolina, has accepted a call to the Church of the Epiphany, Barton Heights, Richmond, Virginia, in succession to the Rev. G. Peyton Craighill, who has taken charge of St. James' Church, Leesburg. Mr. Taylor expects to take up his new work on March 1. FENTON WILLIAMSON.

WESTERN MICHIGAN

News of Bishop McCormick's Family—The sympathy of church people and all her friends goes out to Mrs. McCormick in the recent death of her father by accident. Mr. Tucker was a well-known citizen of Baltimore and a veteran of the Confederate Army. Augustine McCormick has been released from service in the Naval Reserve. Chaplain J. B. McCormick is with his regiment, the 15th Field Artillery, 2nd Division, now a part of the Army of Occupation in Germany.

Leaves Camp Custer—At Camp Custer Mr. C. J. S. Williamson, representative of the B. S. A., has ended his splendid services. The Ford car provided for him by the War Commission has been turned over to Chaplain Ziegler. The Church Club House, formerly the rectory of St. Thomas Church, was closed January 1, but the parish continues to extend hospitality to the men as opportunity serves. In December the bishop of the diocese confirmed two soldiers and a nurse at the base hospital. The great responsibility of this vast cantonment has been well met by the Church in the state and makes an honorable and interesting chapter in diocesan history.

Forty Persons Confirmed—At St. Luke's Church, Kalamazoo, a class of forty persons was presented for Confirmation recently by the curate, the Rev. Jas. H. Bishop, the rector returning from his war work just in time for the visitation. This makes nearly one hundred persons confirmed in this parish during the year. The Rev. B. F. P. Ivins, rector of St. Luke's, is the first of the diocesan chaplains to return.

Notable Memorial Service—A notable memorial service in honor of Col. Joseph B. Westledge, and other soldiers who died in the war, was held recently in the armory of the City of Kalamazoo. Col. Westledge commanded the 126th infantry, which included many troops from Western Michigan, and his fellow churchmen have been deeply interested in him, proud of his record and saddened by his death. Prayers were said at the service by the Rev. B. F. P. Ivins, rector. The addresses were made by Bishop McCormick and A. P. Johnson.

Receives Automobile—The rector of St. Thomas, Battle Creek, the Rev. W. J. Lockton, has been presented with an automobile by Miss E. R. Lundy, and a garage has been built by the vestry on the rectory ground.

Well-Known Churchwoman Dies—The death of Mrs. F. B. Eaglesfield of Niles removes one of the oldest and most faithful and respected workers of the diocesan branch of the Woman's Auxiliary. For many years and up to her death she has been diocesan treasurer and a powerful influence for good.

Another Church Boy Decorated—Peter Feringa, son of the Rev. Dr. J. H. Feringa, who has lately removed from this diocese to Racine College, is another of the Western Michigan Church soldier boys to be decorated. He is twenty-two years of age, serving with the 27th Division, and has been awarded the military medal for bravery in action. F. O. GRANNIS.

BALTIMORE

The Clericus—The January meeting of the clericus was of unusual interest. The speakers were the Rev. Dr. Dabovitch of the Orthodox Eastern Church, the Rev. Dr. Dyer, sometime chaplain of the Bellevue Hospital, New York, and the Rev. Dr. Charles P. Tinker, director of the New York City Missionary Society. Dr. Dabovitch spoke on behalf of the Serbian Church, in which he has labored for many years. Dr. Dyer's interesting address was upon the work and the privileges of a hospital chaplain, and it included advice about general visitation of the sick. Dr. Tinker aroused the interest of everyone present by his inspiring account of the vast extent, variety, and importance of the New York organization which he represents.

After the addresses and the luncheon, all the clergy united in adopting a resolution that at the coming convention of the Diocese of Maryland the need of a city mission for Baltimore be made plain. With this end in view a committee was appointed to arrange to have Dr. Tinker address the convention.

Work for Soldiers—At St. Paul's, Baltimore, there has been conducted a very remarkable work for the soldiers and sailors. A number of camps and hospitals, proving grounds, etc., pour out vast numbers of soldiers into Baltimore every week end. The rector of St. Paul's threw open the parish house on Saturday and Sunday afternoons to the men in the service. Music, magazines and papers, refreshments and, best of all, gracious and friendly hospitality, were furnished. The leading people in the congregation have both contributed to and participated in the privilege, and from a beginning of forty or fifty a week, the attendance has grown to from seven hundred to a thousand a week, and sometimes even more. In all, perhaps 22,000 men have been received, fed, befriended and made happy at this parish house.

A Legacy to St. Paul's Schools—Mrs. Florence Belknap Gilmour, who recently died in Paris, left the sum of $5,000 to be equally divided between St. Paul's School for Boys and St. Paul's School for Girls. These institutions are doing an excellent and important work, which will be greatly helped by this opportune gift.

WYLLYS REDE.

BETHLEHEM

Enthusiasm Growing—Since the entrance into his active work as rector of Trinity Church, Carbondale, the Rev. E. G. N. Holmes has called forth splendid responses from the congregation. The men have been gathered together and recently 100 met in a social and business session, promising renewed activity in the affairs of the Church. Plans are made for a men's Bible class. Mr. N. H. Hiller, president of the Carbondale Machine Company, lectured on "Principles of Refrigeration."

Archdeaconry Meets—The winter meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary of the archdeaconry of Scranton was held in Trinity Church, Carbondale, this week. The Rev. Franklin J. Clarke of the Board of Missions, and Bishop Talbot were the speakers at the evening meeting.

Lay-Reader Home—Lieutenant Louis Rocca, the son of the late Italian missionary of the Diocese of Bethlehem, the Rev. D. A. Rocca, has returned home and is now acting as lay-reader for Trinity Church, Easton. R. P. KREITLER.

ALBANY

An Enthusiastic Dinner—The Men's Club of St. Paul's Church, Albany, the Rev. Roeliff H. Brooks, rector, gave its annual dinner on Wednesday evening, January 22. Over 150 men were present. The bishop spoke and was followed by Judge Crane of the Court of Appeals, who gave a brilliant talk on "Unity in Reconstruction." He was followed by Mr. Jerome Davis, the Y. M. C. A. secretary who has had charge of that society's work in Russia. Patriotic songs were sung with great enthusiasm.

The Rev. H. A. S. Merrick, M.A., has been appointed canon of the Cathedral of All Saints, Albany. Canon Merrick is a graduate of Dublin University, taking the degree of B.A. with first honors and heading the list of "Respondents." A few years later he received the M.A. degree. He has been curate at the cathedral for some time. J. N. MARVIN.

NEW JERSEY

Convocation and Ordination—The regular meeting of the convocation of New Brunswick was held in Trinity Church, Red Bank, the Rev. Robert MacKellar, rector, on January 21. On account of a special feature of the day, there was little business transacted except discussion of the future plans and prospects of the convocation, and appointment of a committee to consider and report upon this matter.

Charles W. Nelson, a colored man, was made deacon, the bishop of the diocese officiating. The candidate was presented by Archdeacon Shepherd. The bishop delivered a personal charge in place of a sermon. Twenty-five priests were present and a large congregation.

Mr. Nelson is a student at the General Theological Seminary and will serve in St. Augustine's Mission in Elizabeth.

H. E. THOMPSON.

MISSOURI

A Fiftieth Anniversary—The Church of the Holy Communion has just celebrated its fiftieth anniversary. Bishop Tuttle preached a commemorative sermon on the morning of Sunday, January 19. On the morning of Sunday, January 26, the sermon was by Bishop James Wise of Kansas, a former rector of the church. Between these two Sundays, each day was designated for some special celebration in connection with choir or Sunday School or Auxiliary. On the afternoon of the Feast of the Conversion of St. Paul, the Junior Auxiliary gave a mystery play, The Light that Lighteneth the World. The Parish of the Holy Communion grew out of a Sunday School started by members of Trinity Parish and the first gatherings of the people were in a carpenter shop. The plant now consists of a beautiful stone church and chapel and parish house. There is an endowment of $72,000, known as the Robert Memorial Endowment Fund, in honor of the first rector, the Rev. Dr. P. G. Robert. The rector for the past two years is the Rev. John Boden.

Improvements at Rolla—Extensive improvements have recently been made at the church's plant at Christ Church, Rolla. The interior of the church has been refinished and decorated, the walls and ceiling paneled, the pews newly finished and a hard-wood floor laid in the chancel. The church has been thoroughly painted on the outside. All the expense was cared for by the St. Hilda's Guild. The basement has been enlarged, a new chimney built and a new furnace installed. The congregation are looking forward hopefully to a parish house some fine day. It is greatly needed. Rolla is the seat of the Missouri State School of Mines, and the Rev. H. Nelson Tragitt, rector of Christ Church, is very closely identified with the social and spiritual life of the students.

HARRINGTON ROGERS.

SOUTHERN VIRGINIA

Death of the Rev. J. R. Mathews—The Rev. John R. Mathews, rector of Preston Parish, Smyth Co., Virginia, died at Saltville, January 22, after a brief illness of pneumonia, following an attack of influenza. Mr. Mathews was born and reared in Manchester, England, and was an A.M. of Oxford University. He came to this country about thirty years ago and took up the mission work of the Church, holding mission services all over this and other states.

Last fall he took charge of Preston Parish, with residence at Saltville, where he has doubtless done the crowning work of his life. Soon after his arrival the influenza epidemic broke out and his work was great. He was busy every day and half the night, visiting every home he could possibly reach, ministering with peculiar tenderness and sympathy to the spiritual and material needs of the suffering. None ever speak of him but in words of praise.

Mr. Mathews was married to Miss Essie Collins of Columbus, Ohio, who survives him, with three sisters and one brother, one sister in Cleveland, Ohio, and the others in Manchester, England.

The funeral services were held at Saltville, January 24, by the Rev. G. Otis Mead, assisted by the Rev. J. W. C. Johnson, of Roanoke, and the Rev. F. N. Craighill, of Wytheville.

Epidemic at Boys' Home—The epidemic of influenza has swept through the Home for Boys at Covington, Virginia, where one hundred boys, members of the staff and helping force live. The superintendent handled the situation with wonderful skill and ability. With nearly every boy in bed, six of his force, his wife and two children in bed at one time, all come through without pneumonia or death. Dr. Ennion G. Williams of the State Board of Health sent a resident doctor, and three nurses were secured for the emergency. A splendid Lynchburg woman volunteered and took charge of the junior cottage.

Archdeacon Returns—The Rev. E. A. Rich has returned to his archdeaconry after a six months' stay at the army camps around Newport News.

Special mention is to be made of the work of Mr. Edward W. Hughes as lay reader during the absence of the archdeacon. There is great need for consecrated women to teach and money to support the work.

The church at Pocahontas recently suffered a great loss in the death of Mrs. John Black. Among her many good deeds, she took up a neglected boy, fifteen years old, who had never walked, and after two years—part of which time she kept him at the Orthopedic Hospital in Philadelphia—he is beginning to walk.

G. OTIS MEAD.

PITTSBURGH

Annual Meeting Woman's Auxiliary—The 38th annual meeting of the Pittsburgh branch of the Woman's Auxiliary took place at Calvary Church, Pittsburgh, January 21. The Bishop of Wyoming was the principal speaker. A buffet luncheon was served at noon in the parish house, and at its close Bishop Thomas addressed the Junior leaders, and spoke a second time to the Auxiliary women assembled for their annual business meeting. The roll call showed a very widely-representative and unusually large attendance, and the meeting throughout was characterized by much enthusiasm. The president, Mrs. Marcellin C. Adams read a letter of greeting from Bishop Whitehead, sent from Atlantic City, where he is making good progress toward recovery, expressing his regret at his absence, congratulating the Auxiliary on the work accomplished in 1918, and sending his best wishes for the undertakings of the current year.

The report of the treasurer showed that the value of the work for the past year aggregated $9,500. In addition to this $1,650 has been contributed to the united offering. For the year 1919 the special work of the branch will be the raising of $4,000 with which to erect a house for Dr. Mary James, of Wuchang, China.

Clerical Union—The January meeting of the Clerical Union took place at the church rooms, on January 20. The paper for the occasion was read by the Rev. Floyd W. Tomkins, Jr., rector of All Saints' Church, who had for his subject, "The Relation of the Clergy to the Services of the Church." This was followed by a very lively discussion of the subject.

JANE CUDDY.

NEWARK

Diocese Exceeded Its Missionary Apportionment—The Diocese of Newark has paid in full its apportionment of $54,165 for general missions, for the fourteen months ending January 1, and went beyond what was asked to the extent of about $1,000.

Bishop Stearly on Speaking Tour—Bishop Stearly is spending the week, at the earnest request of the War Commission, giving addresses in the Middle West in the interest of the general war work of the Churches. Among the cities visited have been Cleveland, Chicago and Minneapolis.

Archdeacon Tyler Home from France—Archdeacon Barrett P. Tyler, formerly rector of the Church of the Redeemer, Morristown, who has been serving as a United States chaplain in France where he was dangerously wounded, has returned home and while still under medical care, hopes in due time to take full church work again. The eight other commissioned United States chaplains from the diocese are still in France on duty, as are also several clergymen in Y. M. C. A. and Red Cross work.

Care Given More Than 5,000 Enlisted Men—St. Paul's Church, Newark, of which the Rev. F. A. Coleman of South Norwalk, Conn., is the rector-elect, has now cared for more than 5,000 soldiers and sailors in its parish house, giving them lodging and breakfast. Others besides the parishioners have helped support this work.

Dates Announced for Archdeaconry Meetings—The four archdeaconry meetings of the winter will be held as follows: February 3, Grace Church, Orange; February 4, Church of the Holy Communion, Paterson; February 10, Grace Church, Madison; and February 11, St. John's Church, Jersey City. The Paterson and Jersey City meetings will comprise afternoon and evening sessions, while the others will be held in the morning and afternoon. The Newark archdeaconry will consider in the morning the subject, "Prayer, Teaching the People to Pray, How to Pray," and in the afternoon, "How to Induce People to Read Substantial Books for Instruction Concerning Religion, the Church and the Bible." The sessions will be open to the public.

GRACE MCKINNEY.

TEXAS

Meeting of Convocation—The seventieth annual council of the diocese of Texas met in Christ Church, Tyler, January 15-16.

The question of the representation of women in the council was voted upon favorably, but was finally lost because the two-thirds vote of the council was necessary and so many delegates had left, that it was impossible to secure the vote. It will come up for action at the next council and it will probably pass.

The council voted to divide this province and change its boundary lines in accordance with the needs of greater efficiency. The Rev. Hugh B. McJamison, of Bryan, was elected secretary. One new member was elected to the standing committee, the Rev. Charles Clingman, rector of Trinity Church, Houston. Examining chaplains elected were the Rev. Peter Grey Sears, of Houston, the Rev. Moylan Bird, of Brenham, and the Rev. Joseph Carden, of Taylor. The clerical deputies elected to the General Convention were the Rev. George Sargent, of Marshall; the Rev. Charles Clingman, of Houston; the Rev. W. P. Witsell, of Waco, and the Rev. Moylan S. Bird, of Brenham.

In the evening of the first day Mr. Walter McPherson, traveling secretary of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, made an address on war work in the cantonment and the "Advance Progress" of the church, setting forth the claims of the Brotherhood and the Church on men for definite consecration and service. On the last evening of the council an informal missionary meeting was held.

The ladies of the church extended the most beautiful hospitality in the way of spreading in the parish house two delightful luncheons, which all thoroughly appreciated. This gracious hospitality was extended to practically all the delegates in the charming homes of the Tyler people.

JOSHUA B. WHALING.

SOUTH DAKOTA

New Church Consecrated—The new St. James Church at Mobridge was consecrated on Sunday, January 12, by Bishop Burleson. Archdeacon Ashley of the Niobrara, was present and assisted, as did also the missionary-in-charge, the Rev. Harvey Kerstetter. There were three confirmations at the same service. The church is a new type of building for South Dakota, combining the features of a church and a parish house. Underneath the church is a full basement. It is well located, near the high school building, with land enough to build a rectory at a later time, for which plans have already been drawn. Mobridge is the most important town in northwestern South Dakota. It has an assured future, as it is at the crossing of the Missouri River and the main transcontinental line of the Milwaukee Railroad.

Bishop Remington's Arrival—Word has been received of the arrival of Suffragan Bishop Remington in New York City. The district is looking forward anxiously to his arrival in South Dakota for work, which will probably be some time before March 1.

Clergy Conference—A conference of the clergy of the central deanery was held in Huron on January 14. There were discussions in regard to the particular problems of the deanery. In the evening the men of Grace Church parish prepared, served and ate a supper, after which addresses were made by the bishop and visiting clergy. One of the subjects discussed was the price of the new hymnal. It had been expected that this book would be published at a price as to make it possible to have copies in the pews for the congregation as well as for the choir. It was a cause of deep disappointment that the price was so high, and the secretary was requested to find out if there would not be perhaps at some time in the very near future a possibility of securing the hymnals at a smaller cost.

Dean Woodruff has started at the cathedral in Sioux Falls a Men's Religious Study Class for discussion of topics of vital Church interest. The first subject considered by the men was "Why Pray?"

PAUL ROBERTS.

ARIZONA

The Santa Claus of Today—In the long ago when some of us grown-ups were children, the Christmas dream of days and weeks and months was of a real snow-covered Santa who would bring to stocking and tree many a gift and good things without stint. It is a different vision which is being slowly brought to the children of to-day. They themselves are to be Santa Claus to those less fortunate than they. The Sunday School provides its tree as of yore, and perhaps its gleams of light; but the gifts for the tree are brought by the tens or the hundreds of little children to provide a Christmas for those needier than they.

The children of the Sunday School of Grace Church, Tucson, have kept their Christmas in some such fashion, for several years. This year they kept it or rather the New Year, in an especially beautiful way, through the simplifying of a little play got out by the Board of Missions, The Good Samaritan. Following the older custom of miracle or mystery play, they acted this out in dumb-show fashion, in the church itself; the children, as the Bible story was slowly read, representing the man set upon by thieves who bound and gagged him, the priest and Levite entering, beholding and passing by on the other side, and finally the Good Samaritan with his bringing of loving aid to the unfortunate one. The singing of Christmas carol or hymn before and after suggested the typifying of this story of the Christmas spirit.

The Plea of Armenia—Armenia and Syria represented by two young girls, entered last and from the chancel steps made plea for the thousands starving in both lands, holding before them baskets towards which the children marched, leaving as they dropped in them their gifts, a beginning of the season's lesson of "giving" rather than "receiving."

Santa Claus Brings a Ford—There was another Santa abroad in the same parish that week. A half-idle promise had been made some months before by a lady of means and also of generosity, one out of our communion, that were the blessing of peace to be restored before the ending of the year, she would give Grace Church's minister a Ford automobile. The blessing came and she was true to her promise. One day the Ford appeared at the rector's door with a really wonderful expression of appreciation; and with the possibility of rendering service along the Church's lines, to those in scattered settlements, and communicants on lonely ranches.

LAURA F. M. DIXON.

ALASKA

St. Timothy's Mission, Tanana Crossing—Mr. Drane writes: "We suffer a great loss in losing Mr. McIntosh. He was a wonder, but he is gone now, and Jack Singleton is left in charge as caretaker (Note: Mr. Singleton is a white man who has operated a ranch, trapped and prospected about the Crossing for many years). He is willing to teach and doctor, but the work will suffer and we will lose the people unless we can get a mission worker for next summer. The new buildings are finished so we may count on having the best mission building in this whole valley, and certainly one of the best in the interior for the missionaries to move into when they come. We need a competent nurse, and an adaptable woman to serve as matron and teacher. To allow the mission to remain closed another year would in my mind be its death knell, and yet the financial difficulties attendant upon keeping this mission open are great. But we have it there, and I do not wish to see it abandoned."

GUY H. MADARA.

OHIO

Important Foreign Work—In many places in Ohio the Church is opening up a work of particular interest to foreign-speaking populations. Among these is a work which is being done at Youngstown under the direction of Bishop DuMoulin and the Rev. Orestes Salcini with the Italians. The congregation numbers about 250 communicants, who a number of years ago belonged to the Roman Catholic Church. They afterwards affiliated with the Old Catholics, and a year and a half ago applied for admission to our branch of the Church. The whole congregation has been formally received by Bishop DuMoulin, and the property has been transferred to the Church.

Gifts to St. Andrew's, Elyria—On the first Sunday after Epiphany there was dedicated in St. Andrew's Church, the Rev. E. B. Redhead, rector, a handsome litany desk, with book. These gifts were presented by Mrs. Edward E. Gaudern, in memory of her husband. Mr. Gaudern was one of the oldest members of the parish.

Bexley Hall—The work at Bexley Hall, Gambier, began its Easter term on the Festival of the Epiphany, with fourteen students. One or two more students are expected. The Rev. Walter F. Whitman, a graduate of Bexley, has entered upon his duties as adjunct professor, and is instructing classes in polity, ecclesiastical law and Greek. The Rev. W. L. Bevan, Ph.D., has been elected professor of ecclesiastical history, and will begin his duties in September. Dr. Bevan has been professor of history at the Sewanee Divinity School, and is the author of a number of books of note.

Work at Bucyrus—Under the able leadership of the Rev. R. H. F. Gairdner the work at this important mission has become splendidly vitalized. At a recent visitation of Bishop DuMoulin fourteen candidates were confirmed. Mr. Gairdner has charge of the Trinity Mission at Upper Sandusky, and has added a new interest to it.

The Cleveland Clericus—At the February meeting Mr. Sherman Kingsley, the financial secretary of the Welfare Federation of Cleveland, made an address, emphasizing the ways in which the Church can assist in the work of reconstruction and readjustment. This federation in Cleveland brings together eighty-five philanthropic and kindred organizations, and now at the close of the war they find their work more important than ever, and are endeavoring to enlist the greater interests of the churches. Their work is materially helped by the fact that in Cleveland we have a Federation of Churches, as well as one for charity.

GERARD F. PATTERSON.

BUFFALO

The Regester Memorial—In memory of the late Rev. Jacob Asbury Regester, S.T.D., the people of St. Paul's parish have placed a massive canopy of carved oak over the pulpit, where he preached the Gospel for nearly a quarter of a century. The canopy is noteworthy for its simplicity and dignity and richness. It is of Gothic design and corresponds well with the canopies surmounting the bishop's chair and the choir stalls. It was designed by F. de Lancey Robinson of New York City, and executed by William F. Ross & Company of East Cambridge, Massachusetts. The carved work was done, under the direction of Ross & Company, by Kirchmeyer, who is said to be the only Oberammergau wood-carver now in this country.

Every Member Canvass in Trinity—Last November an every member canvass was made of Trinity parish with gratifying results. The following data are interesting:

Number of men taking part.....	75
Number of calls made.....	437
Number of new pledges.....	262
Total number of pledges at present...	504

Increase in amount above estimate, $15,475, or 151 per cent. Total expected from pledges $25,675. When a thing always works isn't it odd how few parishes—comparatively—will try that thing?

Annual Meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese—Because of the influenza epidemic and quarantine in November this meeting had to be adjourned to January. It was held in the Church of the Good Shepherd, Buffalo, on January 15 and 16, and while much regret was felt at the absence of several officers because of illness, the sessions were excellent. Mrs. Nicholas presided on the Senior day and—in the absence of Miss Arnold—Miss Esther Smith presided over the sessions of the Juniors. All the old officers were unanimously re-elected to serve another year.

The reports were most heartening. We went "over the top" on pledged work, and on our war emergency fund of $1,000. The latter project was proposed by Mrs. Nicholas at the June meeting as a means of helping our missionaries during these hard days of high priced necessities and high rates of exchange, and we are glad to learn that other dioceses followed us.

Bishop Sage made a warm place for himself in the hearts of our women—and also inroads upon their purses—when he described to us the work in Kansas. A new pledge of $200 was made for his work and the three offerings were also devoted to the fund for work in the District of Salina.

A reception in honor of Bishop Sage and the officers was given by Mrs. Walker, on Wednesday afternoon, and proved a charming opportunity of meeting the out of town members of the Auxiliary.

Death of Mrs. George T. Ballachey—Heartfelt sympathy is felt for Mr. Ballachey, one of our most active lay church workers in Buffalo, in his sorrow. Mrs. Ballachey died very suddenly of pneumonia, following influenza, leaving a son and daughter. ELIZABETH A. LAWRENCE.

DETROIT

Over the Top—The 150 men at the last Michigan Church Club dinner sang the doxology when it was reported that the diocese had gone "Over the Top" in its missionary apportionment to the extent of some seven hundred odd dollars.

New Brotherhood Secretary—Mr. John Alexander of Detroit, who is the president of the Detroit Young Peoples' Society and has a host of friends here, has just been appointed a traveling secretary for the Brotherhood of St. Andrew.

SACRAMENTO

Safe Arrival—A cablegram from the Rev. W. H. Hermitage, rector of St. Paul's Church, Sacramento, who is in the service abroad of the Y. M. C. A., announces his arrival in England after a long, stormy passage occupying fifteen days.

The Advent Call in the Diocese—The carrying out of the Advent Call was seriously hindered in Savannah by the epidemic, which brought the closing of the churches and all gatherings of people. At a recent meeting of the clericus it was proposed to bring it again before the women as a Lenten work.

A Chaplain's Warning—In the letter of a chaplain in one of our great camps there is a possible word of warning. He says: "The overseas men are coming in upon us in hordes. They look strangely foreign yet hate Europe, and have but one idea very creditable in their hearts—they want to go home. Many are spoiled by too much attention and an appreciable number have a very bad idea of having earned a free ticket for life. Time and necessity must cure most of them."

Death of Mrs. S. J. Littel—After an illness of influenza and pneumonia, Mrs. Gertrude Wilson Littel, wife of Rev. S. J. Littel, D.D., rector of St. James, West Hartford, died at the rectory on the morning of January 6. This bereavement comes with particular sadness, following as it does so soon after the arrival of Dr. Littel to take up his work in Hartford. The suddenness which marked Mrs. Littel's death brought a great shock to the parish and to the many connections and friends of the family throughout the country.

The burial was from the church on Tuesday morning and the burial service, together with the Holy Communion, were said in the church at 11 o'clock. Bishop Brewster was the celebrant and also took the committal. The Rev. James H. Bradin and the Rev. S. R. Colladay assisted the bishop. The interment was in Fairlawn cemetery, West Hartford.

Mrs. Littel before her marriage was Gertrude Wilson. She was educated in Miss Porter's school, Farmington, and was married to Dr. Littel in 1900. Dr. and Mrs. Littel were in Brockport, New York, for six years, and after that were twelve years in Keene, New Hampshire. They came to Hartford last autumn. Mrs. Littel leaves six children—Thomas Gardiner Littel, age sixteen, who is at Kent School; Margaret, who is at Halsted School; Gertrude; Walter Wilson; Helen; and Jean Morse, who is six months old. Helen is at present recovering from pneumonia, which she contracted while her mother was ill.

MICHIGAN CITY

Vacancy Filled—The vacancy at Indiana Harbor caused by the death of the Rev. B. F. Bachman has been filled by the Rev. L. E. Morris, who has entered upon his duties. The people of St. Albans gave a reception on Tuesday evening, January 22, in honor of their new rector.

Helps at the Peace Conference—The boys of Howe School resumed their work January 6. The fellows are all very proud to have one of their graduates at the Peace Conference. William Kenyon, '11, has won a place as a stenographer.

Epiphany Parties—In the Woman's Auxiliary several branches had Epiphany parties. The women of Marion, Elkhart and South Bend enjoyed interesting missionary programs at their parties, and a large number of women were present in each place. The element of mystery attached to the Epiphany parties lends them popularity. At the close of the program each parish had its Epiphany cake, containing a gold ring baked in it. With lighted candles the cake received due honor. In Elkhart each woman made a wish for the Church at home or abroad, then all standing in a circle and clasping hands, the candles were blown out. The cutting, serving of the cake and discovery of who got the ring afforded much merriment. The lady fortunate enough to find the ring in her portion of cake acclaimed herself hostess for the Epiphany party of next year.

Receives $1,000—St. James Church, South Bend, has recently received $1,000 from the estate of Mrs. Byron A. Birdsell.

LEXINGTON

Victory Thanksgiving Service—A very beautiful service of praise and thanksgiving for God's mercies in connection with the recent war, took place at St. Andrew's Church, Lexington, on December 29. Owing to the fact that the church was closed because of the influenza epidemic, this service could not be held before. It was very well attended and many of the ministers of the city were present and took part.

The address was delivered by Dr. Robert Mitchell of the Baptist Church. He spoke of the gratitude we owe to Almighty God for national life, for its preservation and continuance, and above all for the restoration of peace.

The form of service used was that prepared by the Rt. Rev. Lewis W. Burton, bishop of the diocese, and used at the cathedral on the preceding Sunday.

LONG ISLAND

Seventieth Anniversary—The seventieth anniversary of Calvary Church, Brooklyn, of which the Rev. J. Williams is rector, was celebrated with special services on Thursday, January 23, and also on the following Sunday.

The church was started in the village of Williamsburg, January 23, 1849.

The speakers at the services were Mr. J. T. Bladen, the Rev. Mr. Melish, Dr. Alsop, Archdeacon Webb, Dr. Jones and Dr. Reiland.

"The New Day"—A most interesting missionary meeting was held recently at the Church of the Good Shepherd, Brooklyn. On invitation, representatives from six of the neighboring parishes were present to listen to Deaconess Goodwin, of the staff at the Church Missions House, New York, who spoke on "Woman's Work in the Church in This New Day."

She showed that a time has come when we are going to be shaken out of our provincialism, and that it is a time of terrible responsibility. She asked why young women who have done reconstruction work in France cannot now begin to do it in China and Japan.

Russia—Albert Rhys Williams, correspondent of the N. Y. Evening Post in Russia, and author of In the Claws of the German Eagle, was the speaker at a recent evening service at the Church of the Holy Trinity, Brooklyn.

He said that we and all nations should evacuate Russia. He spoke well of the Soviet Government, in the sense that it pleases the people, that is, about 85 per cent of them, not of course the upper class. Mr. Melish spoke on this subject also. There was special Russian music.

PHILADELPHIA

Church Club Dinner—The annual dinner of the Church Club of the diocese was held at the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel on Wednesday, January 15. A great number of the clergy and laymen were present: there was much enthusiasm and interest manifest. Songs were sung with more zest than usual, horns helping to key up the voices. The speakers of the evening were Bishop McCormick, of Western Michigan, and the Rev. Samuel B. Booth.

Gospel Crews—Groups of young women will go out from the Inasmuch Mission to conduct services in city churches, according to the plans of the newly organized Woman's Club of the mission. Mrs. Long, wife of the evangelist, has already had a call for this work from one of the churches in North Philadelphia. She says: "We cannot preach, but we can engage in visiting, singing and in personal work."

Lesson Board Officers—Bishop Talbot was elected president; Mr. George W. Jacobs, vice-president; Dr. Caley, treasurer; Dr. Mitman and the Rev. J. R. Huggins, secretaries of the Joint Diocesan Board of S. S. lessons at a recent meeting held in the Church House.

Sunday School Superintendents' Meeting—The tenth meeting of the Sunday School superintendents of the diocese met at the Church of the Resurrection Thursday, January 23.

After the supper the Rev. Mr. Stowell urged and explained the Every Member Campaign, of which he is the capable executive secretary for the diocese.

Church Training and Deaconess House—A conference and tea was held by invitation of Miss Coles, at her home, on January 17. The board of council, the managers, and members of the faculty met at that time to consider three practical questions connected with the Church Training and Deaconess House.

1. Whether to add, to the present two years of teaching and training, a third year for such students as might be disposed and able to take a post-graduate course of specialized instruction and work. This was recommended to a committee of the faculty.

2. It was recommended, and referred to the board of managers, that rectors of parishes be requested to make known to their congregations and schools the opportunities offered to young women to prepare for Church work; also that rectors be asked to send annual offerings from their parishes for the support and extension of the work.

3. In considering greater publicity, the conclusion was reached that graduates of the House, now in many dioceses and in all parts of the mission field, are the best representatives and agents to make known the efficiency and usefulness of the Training House.

Germantown Convocation—The Rev. Dean Le Roy was the preacher at the service which opened the session of convocation at St. Luke's Church, Germantown, January 21.

At the luncheon to delegates the rector, Dr. Upjohn, paid a moving tribute to Dean Le Roy's eighteen years of service. Other speakers were the dean, and Rev. Dr. Perry, his predecessor, who was the first dean of the convocation.

Dean Le Roy expressed a desire to give over the work to some other; but upon unanimous election, was moved to accept the office again, at least for a time. Reports of the mission work were made by Rev. Mr. Long, and a lay reader (Mr. Myers), who has been caring for the people in two stations. The Rev. Mr. Pember and the Rev. Mr. Wood made addresses on the Every Member Campaign to the clerical and lay delegates and the members of the Woman's Aid.

Divinity School Alumni Dinner—Dr. Dearmer made an appeal for the Church in England and America to use influence to prevent any estrangement between the two nations,—this at the Philadelphia Divinity School Alumni dinner at the Church House on Tuesday, the 21st. Bishop Talbot at the same time made an appeal to the hundred clergyment to be more open-minded toward church unity. Dean Bartlett told of the plan for a summer school of theology, to be shared and taught by men from twelve Episcopal seminaries, at Berkeley School during July, August and September.

MILWAUKEE

Council Meeting—The Council of the Diocese of Milwaukee assembled in All Saints' Cathedral Guild Hall, Milwaukee, on January 14 and 15. Elections resulted as follows:

Treasurer: J. H. Daggett; registrar: The Rev. W. H. Stone; standing committee: Clerical—The Rev. Messrs. E. R. Williams, A. H. Lord, H. Whitmore and H. B. St. George, D.D.; lay—W. F. Myers, H. N. Laffin, G. E. Copeland, and J. S. Hyde.

Delegates to General Convention: Clerical—The Rev. H. B. St. George, D.D., the Rev. Messrs. E. R. Williams, C. N. Lathrop, and A. H. Lord; lay—Messrs. F. C. Morehouse, H. N. Laffin, S. G. Moon, and G. E. Copeland.

Delegates to Provincial Synod: Clerical—The Very Rev. E. A. Larrabee, D.D., the Very Rev. C. N. Lathrop, the Rev. Messrs. F. L. Maryon, and A. H. Lord; lay—Messrs. W. J. Morgan, S. G. Moon, I. L. Nicholson, and James Cavanagh.

By amendment to the canons the annual meeting of the council was fixed for the Tuesday after the second Sunday in January.

A resolution was passed to the effect that the committee on canons be instructed to present canons at the next meeting to constitute a House of Churchwomen.

A resolution was passed to the effect that the allotment for church extension be increased from approximately $6,000 to $7,500 per annum, and that provision be made for the effective gathering of this amount.

Christmas and the President—London had gone mad over Christmas, there was such an orgy of gift buying as one remembers in New York: the weather was clear and frosty, the clergy counted up their communicants and noted that the tide had turned, preachers had a grateful task in dilating on a "real Peace Christmas"—and then suddenly the Christmas note ceased to be heard, drowned in the roar of cheers which greeted President Wilson. The newspapers took holiday for a couple of days, and when they appeared again the familiar heading, "Christmas in the Churches," was too stale to appear: it was more to the point to detail the President's words and movements. So I cannot give any account of the Christmas messages.

Days of Remembrance and Thanksgiving—The last Sunday of the year and the first of the New Year have been marked off by recommendation of the archbishops to be observed as a day of remembrance for departed soldiers and sailors, and for thanksgiving for the blessings of 1918. Both duties have already been discharged in many parishes, but not yet simultaneously. An attempt is to be made to make January 5 a really worthy thanksgiving day, and the Bishop of London is especially urging that it should be a congregational thanksgiving: it should be one in which every worshiper can take part. We have time to arrange things better on this occasion than we were able to do in the hurried arrangements of the armistice celebrations.

Welcoming the Men Home—More than one bishop is writing his advice to his clergy as to how we should welcome the returning fighting men. They will not come in a mass, but in frequent dribbles, which increases the difficulties of an organized welcome, and yet gives greater opportunities for pastoral work. It is suggested that in each parish there should be a body of men, chosen from the different streets of the parish, whose business it should be to report arrivals. That is the Bishop of London's idea. In his New Year message he urges that the welcome should be that of dear brothers whom we have learnt to love and honor, we are not "to pile them up in the church as a sort of war trophy," as one of the chaplains put it. Many of them will be looking at the clergy with much more friendly eyes, after having seen their willingness to "go over the top" with them. And then as regards services, we are bidden to recast in our minds our arrangements: are they held at convenient times? Are they suitable in character to win the men and women whom we hope to influence? Everything, the bishop reminds us, depends on this first year of peace. If we do not avail ourselves of it, we shall have lost our chance.

Christianity and Industrial Problems—How many times, I wonder, have our church councils discussed the problems of industry? A careful study of the Church Congress reports would show that we have been talking about them for years, with no result. Industry is not listening to us, it thinks we do not know what we are talking about. And the Guardian is saying much the same thing in its criticism of the latest report, that of the committee of inquiry appointed by the archbishops. It is the last of the series of committees to report, and so the immediate work of the National Mission of 1916 is rounded off. Now this report is all right on the doctrinal side. The New Testament ideal of service rather than self-seeking is expounded in eloquent language. But that ideal has to measure itself with the actual practise of the industrial world, and it is in this matter that the Guardian seems to doubt whether it will be of much practical value. People do judge reports more by the standing of the committee which issues them than by the wisdom of the things said. This committee is one of great learning, but of little authority. Its conclusions would have been more respected if it had included some actual "captains of industry" in its number. But perhaps it would reply to the Guardian's strictures by saying that it had issued a Christian report, and that it was now the turn of the business men to meet, and say how far they can adopt it.

The Collectivist Position—Charles Kingsley once said that there was one thing of which he felt assured—that competition was wrong, and cooperation right. Practically the committee have taken up this position. But the individualists are not dead, and the Guardian is inclined to defend them. It slyly suggests that one man at fifty is a bishop, and another at the same age a curate because the bishop "has competed successfully." Competition, it holds, is on the whole beneficent. "Less than valueless, because actually mischievous, is any proposal which would discourage reasonable ambition, and make men contented with a mediocre lot."

Retirement of Dr. Varley Roberts—Our famous organists hold on as long as they can. There have been a few cases in which, like certain dignitaries and many clergy, they have held on too long. Till recently there were three outstanding musicians of the older generation whose retirement was not called for, Sir Frederick Bridge of Westminster, Dr. Varley Roberts of Magdalen, Oxford, and Sir Walter Parratt of Windsor. The first has gone into retirement, the second is going, and the third is shortening sail, giving up some of his London work, so that he may hold on to his main job as long as possible.

Every lover of church music—and you probably sing much of his work in your churches—must feel a pang of regret that Dr. Roberts's active days are over. He found a fine tradition at Magdalen, where he succeeded that other Yorkshireman, Dr. Parratt, and he more than kept up the tradition. American visitors to Oxford used to go to Magdalen to hear what is perhaps the most finished choir in England. But there are younger men coming on, and no doubt the Magdalen tradition is safe. There was one break in it, however: the famous carol service on Christmas eve, which Dr. Roberts had managed to keep up through the war, had to be given up. But it will surely be resumed next Christmas.

INFORMATION WANTED

The Navy Department at Washington is endeavoring to find the nearest living relative of the Hon. Samuel Lewis Southard, whose son, the Rev. Samuel Lewis Southard, Jr., was a clergyman of the Episcopal Church who died in 1859. Any information which may be available concerning the matter should be sent to the superintendent of the Naval Records and Library, Navy Department, Washington, D. C.

The Open Forum

Intinction

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

The administration of the chalice is to most of us a delicate question for public discussion. Yet, it is inevitable, like this question of free pews. May I be allowed to state a bit of my own personal experience in the matter? For a year, I have on occasion received the Sacrament at Grace Church, Providence, Rhode Island, one of the leading churches in that diocese and probably in New England. The method of intinction is used as advocated by the Bishop of Massachusetts. To my own soul, it is a most comforting method of receiving the Sacrament and as the wafer dipped into the chalice is laid in the palm of my hand and its slightly moist touch is felt, I am moved to think of the wound on the palm of the Lord's own hand in the great Sacrifice of the Cross. And as this service is conducted at Grace Church by the present clergy, this method is most dignified and reverent. And in St. Luke's account of the Institution, we read: "Take this and divide it among yourselves." Luke 22: 17.

For two years past, I have administered the Communion by intinction in a mission work among the deaf mute people of New England, and, so far as I know, these humble Christians experience the same comfort and satisfaction that I myself experience at Grace Church.

My own physician, a churchman and a vestryman, is emphatically in favor of the method of intinction, though his own rector has not yet adopted it. Surely, in time our Church will administer the Sacrament by intinction.

The Lectionary

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

Having spent much time for several years, some time ago, in constructing and elaborating a lectionary primarily for my own use, I have some data which may or may not be of value. The result of my labor is a manuscript of nearly 200 pages. It arranges the entire Bible into daily portions of fairly even length, and besides outlining each daily portion, indicates select readings and choice texts contained in it.

This series of selections aims to include everything that can be of ordinary value, and as a matter of fact contains much that would be rather arid to many readers. It comprises, besides 129 selections from the Psalms, 1037 passages from the remaining books. Judging by the number, and also by observation of the character of some of the passages assigned in the new lectionary, I think the selections must have been made on much the same principle. I might add that my own are indexed for ready reference.

As this system of selections was too exhaustive—and exhausting—to be of the greatest use outside of ready reference or very careful study, and was moreover lacking in topical order, I compiled another list of selections of the most edifying character, arranged in monthly series, each series being upon a single topic, or combination of topics, or from common or related sources. These series include "Beginnings: Early History of Israel," "History of Israel in Canaan," "Law of Moses," "Wisdom Literature," "Hebrew Poetry," selections from the prophets, "Life of Christ," "Miracles and Parables," "Teachings of Christ and Prophetic Utterances,"

"Founding of the Church: Rules of Order," "Teachings of Christianity," and "The Christian Life." These comprise, besides seventy-six selections from the Psalms, 195 passages from the Old Testament and 225 from the New Testament, total 420.

This latter method of selecting seems to me the best for general public use. I believe that these selections contain the substance of Scripture teaching and of the literary beauties of the Bible. If this number of Old Testament passages were subdivided and extended somewhat, it would provide an excellent selection for each day of one year. If the New Testament passages were checked up with the epistles and gospels contained in the Prayer Book so as to avoid too frequent repetition of the same material, doubtless the remainder could be subdivided, enriched, and so arranged as to be given in the course of one year, with sufficient repetition. This might make it possible always to avoid such scantiness as is exemplified on the Sunday after Christmas just past, when the second evening lesson contained only seven verses, and these a mere summary of the story told in the first lesson.

It does seem to me, however, that there would be a great advantage in arranging the lessons by weeks, after the manner of the lessons for Sundays, and the collects, epistles, and gospels. This is absolutely necessary if there is to be a constant relation between the season and the lessons, owing to the movable feasts. The other features of the calendar would be missed in this connection, but could be otherwise supplied, and the gain would be greater than the loss.

Certainly the freedom granted in connection with the new lectionary is very proper but quite sufficient, in a Church that feels itself responsible for guaranteeing a well-rounded system of worship and instruction.

Appropriation or Confiscation?

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

Dean Bell, in his reply to Mr. Jessup, in your issue of January 18, says: "It" (the program of the British Labor Party) "nowhere advocates the confiscation of all accumulation of wealth, or anything of that sort."

Quoting from the Labor platform as given in the December issue of Sea Power, I find the following:

For the raising of the greater part of the revenue now required the Labor Party looks to the direct taxation of the incomes above the necessary cost of family maintenance; and, for the requisite effort to pay off the national debt, to direct taxation of private fortunes both during life and at death. This would involve the raising of the present unduly low minimum income assessable to the tax, and a new scale of graduation, rising from a penny in the pound (i.e., less than a half of one per cent) on the smallest assessable income up to sixteen or even nineteen shillings in the pound (i.e., eighty or even ninety-five per cent) on the highest income of the millionaires.

Again:

The death duties ought to be regraduated, and greatly increased. In this matter we need, in fact, completely to reverse our point of view, and to rearrange the whole taxation of inheritance from the standpoint of asking what is the maximum amount that any rich man should be permitted at death to divert, by his will, from the national exchequer, which should normally be the heir of all private riches in excess of a quite moderate amount by way of family provision.

The Labor Party stands for a capital levy on all property at rates very steeply graduated, so as to take only a small contribution from the little people, and a very much larger percentage from the millionaires. . . . One main pillar of the house that the Labor Party intends to build is the future appropriation of the surplus, not to the enlargement of any individual fortune, but to the common good.

I do not ask whether these proposed changes would be just, possible or even desirable, or whether they would meet the approval of our churchpeople. But is it worth while splitting hairs over the question whether they would be the "appropriation" or the "confiscation" of private wealth? The millionaire with an income of $200,000 a year who after he has paid his income tax is left with $10,000 a year for himself and family; or who finds that he can leave to his heirs only "a quite moderate amount by way of family provision" will feel that the rest of his property has been confiscated to the state.

If I understand the Labor program while its first "pillar" is the "minimum wage," its third and fourth "pillars" might be merged into one, and called the "maximum income." The "revolution in national finance" and the "surplus wealth for the common good," would both mean that no private individual would be permitted to enjoy an income above a fixed, and reasonable amount which of course would be very much smaller than that at present enjoyed by wealthy individuals.

If we are to study the program of the Labor Party let us do so frankly and with a full understanding of the kind of house that party seeks to build.

In Re Ireland

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

The "Churchwarden" on page 75 of your last issue covers a great deal of ground very carelessly. For instance, he says "In 1155 Innocent's predecessor Pope Adrian VI., granted to King Henry II. and his successors the hereditary lordship of Ireland." As a matter of fact, Adrian VI. flourished more than three centuries later than 1155. And if the "Churchwarden" means (as is possible) Adrian IV. this only strengthens Cardinal O'Connell's position, for Adrian IV. was Nicholas Brakespeare, the only English pope.

German Propaganda?

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

When Germany started this war she represented herself as driven into it by a military conspiracy against her. She said that we were getting ready to make a conquest of Berlin. This nonsense having proved too preposterous for belief, she started a propaganda to the effect that the conspiracy against her was economic. This was disproved by the figures of German foreign trade, which had developed much faster than that of any people that had ever lived on earth, and the whole pretense was exposed by the Lichnowsky memoirs; but an army that has committed the historic atrocities of Belgium and Poland finds any excuse better than none.

Now the Peace Message of the Joint Commission on Social Service lays the blame for the conditions which produced this war on everybody. "No nation is entirely blameless and all may share in repentance." Somebody on that commission seems to have accepted the German propaganda without questioning for what Jesus died. "Now if they be dead with Christ we believe that they will also live with Him." "The light they marched in darkens sun and moon and stars." It seems to me a sad thing that a peace message sent out by a commission of our Church should be blind to that light.

THE WAR AND RELIGION

Part of a sermon preached at Union Theological Seminary on January 19 by the Rev. David M. Steele, D.D.

AT the war's outset, all were asking why religion, in all the centuries, had no effect upon war. There was talk of Christianity's failure; of the breakdown of religion; of the proven impotency of the Church. Now, at the end of a wide circuit, we are coming round to something quite the corollary. All are now inquiring, What is the war going to do to the Church?

All profitable study of this subject must begin by utterly ignoring manifold denominational divisions, both minor and major. There is no essential difference even between those two great halves of Christendom, Protestant and Catholic. Aye, beyond this, in a way never known since a far-off beginning, "There is neither Greek nor Jew, circumcision nor uncircumcision, Barbarian, Scythian, bond nor free."

There is a new feeling of fraternity, the world throughout. There is a new congeries of human beings, merely because they are humans. Either all are capable of becoming divine, or else none are. Either all may stand or all will fall. Either we are facing blank negation or new affirmation. Either we shall soon be plunged into materialism, stolid, crass, barbaric, primitive; or we will recognize ourselves anew as, all together, bound with golden chains about the feet of God.

This is what the war has done in every other way. In the beginning, it was a European conflict; it has become a world-revolution. At first, it was a mere feud between peoples; it is now an issue between ideals. It was once a national controversy; it is now an international conflagration. In that burning, all that is tinsel is bound to be charred. In that seething caldron, all the elements are molten. When they set about to cool, two things will harden in forms that they never had before. Politically, there will emerge one international state; religiously, there must emerge one truly Catholic Church.

Large movements are at work. We have changed so as a people, in so short a time, that we are scarcely recognizable. We have become serious, who had been flippant. We are sacrificial, who had been self-seeking. We are humble, who had been self-satisfied. We are modest, who were arrogant and boastful. We are generous, who had been greedy; economical, who had been spendthrift; charitable, who were in danger of becoming penurious. We are patient under restraint, benevolent to the measure of hundreds of millions and patriotic to the scale of a score or more billions of dollars.

If, only a little more than one short year ago, anyone had foretold what has now come about, he would have been as little believed as the proverbial prophet in his own country. If he had predicted that a draft bill would be passed practically without protest and that universal military service would be entered upon with a cheer; that a hundred army cantonments should become suddenly restricted areas; that four million men who donned the khaki should prove over night so nearly models of integrity and virtue; that proficiency would transport two millions of these splendid fellows overseas without one dread catastrophe; that a hundred million population would willingly submit to rationing of food stuffs; that labor slackers would rise to such fine endeavor as to launch one hundred ships on last Fourth of July; that the vagaries of feminism would be forgotten in enthusiasm for the Red Cross; that our parish houses and exclusive clubs would be made places of friendly and sympathetic intercourse with sailors and marines; that the platforms in moving-picture places would be made hustings for Four Minute Men and that dance-halls and pool-rooms would be emptied by the simple order, Fight or Work—who would have believed it? Truly "we have got religion."

And here come we to a definition. What is religion? We are likely to seek answer in fields far away, because our eyes are blinded by things near at hand. We are like the rustic who complained he could not see the forest for the trees. Read this passage from St. Paul's epistle and reflect how the enumeration is that of the paragraph above:

Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report . . . these do: and the God of peace shall be with you.

He seems to be more nearly the God of war? Is it not conceivable He should be both? This is a fact, beyond any dispute. And this fact, once frankly admitted, puts to silence all who quibble over Christianity's supposed breakdown in the present crisis. Admit this, and you have the defense of Christ and the Gospels from the charge of pacifism. The New Testament does not teach peace at any price: it teaches righteousness at any cost. The assertion that there never was a good war or a bad peace is pernicious, sordid, and untrue. Where there is life, there is movement. Where there is movement, there is progress. Where there is progress, there is growth. Where there is birth, there are birth-pangs. But where there is birth of this kind, it is birth into life. And "God is not the God of the dead but the God of the living."

Wheat Bubbles In a Bowl of Milk For Any Hungry Hour

Puffed Grains are the most enticing grain foods in existence.

They are bubble-like grains, airy, thin and flaky, puffed to eight times normal size.

They are crisp and toasted, fragile and flimsy, almond-like in flavor.

But Remember This:

Puffed Grains are also ideal foods from scientific standpoints.

The Puffed Grain process was invented by Prof. A. P. Anderson, formerly of Columbia University. And the purpose is to fit whole grains for easy, complete digestion.

After applying a fearful heat, the grains are steam exploded by being shot from guns.

Every food cell is blasted. More than 100 million steam explosions occur in every kernel.

Thus digestion is made easy. Puffed Grains never tax the stomach. Every atom feeds.

Such foods are more than breakfast dainties. They are ideal all-hour foods. Let children have them—all they want—whenever they are hungry.

PATRIOTIC PAGEANTS AND EDUCATIONAL DRAMATICS

THERE are two very different kinds of amateur dramatists. We are accustomed to consider the performance the goal of attainment, and with that end in mind to bend all our energies upon the perfection of production. There is, however, a growing appreciation of the value of the play, even the final production itself, as merely a means to an end. So educational dramatics as differentiated from the usual amateur dramatics are taking their rightful place.

In a recent publication of The MacMillan Company endorsed by the Educational Dramatic League (Amateur and Educational Dramatics, by Evelyn Hilliard, Theodora McCormick and Kate Oglebay, $1.00), the possibilities of dramatic expression in the upbuilding of character and the development of mind and body are discussed in a practical sort of way that should prove helpful to the teacher in day and Sunday School and to the club leader. Much time and energy is wasted by the production of perfectly banal plays in schools, guilds and clubs. The value of amateur dramatics is often lost by the producer who considers only the final production and not the lessons of cooperation, of self-effacement, of gain in self-confidence or self-expression which the individual members of the cast may need. A little slattern may learn daintiness by impersonating the princess; a rough young gang leader may give vent to his desire to be heroic by playing George Washington and learn thereby a higher heroism. These are some of the matters discussed in this little book, and in addition helpful advice on choosing a play, dramatizing a story, the use of the voice, the technicalities of scene analysis, rehearsals, cues, costumes, make-up, etc., is given.

A good many of us have been allowing our pupils in Sunday School, the Juniors in their mission study, or our classes in history and geography (if we happen to be teachers by vocation as well as by avocation) to act out everything from Archdeacon Stuck on the Alaskan trail to Horatius at the bridge. Those who have been experimenting along these lines, as well as those who have not, will find much help and many valuable suggestions in another book dealing with educational dramatics, published by the University of Chicago Press in its excellent series on the Principles and Methods of Religious Education. (The Dramatization of Bible Stories. By Elizabeth Erwin Miller. University of Chicago Press. 1918. $1.00). Miss Miller has based her discussion on her own experience in the Hyde Park Church of the Disciples in Chicago, where a dramatic club of Sunday School children has been formed. They meet on Sunday afternoons, and after hearing their leader tell them a story—usually a story from the Old Testament or a parable from the New Testament, although the author suggests some of Aesop's Fables as good material for similar use—the children themselves evolve a dramatic form, choose their players, make their own costumes and properties (thereby learning a good deal about the dress and household customs of the Jews) and produce their play. The final performance is the least valuable part of the program. The important thing is that biblical characters become as real to the members of this dramatic club as their school fellows are, and that they imbibe the lessons these characters have to teach in a way quite impossible in any other method of teaching. Miss Miller has written her book so clearly and so well that the reader at the end of it can hardly wait to assemble a group of children and start at once upon the fascinating game of teaching through the child's innate love for "pretending."

The best book that we have seen, however, and one that should be read by every mother and teacher is The Kingdom of the Child (E. P. Dutton & Company, New York. 1918. $1.50) by Alice Minnie Herts Heniger, founder and manager of The Children's Theatre and extension lecturer on education at Columbia University. Mrs. Heniger writes as one who knows. Seventeen years of experience in producing plays for and with children qualify her to speak with authority.

The matter of drama in the schools is not a matter of putting a little embroidery on the garment, it is a fundamental thing, basic and involving the deepest of all the human instincts, the great habitude of the race. Through the right use of drama as an integral part of the school system we shall prepare the soul of childhood.

In our kingdom the teacher will work shoulder to shoulder with the child; comrade on his journeys into the Land of Make Believe; guiding, not coercing; establishing relations, not specializing personality; stimulating and encouraging in ways so wise and so tactful that the child is released from all sense of control or restrictions, while his keen interest retains his unflagging attention to the subject in hand.

The Kingdom of the Child is the kingdom of imagination. Mrs. Heniger's thesis is that instead of dragging the child into the adult's kingdom of fact, the teacher should enter his pupil's realm of fancy. Vices and virtues, love of beauty, sense of patriotism, the presence of God, become living, glowing realities if we follow the child's way of participation in their actuality through the natural channels of impersonation and action. The dry-as-dust heroes of history and fiction take on life; the lessons of the Bible are interpreted and absorbed; provided we fling wide the gates of imagination and lead the child through biography, history and parable by allowing him to be for a moment Lincoln, or Egmont, Rosalind, David Copperfield or the Prodigal Son.

A sanity, a simplicity, an utter absence of faddishness, a motherliness, and a deep appreciation of the fundamental religious values set Mrs. Heniger apart from the more superficial and less trustworthy writers on this subject all important in nursery and school room, settlement and parish house. We should like to see the book in the hands of every Sunday School teacher and every rector, as well as in the hands of day school teachers and parents. For "the child works naturally in this World of Play, his own kingdom, and we shall never be true teachers until we shall learn to work as subjects within the kingdom, along with the child."

A book filled with valuable suggestions for those who are trying to take the lead in the development of community drama is Constance D'Arcy Mackay's Patriotic Drama in Your Town (Henry Holt & Company, New York. 1918. $1.35). Miss Mackay writes a great deal, in fact she writes too much. Her books bear evidence of haste and are marred by inaccuracies and omissions. Moreover, she is a person of such exuberant enthusiasm for the present that she is apt to give the impression that all the good things she urges upon her readers are the creation of the twentieth century instead of the heritage of the past. Take for example the amazing statement in the first chapter:

For the first time in history, army and navy and church and hospital are looking to this power (i. e., the drama) as an ally.

And again:

Three war years have proved that it (the drama) is vital to our national life. It was through national fervor that the drama first had its birth. We have ignored its power too long.

Does Miss Mackay forget the mysteries of the Middle Ages played in the chancel of the cathedral or parish church? Certainly the old monks found the drama "a valuable ally." Nor are our armies the first to enjoy the play. We read that when Henry VIII entered Lille in 1513 with the largest army that ever left the shores of England previous to the South African War, the army was entertained by plays, comedies and masques.

We would, likewise, reverse Miss Mackay's statement and say, not that the gift from the theatre to the community was the pageant or community drama, but that community drama from the days of Aeschylus' predecessors on, had its natural development in the theatre.

Miss Mackay's histrionic sense is also at fault in her advice regarding Christmas pageants. It seems to us that never, even at the risk of losing the cooperation of the Jewish element in the community, should Liberty, with her uplifted torch, displace the Babe of Bethlehem as the central figure of the Christmas festival.

Aside, however, from this ultra modernity, Miss Mackay's book is filled with excellent advice for those who are trying to develop the community spirit and to strengthen patriotism by the ancient and inimitable means of the drama.

Whoever has attempted to plan a play for amateurs, especially if these amateurs happen to be children, has come up against the blank wall of suitable material. There is always some reason why the plays available are not suitable—too old or too young, too long or too short, costumes too hard or scenery impossible. And if in addition to other requirements the play has to be appropriate to a given season or occasion, the producer's woes are multiplied.

It should be good news therefore to the harassed amateur dramatic leader that a number of excellent patriotic plays and pageants have recently been published—for of course patriotism is the thing in plays as elsewhere just now. By far the best thing we have seen is The Sword of America, a masque of the war, by William Chauncey Langdon, published at Urbana-Champaign, Illinois (25c. the copy). This masque is written for grown-ups, but it could easily be managed by children with a few older girls for the more responsible parts. It has many virtues. It is not commonplace, but has a glint of real poetry in its conception and in some of its lines. There is a spiritual understanding of the things at issue which pierces deeper than in the usual allegorical pageant; the tone is so distinctly religious as to make the masque worth while for a Sunday School or guild. The allegory is consistent, and the movement is direct and simple and straightforward. Finally the production, the action, and the costumes are within the range of the average amateur troop. There are nine speaking parts, and the non-speaking parts may be as few or as many as convenient.

Patriotic Pageants of Today, by Josephine Thorp and Rosamond Kimball (Henry Holt & Company, New York, 1918. $1.00) contains four plays for children. The first three are rather pretentious, the allegory is involved and not always consistent, and the dialogue is hopelessly commonplace. The last pageant in the book (pageant is a pretty big word, by the way) is, however, quite charming, and very simple and direct. "The Call to the Youth of America" is its name, and its plan is the obvious one of having America summon her children, exhibit to them the warring nations, strike the scales from Germany, who enters with her eyes bound, and finally lead them in singing the Battle Hymn. About thirty children are needed; costumes, scenery, etc., are all easy.

Patriotic Plays for Young People, by Virginia Olcott (Dodd, Mead & Company, New York, 1918. $1.25) is of a very much higher order. The plays are all real plays, not "pageants" or allegories or moralities. Something happens, each is a real story. They are all very short; none would consume more than half an hour when acted. There are only four to eight characters in each play. The simple costumes are illustrated by colored plates.

Atlantic Mutual Insurance Co.

Atlantic Building 51 Wall Street New York
Insures against Marine and Inland Transportation Risk and will issue policies making loss payable in Europe and Oriental countries.

Chartered by the State of New York in 1842, was preceded by a stock company of a similar name. The latter company was liquidated and part of its capital, to the extent of $100,000, was used, with consent of the stockholders, by the Atlantic Mutual Insurance Company and repaid with a bonus and interest at the expiration of two years.

During its existence the company has insured property to the value of $30,949,773.989.00. Received premiums thereon to the extent of $312,671,550.90. Paid losses during that period $152,928,388.68. Issued certificates of profits to dealers $96,523,710.00. Of which there have been redeemed $90,801,110.00. Leaving outstanding at present time $5,722,600.00. Interest paid on certificates amounts to $24,494,668.95. On December 31, 1917, the assets of the company amounted to $18,041,800.25.

The profits of the company revert to the assured and are divided annually upon the premiums terminated during the year, thereby reducing the cost of insurance.

For such dividends, certificates are issued subject to dividends or interest until ordered to be redeemed, in accordance with the charter.

Patriotic Plays and Educational Dramatics

The stories are interesting and the dialogue is clever, and there is a good, healthy moral embedded in each so that the juvenile players imbibe some rather valuable lessons while having a jolly good time. Dora: Her Flag, a play about thrift, another about war gardens, another about cheerfulness, another about industry, is a partial list. A valuable feature is the story at the beginning of each play which is provided for reading to the children before beginning rehearsals. So often children are in a play without having the faintest idea what it is all about.

One more volume deserves commendation, chiefly for the simplicity of its contents, Plays for Anychild, by F. Ursula Payne (Harper & Brothers, New York, 1918. 75c.) is a series of little moralities in which Anychild and her Conscience have adventures appropriate to the various holidays of the year. The plays were written for the children of the Brooklyn Model School, and may be done in a drawing room or out of doors, as well as on a regularly appointed stage. They would be more worthy of commendation to the Sunday School or parish club leader if they had a little religion mixed with their excellent ethics. M. J. H.

Havana Has Memorials

Cubans: Theodore Roosevelt. And this good Bishop of Havana has risen up in evangelical fury anathematizing those good Cubans, who, being thus good, desired to manifest their respect, their admiration, their reverent esteem for the memory of him who in war and in peace wrought for Cuba an exemplary work, and who was the mirror and model of all civic virtues. This good pastor of the servants of the Lord has threatened with excommunication those Catholics who attended this service.

"Leaving to one side the fact that the canon law provides for cases such as that to which we refer, and excuses the passive attendance of Catholics as acts of courtesy, especially at funerals, we are compelled to see in the attitude of the Bishop of Havana an uncompromising attitude of discourtesy which has wounded the sentiments which should be respected, of the American colony in Cuba, which never has held towards the representatives of the Catholic Apostolic Roman Church the slightest disdain.

"To attend the funeral services of Colonel Roosevelt was a declaration of patriotism; a duty of good Cubans, and we do not mean by this to put the good Bishop of Havana on the opposite side; of whom, if he has no record as a patriot, yet nothing can be said to the contrary. A little reflection with respect to his fellow-creatures would have saved the bishop a bad space of time, for surely, conscious of the mistake he has made, he must be experiencing just now one of those moments of unbridled excitement, such as place men in the most awkward positions.

"The canon law only prohibits attendance upon such religious functions as may conduce to a perversion or a scandal. We do not know, however much we may believe him to be so divorced from logic, whether there may be represented in his attitude in connection with this express prohibition, something of a gratuitous insult to the American Episcopal Church, and its members."

RESOLUTION

THE RT. REV. FREDERICK COURTNEY, D.D. Immediately after the funeral of the late Rt. Rev. Frederick Courtney, D.D., at St. James' Church on January 1, 1919, the clergy who were present met and appointed a committee of three to draft resolutions expressing their affection and admiration for their friend and brother, and their gratitude for his helpful ministry and inspiring life. The following are the resolutions:

Bishop Courtney was in his home a devoted husband and loving father, a cheerful companion to all, young and old.

In the house of his friends he was a gracious and welcome guest, full of humor and humanity.

In the house of God he was a reverent worshipper and a devout minister of the Church, reaching not himself, but Christ Jesus the Lord.

In the State he was a tower of strength in every good work, a brave and fearless leader in every righteous reform, and a virile opponent of all vice and wickedness, following closely in the footsteps of his Master, who came to destroy the works of the devil and to make us the sons of God.

To his brethren of the clergy he was a real father in God, quick to aid with his keen intellect in solving doubts and problems, with a deep and sympathetic sense of the needs of the sick and despairing souls.

He was full of the love of God and man. His strength lay in the fact that his life was lived with Christ in God.

? Is the Soldier Accountable to God ? for His Individual Share in the War ?

—a question, the answer for which, many Christians are seeking today, is only a part of the age-long problem which

Prof. Loring W. Batten of General Theological Seminary, New York

treats and discusses in his new book, entitled

GOOD AND EVIL

¶ Prof. Batten's new book is recommended strongly to "Churchman" readers. The author is well known to many through his distinguished success of a quarter century at the General Theological Seminary, and his book is a fresh, broad, satisfying study—"the import of which," The Boston Transcript says, "no review can express."

THE LIVING CHURCH SAYS:

"The problem of evil in the world has always been the great stumbling block to faith. If God is a God of love, why did He not make the world good and keep it good? If evil is the result of sin, and sin a necessary possibility if man were to be given free will, why is not evil restrained? Why does suffering come alike to the just and the unjust? What shall we say of vicarious suffering? All these are problems we have always had with us; the great war has but brought them out into sharper outline."

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN SAYS:

"Dr. Batten's twenty-five years' work as a teacher of the Old Testament has well fitted him for its systematic exploration. Though learned, his style is clear and simple, making his book a delightful one to read."

UNITED PRESBYTERIAN SAYS:

"The problem of good and evil in the world has always confronted men, and always will while good and evil exist. The treatment here presented is fresh, interesting and able."

THE NEW HYMNAL

It is hoped to have the majority of the churches supplied with the New Hymnal before Easter.

Churches are requested to send their orders in at earliest possible time. At least two should be ordered for each pew.

The New Hymnal is the production of a committee of distinguished musicians, clergy and laymen, appointed by the General Convention to revise the hymnal.

The Committee has endeavored to give the Church a hymnal that breathes the spirit of the Church.

The addition of the music for all hymns will encourage congregational singing, giving to every communicant the opportunity of personal participation in the worship of God.

Roosevelt's Authorized Biography

Charles Scribner's Sons announce the publication, in the near future, of the authorized biography of Theodore Roosevelt.

Nearly a year before his death Mr. Roosevelt made Joseph Bucklin Bishop, who had been his intimate personal friend and confidant for more than thirty years, his authorized biographer. He assigned to Mr. Bishop the exclusive use of his official and personal correspondence for writing this history of his life and public services. Writing always as frankly as he talked, Roosevelt's letters tell his own story of his life, especially the official or political side of it, so clearly and fully as to furnish a veritable "inside history" of his time, with graphic pen portraits of the chief actors in it and incisive descriptions of his various relations and adventures in their company.

It was Mr. Roosevelt's desire that his letters should be permitted, as far as possible, to tell his public life's story, and Mr. Bishop has conformed religiously to this wish in the composition of the history. The work was wholly planned and approved at the time of Mr. Roosevelt's death, and while it was in progress the author had the inestimable aid of frequent conversations with Mr. Roosevelt, obtaining from him anecdotes and incidents which add greatly to the interest of the narrative.

THE REV. GEORGE E. TALMAGE, who for many years was Mr. Roosevelt's rector at Christ Church, Oyster Bay, contributes this week an article, "Theodore Roosevelt, Parishioner." The editors secured the article for this week's issue in the hope that it would be of practical help to some of the clergy in preparing their "Roosevelt Day" sermons.

SOME WELL KNOWN ARCHITECTS have entered with great cordiality into THE CHURCHMAN's plan for an architectural number. Dr. Cram needs no introduction to American churchmen. Dr. Milo H. Gates has always shown a warm interest in the arts associated with church building. He is the vicar of one of the most beautiful churches in America, the Chapel of the Intercession, Washington Heights, New York. Mr. Taber Sears, the ecclesiastical decorator and mural painter, is a vestryman of St. Mark's-in-the-Bowery, New York. Mr. Talbot F. Hamlin is a writer and architect of distinction. Mr. Hobart B. Upjohn comes of the famous family of architects who did so much in the last half of the nineteenth century to bring the Church back to true architectural ideals. Mr. Upjohn has done a great deal of work in the Diocese of North Carolina and is advising architect to the Diocese of Porto Rico.

THE BRITISH RELIGIOUS PRESS ON MR. WILSON'S VISIT

SOME of the most interesting and appreciative accounts of Mr. Wilson's visit that have come to our notice occur in the religious weeklies of England. The following extracts are from the British Weekly, the Guardian and the Challenge:

BRITISH WEEKLY

On Saturday I found my way to the Guildhall to join with the multitudes who were assembling to honor the President of the United States of America. The journey through the town was impressive, but in a quiet way. The pavements were almost everywhere full of patient people in spite of the somewhat forbidding weather. We had to be in the Guildhall three-quarters of an hour before the President and his wife arrived, and we took seats at first as we could find them. My thoughts were busy with a former visit to the Guildhall, when I piloted Dr. Parker to deliver a sermon in the building to inaugurate a simultaneous mission in London. The great preacher was somewhat nervous, but on that occasion, as on this, the great courtesy and the excellent organization of the city made things as easy as they could be made. Dr. Parker said that the permission to use the ancient hall to hold a distinctively religious service was unparalleled in the religious history of modern England. Alas! this took place in the beginning of 1901; but over the years I can remember the text and the beginning of the sermon. The text was, "When He saw the multitudes He was moved with compassion." The sermon began in this way: "When did Jesus Christ see the multitudes? Before there were any multitudes to be seen. That is the mystery of the Gospel of the Cross."

By-and-by we had the pleasure of witnessing various presentations and welcomes and ceremonies. The Lord Mayor and sheriffs, along with the Lady Mayoress, took their places about half an hour before the arrival of the chief guest. It was pleasant to watch the celebrities as they ascended the platform. One of the first arrivals was Mr. Lloyd George, with his wife, and a quick cheer greeted them. Then came Sir Douglas Haig, who was greeted with exceptional cordiality. Admiral Sims was another very popular figure. Sir Robert Borden was warmly cheered, and so was General Botha. By degrees the platform was occupied, and those who had the advantage of sitting on it had a magnificent view of the whole scene.

So we went on till, at twelve-thirty, the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress left the platform and proceeded to the entrance. They had gone to greet the great President and Mrs. Wilson. The musicians played "The Star Spangled Banner" as we waited. We had to wait a little, for the dignities of the occasion were strictly observed. But very soon the cheering showed us that Dr. Wilson was with us and that he had brought his wife. They proceeded slowly to the dais and were greeted with extraordinary cordiality by all in the great building.

I had been thinking that it would be very difficult for a speaker to be audible in the beautiful building. Certainly there is nothing to show that acoustics were studied by the architect. But, to my agreeable surprise, when the town clerk and the recorder delivered their messages and presented their address, they were heard very easily in all parts of the room. The address in particular was admirably read by the venerable recorder, and it was excellently phrased. I had expected a speech from the Lord Mayor, but he contented himself with a few dignified words, and then came President Wilson.

When I had time to look carefully at President Wilson, certain words of Sir Walter Scott came to my mind and stayed there. These words were: "The man had been a schoolmaster." I cannot say where they occur or in what connection, though I have tried hard to. But there never could be any doubt of President Wilson. He is a professor—many things besides, but especially a professor. He has the quiet, urbane manner, the sparing gesture, and the entire composure which mark a genuine professor. I do not say for a moment that President Wilson has a superior air. But he speaks as one conscious of his own

I have bought and read with great care and interest and approval Dean Hodges' HOW TO KNOW THE BIBLE. I can unhesitatingly recommend the book as a most helpful one for giving both teachers and students a summary of the entire contents of the Bible.

How to Know the Bible

By GEORGE HODGES

Dean of the Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, Mass.

More than a commentary, HOW TO KNOW THE BIBLE is a guide to intelligent reading and a stimulus to a daily study of the scripture. By its clearing up of difficult passages in the Bible it increases faith in this book of books.

In Dean Hodges' HOW TO KNOW THE BIBLE the results of scholarly research and the consensus of reverent scholarly judgment are embodied, and are set forth by it in a very helpful way.

DANIEL S. TUTTLE, D. D.,
Bishop of Missouri.

A book which can revive a general interest in the Bible is the special need of our day. Dr. George Hodges' book on "HOW TO KNOW THE BIBLE" fills that need. Everyone who reads it will yearn to place it in every home in the world.

RUSSELL H. CONWELL, D. D.,

powers, of his own place, of his own adequacy. He made no attempt at oratory, but spoke with entire ease and without a single note of any kind. Whether he had specially prepared the speech I do not know. It might have been learnt by heart, but probably it was not. A very distinguished American said to me that the President had been doing that kind of work for a long time, and was completely master of it.

It was very instructive to watch the demeanor of the audience. It was one of watchful friendliness. Everything said was heard. There was no strain either on the part of the speaker or that of the hearers.

Mrs. Wilson attracted great attention as she sat by the Lord Mayor, entering obviously and thoroughly into the spirit of everything. I have before now said that the true pre-eminence of American women was that they were the best listeners in the world. They are very likely the best talkers also—in fact, I think they are—but in listening there are none to come near them. This I was able to see in Mrs. Wilson. Her smiling, changing face showed that every word was going to its mark.

We were invited to luncheon at the Mansion House.

This was a great day of rejoicing, but there was a very tragic side to it which did not develop itself fully until we were at the Mansion House. By that time a good many of the election results were known, and they passed mysteriously from the knowledge of one to the knowledge of others. It was like the transmission of news about which we read in books of African travel. There was enough news before the luncheon was ended to show that there were dark and heavy disappointments. Dark and heavy disappointment had come upon not a few. I think I have never been at a more extraordinary meal. Light-hearted speeches were made by the Lord Mayor and President Wilson, and the guests listened and smiled and applauded, and yet in many cases their hearts were elsewhere. The news of the great Coalition victory was fully realized before four o'clock, and it was with the most genuine sympathy that certain of our guests were regarded by those who knew.

I must say something about the speaking at the luncheon, which was peculiarly excellent. Our Lord Mayor, Sir Horace Marshall, a doctor of Trinity College, Dublin, and a man of high culture, excels in his speeches. In proposing the President's health he touched lightly but sufficiently on certain points apt to be ignored. "One other thing is called to mind by Mr. Wilson's visit—I mean the unfailing sympathy and friendship shown towards Great Britain by the American people while their country was still neutral." Again: "The tremendous inspiration of moral leadership under which the American nation entered the war was the work of our guest, and the whole-hearted devotion and marvellous energy with which they carried it on was due to the manner in which he pointed the way." Once more: "We are indeed honored by the presence also of Mrs. Wilson, and delighted that she has been able to accompany the President. The City of London is glad of this opportunity, in welcoming her, of paying a tribute to the women of the United States, to whom the character of the American people owes so much."

President Wilson received a most cordial welcome when he rose to reply. There could be no doubt as to the happiness and freedom and good humor of his speech. He pleased the audience very much by his story of Charles Lamb. I had often observed that familiar stories well told are quite as welcome as new stories, and the cheers and laughter which the anecdote evoked were proof of this. But President Wilson was brightest when he confessed that he was no bloodless thinking machine, but had in him all the insurgent elements of the human race. He chimed that he was sometimes able to keep those instincts in restraint by the stern Covenanters tradition that lay behind him. "But at the same time there is a dash of what I will call the Celt in me. I have no documentary evidence, but I have internal evidence. I enjoy periods of delightful irresponsibility which can have no other origin"—here Mr. Wilson turned to Mr. Lloyd George, who joined heartily in the laughter of the other guests—"and which not only afford me occasional vacations from my conscience, but also afford me what, after all, is one of the wines of life, that is, real human companionship. I have always found the irregular fellows the most interesting, and the academic men, whom I am supposed to affect, the most tedious. It is not only diligently to pursue business, as I expect, but also to seek this sort of comradeship, that I feel it a privilege to have come across the sea, and in the welcome you have accorded Mrs. Wilson and me you have made us feel that that companionship was accessible to us in the most delightful and enjoyable form."

President Wilson delivered his speech as if he had been a man without a single care in the world. But he had something to say before he closed about the suffering of our own people, the suffering of the people of France, the infinite suffering of the people of Belgium, the whisper of grief which ran through the world.

At eleven o'clock last Saturday morning a group of London Free Church ministers and laymen was received by President Wilson at the American Embassy. On arriving at the embassy we found that three other deputations were waiting to be received by the President before his visit to the Guildhall. In the reception room we noticed the Archbishop of Canterbury, Mr. Asquith, Lord Grey, Lord Shaw, Professor Gilbert Murray, and many others who had come to support the idea of a league of nations so clearly defined by the head of the American Republic. By-and-by we were ushered into the President's room, where he was surrounded by American officials and army and navy officers, and in a corner was a group representing the public press.

The President received us standing, and cordially shook hands with each member of the deputation as he was introduced. After a few words by Sir Robert Perks explaining what Churches were represented, and saying how the Free Churches desired to greet America's President, Dr. F. B. Meyer read a brief address couched in beautiful terms. The first note struck was that of welcome to President Wilson "on his all too short stay among us." References followed to his great moral leadership of the world, his high ideals joined to practical statesmanship, and his deep religious feeling united with unflinching courage. Dr. Meyer made touching reference to President Wilson's early training and religious upbringing, and called to remembrance the fact that the President's mother was born and reared in a Free Church manse. The address went on to welcome and endorse Dr. Wilson's expressed views on the league of nations, and closed with the hope and prayer that through his efforts and those of Allied statesmen war might be forever abolished.

In replying, President Wilson expressed his great pleasure in receiving the deputation, and his warm thanks for the address he had just listened to. They were quite right in saying that he recognized the sanctions of religion in these times of perplexity. "There are matters so large to settle that no man can feel that his mind can compass them. I think one would go crazy if he did not believe in Providence. If I did not believe in Providence life would be a maze without any clue. Unless there is some Supreme Guidance we would despair of the results of human counsel," he said. Religion was the great force moulding and shaping the world, and he wished us every prosperity and blessing in the world to which we have set our hands.

The strong face lit up with evident pleasure, and the President nodded approval when reference was made to the influence of religion upon his life and public career, and his eyes grew very tender as he listened to the touching words concerning his mother and her home. As one watched the upright figure of the President of the United States one felt that Mr. George Bateman had rightly described the man facing us: "He is a man who is actuated by principles and not by opportunism. He makes up his mind what is the right thing to do, and then does it." And the impression left upon our minds by the great scholar and statesman whom he had met face to face was just this—He is a man, every inch a man!

GUARDIAN

SO much has been written about President Wilson's visit to England that it would be an ingenious mind indeed which could strike a new note. The truly royal reception that was given to him wherever he went has touched chords on both sides of the Atlantic which might otherwise have continued to be imperfectly resonant. We trust that other Presidents may see their way to follow Mr. Wilson's example. Meanwhile, is it too much to hope that the King may see his way to return the visit? There would be no difficulty about the invitation, and if aviation progresses with one-half the rapidity which is prophesied by enthusiasts, a progress through New York, Washington, and Chicago, and perhaps even San Francisco, ought to be packed comfortably into a week or ten days.

CHALLENGE

THE Bishop of Carlisle took part in the service at the Congregational Church in Lowther Street, Carlisle, which was attended by President Wilson, on Sunday morning. The bishop occupied a place with the pastor in the rostrum, and read the New Testament lesson. After the President had addressed the congregation from the floor of the church, the bishop spoke feelingly of the "filial piety" which had brought the President to Carlisle and the wider significance of the visit. The bishop was under the influence of unconcealed emotion which allowed him only with difficulty to articulate the closing benedictory words which he addressed to the President: "God save you and guide you, sir." The service closed with the national anthem and the bishop's blessing. Subsequently the President and Mrs. Wilson and party were conducted to the vestry, where Dr. Wilson sat in the chair that had been used by his grandfather in the rostrum of the old chapel, and signed the church minute-book. The party then drove to the cathedral, where the dean, the bishop, and Canon Rawnsley pointed out some of the more interesting features. These included the spot where Sir Walter Scott was married, and where Bruce signed allegiance to Edward III.

In the evening the bishop preached in the Congregational church. He said that one of his dreams was that some day we might have a truly National Church, constituted on diversities in forms of internal government, but with one allegiance to the Lord Jesus Christ. Dr. Diggle added that he had been induced to preach in that church from the visit of the President of the United States of America on his immeasurable mission. While the statesmen of the world were thinking of the means of establishing a friendship of nations, it was getting time that Christians woke up and made every effort to establish friendship among the Churches.

The Religious Teaching of the Old Testament

By ALBERT C. KNUDSON, D.D., Ph.D.

Professor of Hebrew and Old Testament Exegesis in Boston University School of Theology

DR. JOHN E. McFADYEN, of the United Free Church of Scotland, Glasgow, in a personal letter to the author, says:

"Your book has a place altogether its own. It is not like A. B. Davison's O. T. Theology; nor does it deal with its material like H. P. Smith's Religion of Israel; though it is as theological as the one book, and as historical as the other. That is what I so much like about it—its combination of fine thinking and of living historical quality. One can imagine—and one has seen—a very dull book on the subjects which you have chosen as titles to your chapters: your discussions are interesting and alive from end to end. And you succeed in giving a very living and convincing picture of that great spiritual movement which has meant so much to the world.

"I like, too, your independence and courage; the challenges to conventional opinion which you intersperse throughout the discussion—especially of Individualism and Nationalism—are very necessary and will do good. There is nothing more to be deprecated than the establishing of a critical orthodoxy before which we must all bow. That orthodoxy would be about as terrible and deadening as the one which it superseded."

THEODORE ROOSEVELT

THE impress that Theodore Roosevelt's personality has made upon the world does not need emphasis. Whatever his fame as a statesman, it can never outrun his fame as a man. However widely men may differ from him in matters of national policy, this thing men in their hearts would all wish, that their sons might have within them the spirit, the will, the strength, the manliness, the Americanism of Roosevelt. He was made of that rugged and heroic stuff with which legend delights to play. Idylls and Sagas and the Iliad have been woven about men of his mould. We may surely expect to see developed a Roosevelt legend, a body of tales that will exalt the physical power and endurance of the man and the boldness of his spirit, his robust capacity for blunt speech and his hearty comradeship, his live interest in all things living—these will make our boys for the long future proud that they are of his race and his country. And no surer fame than this can come to any man—to live in the hearts of the boys of his land as one whose doings and sayings they would wish to make their own.—Secretary Lane.

CHURCH ARCHITECTURE

A CHURCH ARCHITECTURE number of THE CHURCHMAN has been planned with the hope that some practical help may be given by those who have consented to discuss this problem in our columns. For more than four years church building has been pretty much at a standstill. Those who, at the beginning of the war, had plans in hand for new parish houses or churches were compelled to abandon building operations. Money and labor were scarce; the devotion of parishioners was enlisted in other channels. But now that the war is over, church building will be resumed. There will, doubtless, be many splendid memorials erected in our great cities and country communities. Old church buildings will be beautified with memorial windows and chancel fittings. It is to the Church of God that men and women naturally go when they seek to make permanent the memories that are precious to them. It is bound to be so during the next decade in America. Spires will be finished as a loving tribute to young men who knelt one morning at the Lord's Table in their parish church and then went forth to die. Rose windows will commemorate the sacrifice of groups of boys who went out from the church to give their all for God and country. Chancels will be beautified, parish buildings erected to the glory of God in loving memory of the faithful.

Several dioceses in our Church have taken steps by the appointment of committees on church building to give intelligent direction to the building operations within the diocese. Unfortunately in most cases, beneficial results have stopped with the appointment of the committee. We have found great difficulty in eliciting any information from these committees of what they are really doing to improve taste. The Roman Church with its well-knit organization is better adapted to give authoritative advice in such matters. They have pretty generally in this country appeared indifferent to architecture. They are now building beautiful churches in many dioceses. The Church of the Blessed Sacrament in Providence is an admirable example of what the Roman Church is doing to encourage good architecture. Advice from higher up is helping to standardize these matters. If in our own Church, parish building committees with limited funds could be furnished plans for inspection and given advice by diocesan committees, we feel that an important step forward would be taken towards improving the architecture of small churches. Suppose, for example, a vestry had twenty thousand dollars in hand for a new church building, or ten thousand dollars with which to erect a parish house, how it would simplify their problem if they could be furnished a group of plans for study.

The article in this issue by Mr. Hamlin is provocative of thought. The note of human fellowship which is certainly the dominant one throughout the world today, ought to find more definite expression than is now customary in our church buildings. Christian worship has horizontal obligations as well as perpendicular. The full Christian message conveyed in the summary of the law ought to be embodied in the structure of the buildings as well as in liturgy and precept. The reason that we so commonly feel the Gothic chill in our churches is due, doubtless, to the fact that our religion contains some lack. When the warmth of fellowship gets into our religion, we shall build houses of worship to express love of God and love of neighbor too.

A MEDITATION ON CHURCH ARCHITECTS

A RCHITECTS have their troubles. So also do building committees. The architect knows what is correct and beautiful; the congregation not infrequently like what is "homely" and incorrect. This reflection is born of a memory. We know a Congregational church which has always been the great church in the city in which it stands. It has been ministered to by a succession of quite remarkable preachers, and the citizens of that community have looked to the pulpit of this church as the focus of the city's prophetic utterance. There came a day in the history of the parish when the drift of population compelled a rebuilding. The building committee called in one of the nation's great architects.

He won his battle, bitterly fought, for what was appropriate and beautiful; he squeezed the spreading proportions of the congregation into a tightly-corseted Gothic. The pulpit was made to know its place; something that looked like an altar dominated the structure from the east end. The congregation used to look happy in their plush and gay colors in the old days of their parlor Gothic. The color was bad, but it was color after its kind. They never again looked quite at home in their chill correctness.

A good many church architects are pagan. They love the beautiful but they have little respect for the prejudices which to some blunt minds seem to mean veracity. If you give such architects an inch they will take a yard. Theology and ritual are not infrequently included in the specifications which accompany their plans. Many a fine old New England parish, which should have stuck to colonial in the interest of veracity, went "perpendicular" at the parish election. They dropped their traditions like an old shoe, and tripped along after the cooing architect. These things ought not so to be.

FOR SHAME!

ADMIRAL MAYO'S statement last week before the House Naval Affairs Committee is tragically depressing. If what he said to that committee does not find universal condemnation throughout the Churches in America, we must sadly conclude that the Christian Church cannot count upon its clergy for leadership in putting an end to war. Unless war has dulled the conscience of us all, the Admiral Mayo statement ought to arouse indignation and shame throughout the land. This is what he is reported to have said:

The present is the time, and the only time, for us to create the greatest navy, which I believe we need. Financial centres are about to shift from Europe to America, with all the resultant jealousies. If we postpone upbuilding of the navy and start it later, other nations may be inclined to ask then why we are expanding and whether our policy conflicts with theirs. But if we do it now it will not be questioned by other nations.

We know what the President's policy is from what he has said in his speeches, and we know that Secretary Daniels favors a greater navy. Furthermore, we know what our policy is to be regarding an American merchant marine. Everything considered, my idea is that this is the exact time to go the limit in expanding the navy.

It may be that Admiral Mayo is right as to facts. It may be that in our civilization, as now constituted, nothing but arming to the teeth will insure what people call national safety. Very well, there is a Christian answer to that. Let us try another kind of civilization. If the brains of the world cannot organize national and international life on any other basis than that suggested by Admiral Mayo, then the Christian Church had better "bolt the convention" and throw all its influence on the side of another experiment. Admiral Mayo and the men who stand with his opinion are practical realists; but so are some of the rest of us who no longer see in that definition of national safety anything worth fighting for.

Have the men of good will throughout the world, have the statesmen in whose hands these matters lie, exhausted every expedient to end war, that before a treaty of peace has brought the last war to an end they must cynically set about arming for another war? This is discouraging to those who have been dreaming dreams and seeing visions of a better world. The Christian Church backed the last war with body, mind and heart. We saw in it a crusade for Christ. If Admiral Mayo is right, then the Church was ignominiously betrayed. If we read aright the signs of the times, Christians are about through with this business of slaughtering one another for what our practical statesmen called patriotism. It might help if the hundred or more American bishops should say to these gentlemen who are settling matters in Paris, "This is the last war that the Christian Church will back. It is your business to find another way." Statesmen may make wars, our general staff may teach us how to conduct wars, but we doubt whether England, France or America will ever again send its boys to do the fighting. Now is the time to invent some other way. It can be done if statesmen are interested. If they are not interested, the nation's governance will be placed in other hands. It is the profession of men like Admiral Mayo to protect the nation by force of arms. They serve that profession loyally, and with skilful, unselfish devotion. It is the profession of the Christian ministry to teach people how to live together like brothers in peace. We have yet to show that we are serving that profession with the intelligent devotion of the men who conduct our military affairs. They speak out boldly for Mars. What are we whispering for Christ?

THE WEEK

Chronicle and Comment on Current Events

MR. ROOSEVELT, PARISHIONER

WE wish that every rector and layman in the land would read in this week's CHURCHMAN the Rev. George E. Talmage's simple and impressive narrative of Mr. Roosevelt's church life. Much has been made in public eulogies of Mr. Roosevelt's versatility. He found time to be author, naturalist, hunter, statesman; but he also conceived it to be his duty and his privilege to be a loyal layman. He attended church and he attended with regularity. When he had guests, he went to church whether they chose to go or not. This naturalist, whose love of nature was an intelligent affection, never indulged in that hypocrisy, so common today among the indolent and undisciplined, of pretending to seek God in the woods on a Sunday morning. He went to church to say his prayers and to worship God along with his fellow Christians. But his participation in the parish life was no act of condescension, as of one self-consciously setting a "good example." He really was a parishioner. He made the rector feel that he cared. Even the missionary society and the guilds had his co-operation. There are many Lilliputian giants in our land who feel themselves to be too much men of affairs to deal in parish matters. How cheap those Philistines seem! Not the least element in Mr. Roosevelt's greatness was the simple, natural way in which he met the normal duties of life. Posterity will remember him as author, naturalist, discoverer, hunter, reformer, statesman. The Christian Church adds another loving title—Theodore Roosevelt, parishioner.

LINCOLN'S BIRTHDAY

LINCOLN once wrote: "Whenever any church will inscribe over its altar as its sole qualification for membership the Saviour's condensed statement of the substance of both law and gospel, that church I will join with all my heart and all my soul." The laymen's test of fitness for entrance into the school of Christ and the Kingdom of God will some day be one of the heart not of the head. That will be a great day for the Church, for men like Lincoln can then find in it a home.

ANSWER THE CALL!

WITH the daily drama of war stinging the emotions constantly into life it was not difficult to give money for war purposes, or for healing the wounds of war. Had the war lasted it would have been an easy matter for our War Commission to raise the million dollars which would have been needed for the care of our boys in the camps and at the front. We do not think the Church is going to find it difficult to give one-fourth of that sum which the commission is asking for its work during the period of demobilization, a period rich with opportunity for service to our boys in the army and navy.

These are days of criticism against war organizations. Churchmen are not slow to speak their minds when Church organizations fail to function effectively. The War Commission has been surprisingly free from criticism. This leads one to suspect that that organization has done its work with unusual and commendable efficiency. It has stood behind our men in the field meeting every need swiftly because its operations have been guided by men of common sense and clean-cut executive ability. Let us give that $250,000 Sunday and a bit more!

DIOCESAN LIBRARIES

THERE are real possibilities in diocesan libraries. But for the most part they are latent. They exist in theory only; in fact the shelves in the diocesan house are rather apt to be filled with journals of the convention, a few musty "back numbers" of some religious periodical and possibly the published sermons of the late bishop.

In order to develop a diocese library, it would be necessary to appoint a diocesan librarian, someone with plenty of time and imagination. But it ought not to be hard to find such a person, for the job is a real challenge to creative ability and might conceivably interest one of those elusive "younger women" who do not find committee work congenial. If the right books were available not only would the clergy and laity form the habit of dropping into the diocesan rooms as they do into the public library, but a demand would soon arise for the initiation of a lending system similar to that pursued in the widely used missionary library at the Church Mission House in New York.

A diocesan library might be a useful tool to the various diocesan committees. Take for example a committee existent in many dioceses, the advisory committee on church architecture.

On another page of this issue appears a carefully compiled bibliography dealing with ecclesiastical art—architecture, church furnishings, heraldry, etc. Were these books placed on the shelves of the diocesan library, carefully catalogued and indexed and under the care of an intelligent and interested person; were the bishop to encourage his people, clergy and laymen alike to delve into the romance of ecclesiastical art, of the legend and symbolism that have been built into the churches of the old world, of the modern problems that confront the church architect; were the rector and the building committee of the small church to know that at the diocesan house they could consult, free of charge, the architects whose fame and price put them beyond the reach of the funds available for the small church, the result might conceivably be a marked improvement in the beauty, the durability and the economy in construction of the small churches of the diocese.

THE WINE OF SUCCESS

FRIENDS of prohibition must regret poignantly Mr. Anderson's attack on Cardinal Gibbons. Those who knew Mr. Anderson's temperament were not surprised. He is a heavy handicap for the Prohibition Party to carry. The wine of success has perhaps gone to Mr. Anderson's head, and he is not to be held too strictly responsible for words prejudicial to the cause he has at heart. It will be a grave error in statesmanship if the leaders of prohibition do not study the psychology of the present situation. Prohibitionists won their victory by concessions of a very large group of American citizens who are not in total sympathy with the principle or the methods of the Prohibition Party. This fact must be recognized by that party if they are to capitalize their victory. The American people will not permit the fanatical mind to rule its conduct or its counsels. It would be well if men like Mr. Anderson were henceforth kept in the background and if men better fitted to hold commerce with reasonable opinion were placed in representative position in the Prohibition Party. Fanaticism is doubtless necessary to furnish fuel for any great reform. But there comes a time in the fortunes of any reform movement when what Milton called "heroic magnitudo of mind" is required for the administration of its affairs.

BACKING THE LEAGUE

ALL over the country groups are being formed to arouse interest in a league of nations and to weld individual conviction into a body whose size will tell. The most elaborate project, thus far, is that of the League to Enforce Peace, of which William Howard Taft is president. This organization has been in existence since 1915, but has recently increased its working force to include five staff secretaries, including a national campaign manager and assistant manager and an extension and speakers' bureau secretary. It is planning a series of nine congresses "to marshal public opinion behind America's real purpose in the war," to be held in New York City, Boston, Chicago, Minneapolis, Portland, San Francisco, Salt Lake City, Kansas City and Atlanta in sessions of two days each between February 5 and 28.

The League of Free Nations Association, whose president is Norman Hapgood and whose headquarters are in New York City, is having weekly luncheons with discussions on the problems with which the Peace Conference is concerned. Its aim is to have presented opposing points of view as, for instance, on January 25, when both pro- and anti-Bolshevik arguments were held in a discussion of the Russian situation.

The Woman's International League of New York, which is a branch of the National Woman's Peace Party, of which Jane Addams is president, has begun a study course on national and international reconstruction.

SATURDAY NIGHT SERMON

Theodore Roosevelt: Christian Gentleman

By THE REV. GEORGE THOMAS DOWLING, D.D.

Know ye not that there is a prince and a great man fallen this day in Israel?—II Samuel III-38.

WHEN Daniel Webster died at Marshfield in 1852 there came one who stood silently beside his grave a long time, and then reaching out his arms, he cried: "O, Daniel Webster, the world is lonely without you."

Today millions of men and women are standing in the shadow of a great sorrow, to whom the world seems lonely. He is gone; the one in whose clear judgment, in whose undeviating patriotism and self-sacrificing leadership we had come to trust as to a lighthouse in a tempest-tossed night. Never again shall we behold his winning smile or hear his ringing voice in defense of righteousness or, as he was accustomed to term it, "a square deal," against dishonesty, whether in high places or in low.

"Know ye not that a prince and a great man hath fallen today in Israel?" Yes, Theodore Roosevelt was a prince, which means a leader; and he was a leader who led. No American has ever lived who has been so greatly worshiped by so great a multitude of his countrymen, who would have gladly died with him or for him, while battling for eternal righteousness. And, as he did at San Juan Hill, he always chose for himself the most dangerous place.

When the convention of 1916 was approaching, they asked him if he thought he had any chance for the nomination; and he answered: "Not the slightest in the world. If I had any, I killed it in my tour of the West advocating preparedness and Americanism. Those issues will be taken up, but when it comes to making nominations a convention will always pass over the pioneer, because he has made too many enemies by his pioneering. I have been the pioneer. I have forced those issues to the front, and the convention will adopt them and then nominate someone else who is 'safer.'"

And they did. And he knew they would; but he went right on nevertheless. And whether men swore for him or swore at him, they followed him. They had to follow him, because while we were wondering whether there was a problem to solve, he had solved it when we were yet slumbering and had the answer. We followed him because he thought our thoughts before we did. He was one of the few men with the gift of pre-vision. He was a prince, a leader who did not simply lead where he was told to lead, like the carriage dog who runs in front of the carriage. He led.

But there have been leaders who have been bad men. Such was William Hohenzollern. Such was Frederick the Great. Theodore Roosevelt was not only a great leader; he was a great man.

That which causes the whole world to bow in tears as they think of that new-made grave near Sagamore Hill, is because from the time when he was a student in Harvard University, and became, through his entire course a teacher in a Congregational Sunday School, until the other day when he laid down the burden, he had been a fearless but lowly and consistent follower of that Nazarene who walked the earth two thousand years ago.

I say, and I say it after years of admiration of that phenomenal character who has now at last passed down the long, long trail, that that which has won the love of so many millions of men has been the possession of just those spiritual qualities which have been and are today the mightiest forces in the world and which in Jesus Christ have, in the words of Jean Paul Richter, "lifted the gates of empire off their hinges."

How kind he was. How little children loved him, this prince, this great man; the consort of kings and statesmen of highest renown, and yet the man whom, from motives the farthest removed from disrespect, from feelings of deepest affection and tenderness, his fellow citizens everywhere spoke of as "Teddy."

And with all his tenderness how brave he was. In the city of Milwaukee on the night of October 14, 1912, just as he was seating himself in an automobile on his way to deliver a most important speech a bullet from the pistol of poor half-witted John Schrank went through his heavy overcoat and his other clothing, fifty pages of manuscript and his spectacle case, and imbedded itself two inches deep in his right side.

Instantly the cry arose from the excited multitude, "Lynch him! Lynch him!" But he said, "Don't hurt him. Don't hurt him. Bring him to me." And when they brought him he only asked, "What did you want to shoot me for?" And then he went before that multitude and with the bullet in his body, which is there still, he spoke for fifty-two minutes. And this is a part of what he said:

First of all I want to say this about myself. I have altogether too many important things to think of to pay any heed, or feel any concern over my own death. I would not speak to you insincerely within five minutes of being shot. I am telling you the literal truth when I say that my concern is for many other things.

I want you to understand that I am ahead of the game anyway. No man has had a happier life than I have had, a happy life in every way. I have been able to do certain things that I greatly wished to do, and I am interested in other things.

I can tell you with absolute truthfulness, that I am very much uninterested, in whether I am shot or not. . . . I have fought for the good of our common country.

Do you know of any man in all history who has done a nobler thing than that? I do not. He was not only a great leader; he was a great man. He was a man of God: a Christian gentleman.

But as you and I must, whatever position we may occupy, he has fallen. When Disraeli, Earl of Beaconsfield, died, the London Echo printed these four lines:

A little pomp, a little sway,
A sunbeam on a winter's day,
Is all the great and mighty have
Between the cradle and the grave.

Theodore Roosevelt has fallen, but he has fallen up. Peacefully he "fell on sleep," and today he lies in that humble little burying place which he himself had chosen, among the villagers whom he had learned to love.

"Good night!" he said in his cheery voice when his doctor left him, feeling that all was well. "Good night!" Soon after that he fell asleep, and when he awoke, it was morning.

Farewell, O prince, O wonderful American! Farewell, O friend of all humanity! Farewell! Farewell! Farewell! Today the world seems lonely.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT, PARISHIONER

BY THE REV. GEORGE E. TALMAGE

FOR a starting point let us go back to the beginning of the present pastorate nearly eight years ago. The Sunday morning that it became known that the arrangements had been made the choir had been already formed in line for the service, the choir prayer had been said, when the outside door was opened and "the Colonel" appeared to shake the hand of the newly-appointed rector, to wish him Godspeed, saying, "And I welcome you especially because we come from the same Church." His was no empty loyalty to the religious training of his Dutch ancestry. He believed that its learning and conservatism had a contribution for the great American Church that is to be when we all get together. This, by the way, was not the first meeting, one of the previous occasions being the formation of the New York State Federation of Churches, when the writer as the representative of the "Dutch" Church and the Governor as the chief speaker happened to sit together on the sofa in the pulpit of the First Presbyterian Church in Syracuse. That was the occasion on which he announced his views on federation, in the carrying out of which views he steadfastly did all in his power to advance the work of the particular group with which he chanced to be associated, with the greatest charity for and interest in every other group, by whatever name called. Small minds cannot comprehend how loyalty may be manifest to a particular group and to the larger whole. His was not a small mind, for he could see the good in all and be at the same time charitably blind to their faults.

While Colonel Roosevelt occupied a modest pew near the door, the people of the parish always knew when he was there, which was generally every Sunday morning. If he were not there, they knew it was a case of sickness or absence from Oyster Bay. No guests kept him home from church; if they did not wish to accompany him, they amused themselves alone, while he attended church. He might have got more profit from a book or from his own meditations in the woods, but he felt it his duty to attend church to worship God. Said a man to him one day: "I can worship God just as well in the woods." His reply was to the point: "Doubtless you can; but no one will suspect you of it." During the "gasless" Sundays last fall, when many made the requirements an excuse for staying home, he set the example of loyalty by walking the three miles from Sagamore Hill to the village church and back home again. And this, by the way, was shortly after his return from a serious operation which affected his walking not a little.

There were friends who said in warning, "You will find him a hard man to preach to; he is so positive in his convictions." Would that preachers had always so kindly a critic as he—one who could follow what they say, commend utterances that were worth while, and suggest books to read if the views were divergent. This criticism, always in private, might take the form, "I liked that expression; may I use it?" or, "While I did not agree with you, I enjoyed your presentation. But, have you read such-and-such a book? It is very illuminating." When the House of Bishops issued its pastoral on support of the Government and refraining from criticism, and a copy of the pastoral was handed him by the rector, how characteristic was the reply: "That is all very well. But how can I keep still when I know?"

There are other parts of church work besides attendance at services and listening to sermons. The great work of the Church is missions. One anecdote will suffice. One hot Sunday morning a missionary bishop was preaching. So hot it was that his collar was not visible at the end of the service. An offering was announced for the following Sunday morning. As we were dismissing the choir the door again opened, the bishop was greeted most cordially and a bill was placed in the hand of the rector with the brief words: "I will not be here next Sunday, but I want to do my part."

We have a little missionary group known as St. Hilda's, which meets each week for sewing, to which Mrs. Roosevelt belongs and in which Mr. Roosevelt took a great interest. It was their custom to invite the members to a reception every year. During the presidential term one of these receptions was on the Mayflower, then anchored in the harbor. It was a highly honored group to be permitted this friendship, for it was a sincere and personal relationship. Never a sorrow entered their homes but sympathy came from Sagamore Hill, and not infrequently a personal visit as well.

Of course, the parish has a Sunday School. Looking over the old registers one finds the family represented on the roll. Once each year, on Christmas Eve, the Colonel himself spoke to the school, receiving his orange and box of candy with the other members of the school and joining heartily in the singing of our historic carol, doubly dear to us henceforth, because he loved it. The children and their parents little realized their privilege in listening to those familiar talks. For example, after the South American trip they had the opportunity of hearing informally what many traveled miles to meetings of great geographical societies to hear. They felt he was one of themselves, but they did not know how great he was.

Space fails to tell of his relationship to various guilds. There would be anecdotes connected with them all, and this article might resemble the Analects of Confucius. But a reference may be made to the Boy Scouts. When General Baden-Powell was in this country in the interests of the new movement, there was an informal luncheon at Sagamore Hill, at which the general and some men prominent in the movement were present. The rector, although of little importance to the conference, was invited to meet them. He was introduced as "my pastor," and while the men tried their best to commit the Colonel to their cause they got no further than this—that he pointed out the importance of the individual scout master, and turned the discussion to a consideration of the merits of men in the village who might be fitted for such leadership. Without doubt the invitation to the local pastor was for the very purpose of so turning the discussion. Later on he took a prominent place in the movement, and when the Roosevelt Troop of Boy Scouts was organized in the parish, consented to serve and did serve on the troop committee.

The picture of the Colonel which will be most prized is not that of the Rough Rider, nor the President, nor the orator, but the grandfather, hugging his little grandchild. How he loved the children! What interest he took in their Baptism, standing sponsor near the front! How he rejoiced in their Confirmation! Pride they may well have in later years, but reverence and love will be the dominant note of their esteem. The Colonel was a man of family, a man of peace, but how anxious he was to serve his country that his grandchildren might live in peace! He gave his sons when he could not give himself.

One recalls that Sunday morning before Quentin sailed, how he came to church for his last Communion. We felt it would be the last. We talked otherwise. Then came the letter from abroad in which was written, "I have just been to service in Notre Dame Cathedral. It was fine. But I would rather have been in Christ Church." And then came the cable message, and early next morning, when so many would have stayed away, the parents drew near to the same altar rail. There were no dry eyes, and the words could scarcely be spoken, but their force was there; "preserve thy body and soul unto everlasting life." This time also it was a last Communion, but we did not know it.

A GOOD CHURCH FOR $20,000

BY RALPH ADAMS CRAM, LITT.D., LL.D.

THE editor of THE CHURCHMAN has asked me what I can say on the question "Can a Beautiful Church Be Built for Twenty Thousand Dollars?" This is a matter of real interest and of even greater importance, and I accept his challenge and will do a little thinking aloud, as follows:

Distinguo. Not a city church to seat eight hundred people, and with a parish house twice as big and fitted for all sorts of "uplift" and "institutional" activities; certainly not. Nor yet a country church carved and buttressed and pinnacled like Lavenham or Burford or any one of a thousand other English parish churches. And then what is meant by "beautiful?" Carved like a piece of Chinese ivory as the church of Brou, or spired like Wrexham or roofed like March or windowed like Fairford? No; if this is meant, then not for ten times the amount, even though the sittings ("kneelings" is a better word) numbered only a few score. If on the other hand fine proportions, simple form, modest materials and absence of pretence are meant, then "the answer is in the affirmative."

Of course here again one must enter a caveat; size is a vital question. I have been in the practice of architecture for just thirty years, and during that time, though the churches we have built run well above a hundred, there has never been but one case (that of a denominational Mycaenas) in which the ambitions of the client did not largely outrun his financial resources. Parsons and building committees have very rudimentary ideas as to the relationship between their ideal and its cost, and I doubt if they are to be blamed since the same is unhappily true of many architects. Both client and architect begin by wanting everything, and when the contractors and the material market and the trades unions get in their heavy work, there is bitter disappointment. Then the economies begin, with cutting here and scamping there and jockeying bids and accepting second-rate workmanship and doubtful contractors, with the result that no one is satisfied, the product is inferior and—the architect generally gets the blame!

Fortunately a good church does not cost as much as a bad, for today, with our inferior and uninterested workmen, our general lack of craftsmen, our labor union domination, the absence of artistic initiative and opportunity, and the ignorance on the part of many architects as to what the Church was and is, what it stands for, and how its quality should be expressed in artistic form, the simpler the design, in composition and detail, the better the result. The passion for "Gothic" churches has possibly done more harm than good, in spite of the fact that now there are at least a score of architects in America who can handle the style with perfect confidence where fifty years ago there was perhaps not one. To the usual parson or committee-man or benefactor or architect "Gothic" means a miniature cathedral plan, a most elaborate organization of parts, and buttresses, tracery, columns, pinnacles, battlements, crockets, gargoyles, spires, ad lib. It is not possible to employ these successfully now except under rare and favorable conditions, and where money is no object; in the case of a $20,000 country church it is out of the question. A church such as this, under these conditions, can be obtained only through recourse to a whole series of deceptions and substitutes, from steel-frame camouflaged with "cast stone," to concrete, terra cotta and papier mâché. The first law of church building is honesty, and deceitfulness makes clever design of no avail.

A perfectly good Gothic church can be constructed without any one of the details referred to above, though it may not look that way to the amateur or the newspaper reporters. There are hundreds of little churches of this sort in England and France that furnish perfect models, and if people would be content to build things like Newhaven, Sussex, rather than Long Melford, they would be better off. In order then to obtain satisfactory results within the limits indicated by the editor, the following principles should be observed:

(1) Choose an architect who has proved he can do good work and will not tolerate dishonesty in construction. There are many such in America and their work is as good as that produced anywhere else in the world today. Because an architect has done a good Odd Fellows' Hall, or apartment house, or is the nephew of the chairman of the building committee, or a communicant of the parish, or has built a successful garage for the chief contributor to the building fund, it does not necessarily follow that he can build a good church.

(2) Make the requirements of area and of elements just as small as possible. If prospect or ambitions indicate the necessity for a $40,000 church in ten years, and only half that sum can be raised now, build half the church, but build it right. If the architect is an honest man take his advice as to cost, don't rely on "approximate estimates" cooked up on sketch plans by a contractor; they are not worth the paper on which they are written.

(3) If you build piecemeal, build the sanctuary and choir first; this is the essential part of the church, for it contains the altar and provides for the sacred ministers. If most of the money goes to the chancel, put up a temporary nave of wood or plaster or anything but corrugated iron. If it proves ugly and inconvenient then the congregation will be the more generous and active in furnishing funds for a permanent nave. There is no handicap in this; our people give, in proportion to their means, about one-fifth what Roman Catholics give to the Church and they must be taught that religion and worship mean not only generosity but sacrifice.

(4) Accept nothing that is not what it seems to be. I have seen "Gothic carving" made of cement cast in a mould; steel-frame hung over with thin limestone pretending to be columns, arches and vaults; papier mâché grained to look (?) like old oak; plaster daubed up and polished to imitate marble; oiled paper masquerading as stained glass. All this is a disgrace. If you can't afford cut stone use ledge-stone or levy on old stone walls where they exist, or build in brick, or even in wood if it is treated to look like wood. No lies are admissible; begin with the altar and sanctuary, go on with the choir and then stop, unless you can build part of the nave, but do so much honestly and beautifully.

(5) Bear always in mind that richness and elaboration are not the essence of beauty; the Washington Monument is the noblest architectural structure in the United States, the Philadelphia City Hall well-nigh the ugliest. Composition, proportion, fine relationship of parts, purity of line, nobility of mass, perfection of workmanship, the evidence of the affectionate labor of the human hand, are the chief elements of good architecture. Elaborate articulation of parts and ornament are something added; good and admirable if they are beautiful in themselves, and honest and of fine craftsmanship, but they are of the bene esse, not of the esse of architecture.

The year before the war I had occasion to build a private chapel on my farm in the country. It is of solid stone construction with walls two feet thick; there is a semi-circular apse with a marble altar, a sacristy and an organ gallery; the floor is of solid masonry laid with brick, the round-topped, deeply splayed windows are filled with stained glass, while the roof is of hand-worked wood timbers. It will comfortably accommodate seventy people and it cost a little over six thousand dollars complete. True, every stone came from old walls on the farm, there are no cut-stone "trimmings," there is no plumbing, and in winter the chapel must be heated by a common stove. There is considerable unsolicited testimony that this little structure looks more like a real church than any other ecclesiastical edifice in the state.

The next year I built a convent chapel at Arlington Heights, fifty per cent bigger in every way, with heating and plumbing, an ante-chapel and two porches. This cost $12,000 though all the material was purchased. The chapel if fitted up as a parish church would seat about one hundred people.

Perhaps these two instances are indications of a possible answer to the editor's query. If people are willing to accept simplicity, honesty, straightforwardness and good proportions as furnishing the necessary modicum of beauty, and won't ask for too much "Gothic," or drive too hard a bargain with their architects and contractors, then a good and beautiful country church can be built for twenty thousand dollars.

A TRACT FOR THE TIMES

BY JOHN JAY CHAPMAN

This tract was written by Mr. Chapman as a campaign document for Christ Church, New York, which is now making a vigorous effort to pay off its debt of $155,000. Last Sunday ten teams went out two by two to visit every parishioner. Mr. Chapman was at the head of one of these teams.—EDITOR.

THE housekeeping and financial side of church life is not mere business. These parish struggles over dollars and cents are the form in which religious movements go forward.

We are anxious to pay off the debt of Christ Church and to set the church on a permanent self-supporting basis. But if the debt could be paid off suddenly by a miracle or a millionaire, this would do us no good. If every member of Christ Church congregation should be enriched by magic, so that he handed in his yearly contribution without thought or effort, the financial problem would be solved and the real problem would be paralyzed. You would not have at hand the blessed elixir by which religious feeling was to have been awakened in the hearts of many.

All these conferences, these visitations, this stirring of the spirit about a matter of debt, are the forms under which a new awakening is going forward. The debt is paying itself in the process, the debt is a blessing. The debt is obvious, imminent, comprehensible, apportionable.

It makes a sacrificial appeal to every man. The poorest and the richest are touched, and in the end the poorest are apt to be touched the more deeply. There is nothing in life, moreover, that moves a rich man so much as to see the generosity of the poor. This is a natural law, and unless the humbler classes shall give freely the donations of the rich will be scant and unavailing.

Any effort to lift a church debt begins with the congregation; but its influence immediately reaches out beyond the congregation and draws in others or reaches them even when they are not drawn in.

The financial movement now in progress at Christ Church is as important as the services that are held there. The movement itself is part of a new era issued in by the war, which has put new life into all of us. We have seen incredible things happen with incredible ease, incredible rapidity. The nature of our own society has been revealed to us. The goodness of the average man, the idealism of everyone about us has been shown to us. The war cracked open America and revealed an age of faith in full blast in her.

"MONUMENT" OR "PARLOR"?

BY TALBOT F. HAMLIN

ONE of the most outstanding facts of contemporary life is the widespread progress of a new vision of human brotherhood. Equality and Fraternity seem at last destined to take their rightful places beside the ideal of Liberty. A thousand signs point that way: signs some of us would rather not see, or, seeing, would rather misinterpret. Labor parties are springing up all over the country. Industry seethes with new ideas and vague incoherent unrest. Socialism is continually increasing in strength. All these movements are but various expressions of one underlying idea: the idea that all men are brothers, and that the essence of brotherhood is the common sharing of burdens and rewards.

If architects remain true to their responsibilities, it is inevitable that this idea of brotherhood shall find expression in their work. Yet there are scores of modern churches whose design betrays but slight evidences of this idea. Again and again they strike a note of cold perfection, of uncompromising austerity. Even the interiors seem somehow barren, despite the beauty of proportion, and the chaste restraint of detail. They seem uninhabited; the spirit of brotherhood has not yet entered in. Such an interior is tyrannical; it forces restraint; it cultivates aloofness, for it is difficult indeed to be cordial in a hard white monument.

This type of cold perfection is not universal. During the past few years there has developed an opposite type which is embodied in thousands of examples, particularly of "non-conformist" denominations, and particularly in the cities and towns of the Middle West. In these the aim has been to make a homelike church at almost any cost. Often the cost has been too great, and the idea of "meeting house" has been stressed to such an extent that the idea of "church" is lost. The church has become a mere parlor. And yet in a choice between a "monument" church and a "parlor" church, there are many who would choose the latter, because it seems more human, more welcoming, more brotherly.

The "monument" church is the result of a traditional church and a traditional architecture. The church, like any organization with a glorious history, is constantly studying its past and using it as a criterion for the present. Even the present cannot be judged entirely justly in this way, and there is always the temptation for the dim and uncertain future to be forgotten altogether—an event that at least saves much worry.

Similarly, architecture has a glorious background. It, too, must constantly evaluate the present in the light of past achievements. It, too, is under the temptation of losing real touch with facts in the process. Church architects in particular are in danger of blindness to the trend of events, for the general practitioner has the constant stimulus of the changing conditions of the problem set for his solution, whereas the problems of the church architect change little, even in minor details. The church architect's mind is full of ecclesiastical lore, and there is always present the temptation to become absorbed in and obsessed by its fascinating romance. The effect of higher standards of living reacts eventually upon the most commercial designer of a tenement; but the church remains a thing apart; and too often the church architect is dwelling in a strange country as a consequence.

The "parlor" church, on the other hand, is a result of the "will to be modern" and the Puritan temperament. It is the result of a "will to be modern" that has understood but one side of the modern trend. It is a sign of progress, but a progress merely superficial; one-sided, with little corresponding spiritual enlightenment.

The ideal church, of course, is neither a "monument" nor a "parlor." It is a church that is neither academically cold nor sickly with Victorian sentimentality. A few churches show that a beginning has been made in the building of structures which with all their beauty are not cold, but intimate and vital. To increase their number is the great task of the American church architect. He must realize that if his work is to be less aloof, he must be less aloof. He must see to it that his reaction against the false and shallow prettiness and sentimentalities of Victorian Gothic does not lead him into a barren intellectual formalism.

The parish has a duty, too. It must see that the building of its church is a real labor of love, so that the architect may always have sympathetic and enthusiastic cooperation. The architect must be made to feel the quality and taste of his clients; for no two parishes are exactly alike, and a vital church building should express the individuality of its congregation as well as the architect's skill. Too many churches look as if a hard headed building committee had gone to their chosen architect with a purse and program of material requirements, and said: "Here is our money, and here our program. Do your best," and then left him and forgotten all about it.

The ideal church will be full of human appeal. It will make an ever greater use of intimate ornament, lovingly designed. Inscriptions that are legible will help convey its message at a glance. Memorials, personal gifts, offerings of all sorts will prove it the home of an enthusiastic congregation. It will glow with color, for though we Americans have been slow to learn, we have at last begun to realize that white, be it the white of plaster, or limestone, or even marble, is at best uncompromising, at the worst a forbidding expression of intellectual and imaginative barrenness. So the ideal church will be rich and soft in tone; colored windows will soften glare, and reds and blues and dull gold will gleam from timber roof or apse-mosaic or inlaid pavement or painted wall or vault. Many of our modern churches, in their lifeless correctness, recall the cold and intellectual perfection of St. Ouen at Rouen; the ideal church will be suffused with the living and colorful beauty of Notre Dame at Paris, or the Venetian St. Mark's.

Finally, the sense of brotherhood can be produced in church architecture only by means of brotherhood within. The "human" appeal can come only by human means. To seem lived in, a church must be lived in. The great churches of the thirteenth century in France were the monuments of a great popular movement for freedom and liberty, a mighty protest against the tyrannies and abuses of both monastic and secular feudalism. If the churches of today expect their buildings to be more than mere structures erected to order for a tradition, but as beautiful, as human, as great as those churches of old, they must see to it that they themselves stand at the head of the tremendous popular movements of the day, as champions of equality, fraternity, brotherhood; and not in name only, but in industry, politics and international affairs. Only a living and enthusiastic and forward looking Church can ever hope to build for itself a home that shall be neither magnificent mausoleum nor polite parlor, but a veritable shrine of brotherhood, a true house of prayer for all who enter its doors.

THE IMPORTANCE OF THE SMALL CHURCH

BY THE REV. MILO HUDSON GATES, D.D.

THE small church is really the large problem of modern church architecture. Until this problem is solved the problem of the larger church and the largest church will remain unsolved. This is so because by far the larger number of our laity either are members or graduates of the small churches. If we do not build fitting and beautiful small churches, and so influence and educate the taste of our laity, we cannot expect that, when our men and women are called on to serve upon committees charged with building the larger and the largest churches, they will be able to bring to these tasks the taste needed. In other words, so long as we rest content with more or less ugly little churches, whether we will or not, we shall be compelled to rest content with similar sorts of larger structures.

Everyone recognizes the direct influence upon worship of good architecture. An argument to prove that the spiritual elevation of public worship is assisted by a fitting setting will hardly be called for. Good architecture affects the whole religious life of our Church; strengthens, invigorates and uplifts it. Therefore the importance of beauty in the small church, which is today and will for long continue to be the church of most of us.

Unfortunately, the small church usually is considered so unimportant that we have not cared much about its architecture. There are many signs, however, that this neglect is about to be ended; that no longer the ecclesiastical landscape is to be strewn with horrible little monuments of Gothic pretense, local ignorance and sometimes, alas, local fraud. The small church might well pray to be saved from its friends as well as to be rescued from neglect, because, when the start is made for even the littlest church in the littlest parish or mission, it is astounding how many, either of the vestry or the official board, have friends, or know those who have friends, or worse, have relatives who are architects or builders, and who out of the greatness of their hearts, or something else, are willing to furnish plans for nothing, or "for much less than the usual architect's fees." Then, also, the interested layman who knows where a lot of land can be bought for almost nothing, or worse yet, the friend who wishes to donate a lot. How strange it is that these lots are so generally on back streets or out-of-the-way places, and how geologically wonderful it is that they are almost always so swampy, or so barren and unfertile; where you could not possibly raise a healthy potato, there is the place where the church is expected to thrive.

So, the first problem is the problem of the site, and the first advice is this: If it is a question between quite a good building, or a tent, or a church whose style of architecture may, perhaps, be described as "Y Hutesque," or a good site, by all means vote for the latter. The storekeeper in the small town who expects to succeed and to have his trade grow is usually wiser in his generation than the building committee of the new Episcopal church. He knows the value of the common, or the corner of the principal street, and so did all our Yankee ancestors, as every New England village common proves.

As to the form of the building: and here I state that the small church I am thinking of and which, as I said at the start, seems to constitute the most difficult of our architectural problems, ought, perhaps, to be called "the smallest church." I mean the church to cost not more than seven or eight thousand dollars; perhaps, to cost not more than four or five thousand dollars. Can such a building be erected, and if it is erected, will it be worth even the small sum that it costs? The problem now resolves itself into two. First, that of a building in a place where the church will grow; where, in the future, there is reasonable certainty that a better and larger building will be needed. Either one of two plans may here be adopted. First, to erect a building which, by and by, without serious change may be turned into a parish house, and which for the time may be used both as a church and parish house. Second, to have a suitable plan for the future church and to build solidly part of this and to build temporarily part of it, and then, as numbers increase and finances improve, continue on this plan. Many of our best churches were started this way. In other words, they have grown from basements. Wherever there is even a hope of such development this is the plan to be followed.

The second of the small church problems is considerably more difficult. This is where there is no sort of hope, reasonable or unreasonable, that any other structure will ever be needed. The first essential to the solution of this problem is that the little church shall simply sing with sincerity. Beware of the "Gothic effect," of the "picturesque effect," and the "dear little church effect." The little haybarn with pointed windows and stained glass, a brass lecturn glowingly lacquered, carved wood pulpit and a marble altar, is not Gothic, even though it cries aloud that it is.

Getting a lot of round stones and building a wall six or seven feet high, which resembles an old-fashioned cobblestone street, and topping this with a very peaked wood roof with beams inside ornamented with jig-saw scroll work, is neither picturesque nor a stone church, though everybody may call it "stone" and ecstasize over its picturesqueness.

I must confess that while I usually agree with my friends, the architects, about the value of stone and brick as being so real and substantial, I am not so much afraid of wood as many of them are. It is certainly possible to build a wooden church which shall be as honest, as real and as dignified as stone. I feel that I shall now incur the architectural condemnation of my friends. But, as I remember the first St. Mary's by the Sea, at Northeast Harbor, all of wood, built with rough beams, slabs and shingles, but built on excellent lines and with good proportions, and contrast it with the very academic and English structure which replaced it, I am disposed to feel that the first St. Mary's was more real than the second, though the first was wood and the second stone.

In many small parishes there is often equal need for both church and parish house, and yet the congregation may not be able to afford both buildings. It may be possible to solve the problem in this way: an interesting church building recently has been erected by Bishop Page at Omak in his diocese. A church in good form has been erected. This is divided by a folding partition so that two rooms are made—one called the parish hall, 35 by 21 feet, and the other, the church, about 30 by 21 feet. For the usual congregation this gives seating capacity for about sixty people. When larger congregations come the partitions are opened and the entire building can be used. A variation of this may be made and folding partitions be thrown across, dividing the building into three or more sections. The sanctuary may be partitioned off so that for social occasions that part of the building can be closed. In fact, by this means there is no difficulty in securing a number of rooms.

The little church will, of course, have a plain timbered roof. No one will think of filling in the panels with plaster. Its floor will be plain boards. It will abhor carpets, rugs and druggets. It will not fear square windows. It will not be over-anxious to be cruciform. In point of fact, its nave will be plain, simple, even bare; but, by elevating and arranging the chancel properly, an atmosphere of beauty, reverence and dignity may be produced. The barest altar may be adorned with beautiful hangings. It is usually better to omit the chancel window in a small church and to have back of the altar hangings of simple stuffs, which may be of different colors, arranged in panels and changed according to the seasons.

But here it should be insisted that these arrangements and the stuffs and colors should not be allowed to be bought of the ecclesiastical tradesman or chosen by the altar guild. Seek advice. There are several societies interested in this work—both here and in England—St. Dunstan's, for instance, in England, and St. Hilda's Guild in this country. The American Ecclesiological Society has a section upon "The Arts of the Church" which will furnish advice gladly.

Perhaps the most hopeful thing which has come to pass recently is the adoption in several dioceses of canons establishing commissions, which are really for the diocese what the municipal art commissions are for the city. A few of the dioceses have wisely made it mandatory to seek the guidance and advice of these commissions. Some of our greatest architects, with the generosity and enthusiasm so characteristic of great architects, are giving advice gratuitously. Many of these men can ill afford such gifts. I hope to live to see the day when, if not the diocese, then the province, shall be able to employ at just wages either a provincial architect or a provincial board of architects to build the small churches.

For the small church itself has a harder architectural problem than the large church. The parish that can afford to build a large church can afford a good, capable architect. The parish that can build only a small church, and feels that it cannot afford to have a good, capable architect, the diocese or province should assist and thus assist in elevating the taste of our people as well as the beauty of the worship of our small congregations.

Some of my friends versed in the history of early colonial house building tell me that the reason why all over the eastern country in the early days such beautiful cottages, farmhouses and village residences were built was due to the fact that Asher Benjamin published a book called The Country Builder's Assistant, and so, when anybody wanted a new house he found in that book all the directions needed. Perhaps, if we could have a Small Church Builder's Assistant, there would be similar results in the matter of ecclesiastical architecture. It is often difficult to get a country parish building committee to consult an architect. Sometimes this is not the fault of the building committee, for I sadly recollect a number of instances when I have, myself, persuaded building committees to consult an architect who has been instructed to prepare plans for a church to cost $7,000, say, and then found the nearest bid they could get was $20,000. Also apparently it will be some time before the church can be persuaded to consult with or to be directed by a commission. Committees are curiously fearful of commissions. By all means let us have a Small Church Builder's Assistant, and then let the local committee and the local carpenter work out the problem. If the results from the using of the Small Church Builder's Assistant shall be half as good as the results were from The Country Builder's Assistant, we shall have much for which to be thankful.

THE GREAT ADVENTURE

ONLY those are fit to live who do not fear to die, and none are fit to die who have shrunk from the joy of life and the duty of life. Both life and death are parts of the same great adventure.—Theodore Roosevelt.

THE CHURCH OF THE INDIFFERENT MAN

BY TABER SEARS

IN this day of change, when social unrest stalks abroad and the approach of Bolsheviki is heralded on every side, when a hundred thousand of our boys will begin new lives in new surroundings, informed minds ask the question of the fitness of our church edifices to meet the new situations, and the best way to fulfil the needs of the newcomer. One advantage the church has from the first, for the newcomer has already the habit of discussion in assembly. Perhaps he has attended the camp-fire talk, or, on occasion the community forum, where the inequalities of the day are discussed. Whatever his point of view, the habit of assembly to listen to ideas is well grounded.

In what manner, then, can the Church, by the conditions of its physical structure, extend the spirit of fellowship with God.

It would never do for us to count much on our traditions to hold a really healthy Bolshevik, at least not yet. He seldom strays to church for ritual, but to find his place in a new and uncertain environment, as a lodger in a new town. Therefore, not to see and not to hear would be deplorable. To offset these difficulties, it would appear, then, at first thought that the church centrally planned comes nearer the ideal condition than the long nave. Such a plan based on the cross form with equal arms or the octagon or circle eliminates to a certain extent those non-committal rear pews. It tends to focus attention on the pulpit, but it is to the disadvantage of the long choir because the view of the altar may be partly cut off from the transepts. Moreover, a preaching church, as this central type may be called, depending so much on the successful sermon, does not offer ample scope for ritual. Surely the stranger's attendance cannot be left to persuasion from Sunday to Sunday. A circular plan, whole or in part, is more expensive to build upon, and conditions of site are seldom favorable.

In the second case, that of the long and narrow nave, usually in a city church, the position of the pulpit at one side of the nave and away from the chancel corrects the disadvantages of distance at sermon time. It has of course the basic advantage of direct approach toward the altar and not from an angle. Although the stranger may not come to church for ritual, we must remember that many thousands of our population are from parts of Europe where a ritualistic service is traditional. To gain their adherence by well organized effort on our part becomes an interesting challenge.

On this side of the Atlantic, we are seldom extremists in matters of building plan, which makes it a little easier to adjust our work to new uses. Questions of site, economies and architectural decisions must account for a great deal in the evolution of church form, whatever the social exigencies. The grim shadow of the pilgrim fathers still extends over the worshiping church in favor of the reasoning church, as all New England can testify. Rather more than in England, our edifices assimilate differences; our country church, for instance, is seldom of an extreme design, and the high walls and tiny floor space one sees sometimes in European hamlets do not suit our aims. The quality of being native to its environment carries a welcome with it, always supposing that the environment is worth while. One of the reasons of pronounced style in an ancient European church is that it was erected amid pronounced social and religious customs. If therefore, customs have been and are to be much less fixed in America and our building methods are more adaptable, then we are in a better position for growth. For instance there is Trinity in Boston and Old Trinity in New York, the one having a central plan and the other a long but not narrow nave. Neither is extreme, and both are adaptable.

There is much yet to achieve in stained glass for direct educative and idealistic influence. Windows have been too often casually chosen. On the one hand, glass cannot be twisted into naturalistic mountains and waterfalls without loss of dignity to its setting. On the other, good Gothic glass does not depend for inspiration on a variety of copes, mitres and insignia. The truth about Gothic and pre-Renaissance pictorial art is that by its systems of compositions, it portrays the emotions as no other art can, whether as worship, exaltation, philosophy or sacrifice. It is supreme in scenes of action. In its simpler forms, it is entirely applicable to modern religious experience and its value for the questioning mind has been overlooked. Its traditional vestiture is not its essential, else it could not be the great art which it is. What is urgent to-day is a readjustment of subjects for the purpose of explaining real biblical and social values. As with painting, little progress can be made with a serious subject glossed over or lost in sugary forms. A hint from experiences of the war advises us that identity of aim carries unity and success with it. Our effort in choosing subjects should be to meet on as broad a ground as possible and to hold their lessons in common. For example, the parable of the Good Samaritan should appeal to a large following, but the parable of the Vineyard might not. Representations of the Divine Sacrifice have been withheld oftentimes through a lack of unity in the point of view of a congregation but with our losses in the war and the preparation of mind which our returning soldiers must possess, what association could be nearer the heart than the Supreme Sacrifice? If the main edifice is not yet ready for it, then the devotional chapel may be.

One is told that if the restless spirit is to be attracted, we must seek clarity in belief, a frank theology, direct affirmations and the power to make good employed with no uncertain hand. To these ends good church art is sure evidence of friendliness. With the trend of art so strongly set in other activities, its appeal cannot well be ignored, and, on a basis of religion, philosophy and truth, the outcome must be, in a sense, democratic. One of its ancient glories is to show forth strong men in the midst of their spiritual problems. Have we used our opportunities in church art to advantage? Not if the showing correctly represents us.

It is part of our responsibility to plan the church along the lines of American growth if we are to reach out for influence among the churchless millions. It is all very well that the edifice is comfortable, well lighted and ventilated, sanitary and an efficient place to gather in. No one would change these things but they are of the earth, earthy. For inspiration the world would make a path to any door. The really beautiful church, large or small, must continue to be a place for withdrawal as well. We would prefer a fairly dark church, rather than a very light one, allowing the light expert to direct and focus the light but not to dissipate it, for meditation and concentration are sadly interfered with when the attention is distracted by personality and feathers. One need not read, if the service is known by heart, and who can sing more than twenty hymns with full knowledge and understanding? The scope of the community chorus, now coming to the fore, does not extend beyond a score of songs.

Only the confident person will prophesy the coming of a new "era of reason and common sense" so called. Should it come to pass, however, the opportunity to absorb it will remain with us. We should have to meet it with a church of normal proportions, and with the problem of congregation in mass. If the old conditions must be relinquished, the new ones will be many.

SOLDIERS OF THE WOODEN CROSS

BY THE RT. REV. CHARLES HENRY BRENT, D.D.

THE lips of a British war poet, before they were hushed in death by the battle's stern lullaby, were stung into song in an immortal sonnet:

If I should die, think only this of me:
There is some corner of a foreign field
That is forever England.

Rupert Brooks here gives the keynote of the soldiers who have earned by the supreme sacrifice the highest and proudest of all decorations, the Wooden Cross. Medals that adorn the uniform tell of courage and endurance and heroism that braved the worst for the cause. Their wearers live to hear the acclaim of their comrades. But there is another decoration, the commonest even though the most distinguished of all, the Wooden Cross that is awarded only to the men who have done the greatest thing that man—yes, even God—can do. Greater love hath no man than this, that he lay down his life for his friends.

Now that "grim-visaged war has smoothed his wrinkled front," we gather to pay simple homage to our comrades who have the supreme distinguishment of the Wooden Cross. Yonder they lie, along that front where with face to the foe they counted not their lives dear unto themselves but bore the standard of liberty onward. Above their graves rise the sheltering arms of the rough-hewn cross than which no fitter monument ever reared its form over mortal remains.

Our comrades they were. Our comrades they are. Death was powerless in the face of their bold daring to rob us of them or them of us. They are separated now from us, not by the gaping gulf of time but by a veil so thin that at times we almost see their figures through its waving folds. They live—live gloriously in the land of far distances. Death stripped them of nothing essential. In the permanent society of the world beyond this they think and speak and see and love. They are what they were, except so far as the river of death has washed away the dust of earth and left them cleaner and better by reason of this their last great adventure. They keep pace with us, and we must keep pace with them.

One Army of the living God,
To His command we bow;
Part of the host has crossed the flood,
And part is crossing now.

We cannot rehearse the story of each one's going as he went over the top to meet the foe, and found his rendezvous with death on shell-scarred slope or battered hill, or in some flaming town or maze of tangled wire. The same dauntless spirit moved them, one and all. There was something dearer than life. To it they gave themselves and their all, and won the decoration of the Wooden Cross. Here, for instance, is a chaplain whose unstudied cry as the finger of death touched him was: "Father, I thank Thee for this affliction." Not that he courted pain as in itself a blessing, but as an opportunity to show God and men that he was able in all things to be a super-victor. Now it is not a chaplain but a dough-boy that is smitten. "Buddy," says his comrade who holds him while his life rushes out in a crimson flood—"Buddy, have you any message for the folks at home?" "Yes," is the prompt reply of the dying Galahad. "Tell them I went as clean as I came." Again, look at that stiff, silent body, much of the glory of its splendid manhood still lingering behind as though loath to abandon the well-knit form. Death in him is not ugly or repulsive. His left hand still clutches the bosom of his shirt which he tore aside in order that his right hand might hold through death his crucifix, the symbol of his faith. He, though dead, speaketh:

Nothing in my hand I bring,
Simply to Thy Cross I cling.

These men and a myriad more are calling to us, calling to us and bidding us to carry on. If we would still hold to their comradeship we must display in life the spirit they displayed in death. We must live for the things for which they died. They "went West" beyond the sun. Soon in another sense shall we, please God, go West—west across the sea—to that dear land, America, that is impatient for the pressure of our feet. We must make ourself fit to meet, with unshamed brow, wife, sweetheart, sister, mother. Our going may not be to lower our sense of service and look for any reward except opportunity to serve again and better. Patriotism finds in war only a starting point for peace. That which we have achieved by victory we must weave into the fabric of the new world and the new age. The Wooden Cross of our dead comrades is for them a glorious decoration. For us it is the banner of our life that is to be. It challenges us to hold more precious than mortal life ideals of honor, justice, and righteousness. After all, the Cross that redeemed the world was a wooden cross, too, was it not? It was no toy or pretty bauble, but a thing of nails and pain and death—and yet a thing of glory. According to its pattern we shape our own Cross.

An address given by Bishop Brent, Senior Chaplain of the A. E. F. Memorial Services held with the Regiments (305th, 306th, 307th Inf.) of the 77th Division near Chateau Villain, January 5, 1919.

THE COMMUNAL PARISH HOUSE

BY HOBART B. UPJOHN

IT is perhaps a sign of the times that the trend of thought is turning in earnest toward the great sociological problems which have been developing for some time and with which the war seems to have brought us face to face.

It was not many years ago when the social life of the people was kept up in the individual houses of a community and we had even in our larger cities centres which represented what we call sets. Social functions and church society meetings were held in these homes. But with the increased cost of living the home has decreased and the old-fashioned party is a thing of the past—even the front parlor is eliminated and we have come to adopt kitchenette apartments and part-time servants. These conditions have brought about a state of affairs one evidence of which is shown in the fact that people in larger cities do not mix and even may live in the same building for years together and not know each other. The poorhouse, homes for the aged and infirm, the Potter's field and the morgue are only evidences of the desire to shift personal responsibility on to the Government, a state of affairs deadening to the soul. The young people brought up in such homes can of necessity have no social life unless such life is brought them from the outside.

But while this is the case of our growing cities, the war has developed still more intensely the sociological problems. The high cost of materials and labor stopped building entirely and in the development of large plants the housing of great concentrations of labor had to be met by the Government. When the new towns were projected little thought was given to the community life, but the realization of the necessity for provision for such life was felt more and more as these developments were worked out and the community building was incorporated at last as the solution.

In many foreign cities, especially in the warm belt, this need is met by the plaza, an enclosed square usually dominated over by the principal church, into which on evenings and Saturday nights especially the people gather and have their friendly intercourse.

In the Middle Ages the Church was the sponsor and supervisor of the social life of the people; it was the centre around which all their lives swung, and today we are trying to return somewhat to these conditions by adding to our church group a building which shall represent and provide means for bringing the people of its parish together under good and wholesome conditions and at the same time provide these lost opportunities of the home. Here should be held church gatherings of every sort, dinners, sociables, dances, games and every opportunity held out for young people to meet under proper supervision. We must give up the old idea of the past years and face conditions as they really are.

The seed and start of the parish house obviously was the Sunday School, and from this has grown a more and more complex type of building, covering varied and expanding requirements as the social problem has developed. The parish house today in its simplest element consists of a room capable of being used, first as a Sunday School room, secondly as a theatre, thirdly as a dance hall, fourthly as a gymnasium and playroom, and fifthly as a dining room. By the equipment of this room these various uses can be developed in the smallest type of parish house. In addition to this room there should be the stage with its dressing rooms and a room which can be used as a kitchen and Bible class room. From this unit building the parish house develops into the more complex type, with swimming pool, gymnasium, graded Sunday School, guild rooms and committee rooms, together with parish offices for the carrying on of the business side of the church work. Between these two extremes may be grouped all types of parish houses, and the solution of any problem depends to a large extent upon the selection of the duties which the parish house is to perform.

A PLACE WHERE THE BOYS AND GIRLS CAN BE HAPPY

AN ASSEMBLY ROOM COZY AND COMFORTABLE, BUT ALSO WORKABLE

In the present article we have endeavored to assume a parish house which shall solve the average sociological problem of a middle sized town. On this assumption we first think of the Sunday School room and have planned to house 300, a fair sized room capable of easy transformation. To this is added a stage and two dressing rooms, which may be used as individual classrooms or, as in some cases, a superintendent's room and Sunday School library. Ample kitchen arrangements for serving in this room are provided. The parish such as we imagine will have its women's guild and women's auxiliary, for which we provide a general social room. And here let us emphasize a thought that seems to be essential. A parish house should be designed as the home of the parish in such a way that it attracts and will encourage its use by all interested from the mere fact that it is at once and the same time a workable building and on the other hand a cozy and comfortable building. For this reason the social room must be attractively designed and furnished. A small parish office for the rector and a corresponding secretary is provided. This completes the equipment of the first floor.

On the second floor will be provided rooms for the Junior Auxiliary, the King's Daughters, and an extra room for an additional society that may desire housing. The third room is designed large enough to house a kindergarten in the week days and the primary department of the Sunday School on Sunday. It is placed remote from the main Sunday School room in order that the singing will not interfere with the use of the main room. In order to accomplish and fulfil the various uses which these rooms may be put to, such as Bible classes on Sunday and various societies during the week, a series of closets connected with these rooms is always desirable, into which any special paraphernalia connected with the societies using the rooms may be kept separate and distinct from the work of the other guilds. Of course, the rooms are definitely assigned to the use of the various societies, such as the King's Daughters and the Junior Auxiliary, and they by virtue of proprietorship would furnish and hang their records on the walls and install fittings which will connect the room with their particular work. In the basement it is assumed that the housing of the boys' societies may be provided for. At the rear of this room would be a gymnasium and adjoining a swimming pool and bath. This gym may be used as well by the girls' societies, and a private staircase allows of its use without interference.

The cost of such a building varies with the adoption of the material of construction. At the present time it is almost impossible to state what costs may be on account of the unstable condition of material and labor. However, under usual and ordinary circumstances, such a building as here described would run $30,000 more or less. While these plans exhibit a parish house more elaborate than some parishes can afford, the same principles should govern a smaller building.

THE BOOK OF ME

BY ABBIE FARWELL BROWN

I DO not know the history that lies
Beyond the present page; I may not peer
Further than where one sets the marker here,
At this day's chapter. Not with childish eyes
Shall I anticipate the next surprise,
Nor flutter through the leaves in hope or fear,
To learn the story's end, however near,
And foil the Author's loving mysteries.

There may be pain, unbearable if guessed
Through waiting hours; but soon forgotten, blent
Into the plot whereby I live and look.
There must be joy—no story so unblessed
As to miss that. I trust and am content;
Until a timely Finis ends the book.

NEWS OF THE CHURCH

A Word to Church People

AS you have been advised, February 9 has been set aside to raise the $250,000 needed to conclude the war work of the Church. The War Commission has sent posters to be displayed in conspicuous places in the entrances of churches, and has sent pamphlets with the request that they be placed in the hands of the people.

It is needless for the War Commission to impress upon you the importance of the work of the Church in carrying on the activities during demobilization. As you have doubtless seen in the papers, our men, with the exception of the Army of Occupation, will be coming home from April to September. While these men are overseas, or in camps in our own country, the Church must prosecute its work with even greater vigor than during the war. Our chaplains are still in the field, the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, the Girls' Friendly Society, the Church Periodical Club, and other agencies through which the War Commission has worked, are dependent on the support of the Church.

From every quarter the War Commission receives commendation for the war work the Church is doing. The credit is not the commission's. It belongs to the members of our Church who have supported the work, and to the self-sacrificing men and women who have carried it on in the camp, in the cities, on the seas, and in Europe.

Let's make the last war contribution one of our Church's great successes.

BISHOP TUTTLE PARISH HOUSE IS NOW COMPLETE

Built by Friends Everywhere, Is Ready for Service

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.—The parish house of the Bishop Tuttle Commemorative Church has been completed. It stands on a commanding corner in a part of the city which ought to furnish a wide field of future usefulness. The building is of tapestry brick, trimmed with bedford stone. The first floor is fitted up solely for chapel uses. The second floor is a spacious assembly room, with stage at one end and a gallery suitable for orchestra or movie machine at the other. This room contains a large fireplace of grey stone and oaken mantelpiece. Choir rooms are in the basement, where also is a large club room and a kitchen. The cost of lot and building has been about $40,000, of which about one-fourth has come from St. Louis and the balance from friends of Bishop Tuttle everywhere.

BOARD OF RELIGIOUS EDUCATION SHOWS A REMARKABLE PROGRESS

Bishop Tuttle has dedicated a number of memorials, including a beautiful silver Communion set given by Mrs. Samuel Rockwell, Jr., of Cleveland, in memory of her parents, Spilman Palmer Taft and Helen Wells Taft, who were members of St. Mark's Church, Salt Lake City, when Bishop Tuttle had charge of it over fifty years ago. There are also many other appropriate memorials given by members of St. Mary's Congregation whose new place of worship this new building is designed to be.

The dedication of the parish house will be in the near future. It is hoped that some day soon a rectory may be built alongside the parish house, and, eventually, a beautiful church.

BISHOP BRENT RETURNS AFTER WORK IN FRANCE

Has Only Words of Praise for Chaplains at Front

A casual officer on the Celtic arriving last week in New York was Major C. H. Brent, senior chaplain of the A. E. F.

"I have a higher respect than ever for the men of the American nation," said the bishop to a reporter. "I have watched them at work and at play, with the fire of the enemy in both instances practically over their heads, and nothing that can be said in praise of the American soldier can, to my mind, be too extravagant. I have watched closely the Forty-second, Twenty-seventh and Seventy-seventh divisions during my stay in France and their work has been remarkable."

Major Brent said here the 1,300 chaplains of all denominations with the American Expeditionary Force are doing their work thoroughly and making fine records for themselves.

Bishop Brent returned to his diocese this week.

He was planning to spend three days in Rochester, then to go to Buffalo for the meeting of his diocesan council on February 6 and to sail again for France on February 11 after only a week in the United States.

SEAMEN'S INSTITUTE HAS NEW EXECUTIVE SECRETARY

SHELBURNE, VERMONT.—The Rev. George W. Davenport, who has been rector of St. Paul's Church, Burlington, since June, 1915, has resigned the rectorship of the parish and has accepted the appointment of executive secretary of the Seamen's Church Institute of America, with headquarters at the Seamen's Church Institute in New York. Mr. Davenport, who was previously secretary of the missionary department of New England, came to St. Paul's, succeeding the Rt. Rev. George Y. Bliss, when the latter was chosen bishop coadjutor of Vermont. His removal from Burlington will be a distinct loss not only to St. Paul's Parish, where he has labored ably and successfully, but also to the diocese.

At Annual Meeting Votes to Raise $22,000 for New Work

INFORMATION AND EXPERT OPINION TO BE DEVELOPED

Declaring that the Christian Church is girding herself, as never before, to assist the nation, Dr. Gardner, general secretary of the Board of Religious Education, opened the annual meeting of the board in New York, January 29. He urged the necessity of immediately developing expert opinion and expert operation in religious education, if the Church is to contribute to the nation-wide movement in education which must soon grip the imagination of a Democracy that is fundamentally Christian.

With this lead the board spent two days examining into the conditions of religious education in the parishes, church preparatory schools, church colleges and state universities. It voted to gather the information and develop the expert opinion that would make administration in all these fields more effective. As this information and expert opinion must be secured at the earliest moment, the board voted to raise immediately $22,000 above the apportionment for the following four objects:

1. To establish "inquiry stations" at one eastern and one western university where the board will maintain men of ability who will study the interests, ideals and ambitions of students, and determine for the Church the methods in awakening the students' interest in those Christian elements that are essential to national and individual life, and in providing helpful worship and pastoral care welcomed by students.

2. To establish at Toledo, Ohio, another week-day church school similar to the one successfully conducted by the board for three years at Gary, Indiana, where an expert teacher is making an inquiry into the possible methods by which the Church can teach religion to public school children.

3. To provide a secretary who will carefully develop a policy which the Church may maintain for advertising our church preparatory schools, especially in the West and for the improvement of their administration, their worship and courses of sacred studies.

4. To establish a permanent reserve fund of $5,000 from which money may be temporarily borrowed to protect the credit of the board during the time when the income from the apportionments is not in hand.

The Rev. R. A. Hiltz, general secretary of the Sunday School Commission in Canada, attended all the meetings and addressed the board.

In presenting his sixth annual report, Dr. Gardner summarized the principal achievements of the board during the past year in statements which in part follow:

We have so economized and administered our finances that we have paid $2,226.61 of the unpaid bills of 1917, all the expenses of 1918, and closed the year with a surplus of $1,509.93.

Incorporated the board under the Laws of the State of New York.

Placed three secretaries at the disposal of the Church. These have addressed over 150 meetings, conferences, summer schools, synods, conventions, etc.

Encouraged diocesan and provincial boards so that they are employing paid workers. Eighteen are now giving full or part time in directing religious education.

In the field of theological education:

Fulfilled the request of the General Convention and completed an inquiry concerning desirable changes in the education of men for the ministry and taken steps toward formulating a canon.

We are developing a movement for life work dinners for high school boys, when the subject of vocation is presented and especially the call to the ministry.

With the cooperation of the Pension Fund Office, made an inquiry into the ministerial supply of the Province of the Mid-West as to salaried posts and vacancies. This inquiry was a test looking toward a general inquiry into the condition of the whole Church.

In the field of collegiate education:

Assembled the Church's leaders in student work in two conferences, one in 1917 and one in 1918, where they have discussed the nation-wide difficulties in holding the student loyal to the Church. As a result of these conferences the National Student Council of the Episcopal Church has been organized with the secretary of the Department of Collegiate Education as president, and with headquarters at the central office.

Mr. Micou has made possible Communion services for Japanese and Chinese students in their native tongue, and is also urging in student centres a more hospitable welcome to foreign students on the part of the Church.

In the field of parochial education:

Co-operated with other Christian communities so that a teacher training movement is on throughout the nation.

As a result of his inquiry into the educational work among the Indians, Dr. Gardner is providing lessons on the Christian religion that are being translated into the Niobrara language and used in all the Indian churches and homes of South Dakota.

In the field of secondary education:

Dealing with the state of education Dr. Gardner urged that all advance would depend on national movements as illustrated by the Fisher Education Bill, which organizes England to mobilize her youth for education and equip them to meet the future burdens of citizenship. In the sphere of religious education nationalization has begun in England.

"Here in America there is no voice to speak with such authority as the committee in England appointed by the archbishops; there is no group that can nationalize and make corporate and raise on high the contribution that religion must make to education.

"I see little possibility of a large compelling national movement in religious education in the near future. I think it must wait for a more effective nationalization of our general educational plan. I would submit that the important task for us is to prepare for the larger movement that some day must grip the imagination of a Democracy that is fundamentally Christian, and I believe that our immediate task lies along two lines: I believe that we should begin preparation for the accumulation of expert opinion and expert operation in religious education.

"I see the Church girding herself for great activities. The movement to ask the General Convention to create an 'executive board,' the desire of some of the provinces to have more responsibility and power, the movement to subdivide the provinces west of the Mississippi in order that they may be more effective units of church life—all mean that slowly we will assume the task which God intends we shall perform in the life of this nation. I am jealous that we prepare for that day. The world is too satisfied with a 50% product of efficiency from the Church. It rather expects that the Church will not be efficient. It is too ready to excuse and tolerate her inefficiencies."

Dr. Bradner, director of the parochial department, presented his report in which the following significant items were stressed:

The falling off in church school enrollments.

This constitutes a most serious situation. A comparison of figures given in the Living Church Almanac covering two years past, show a total decrease in two years of 56,269 pupils, which is at least ten per cent. of the previous enrollment in our church schools. By action of the board this situation was commended to the department for special study and for the devising of methods to meet the situation as immediately as possible.

The whole field and system of teacher training.

The department provided for the publishing of a new training guide in the Christian Nurture Lessons which will be issued within several months.

The department found evidences of a new and growing movement for a group system of supervision of church schools where several parishes unite to engage an educational expert for training teachers and advisory assistance in the conduct of their church schools.

The director reported that in the last three years nine new courses had been installed in the Christian Nurture Series, making now in all a complete graded system of fourteen courses, all of which will be available in print this coming fall.

The councils of the department dealing with the Christian Nurture Lessons were reappointed for the ensuing year. An additional council was also provided for on The Use of the Dramatic Art in the Church, the Rev. Carroll Lund Bates of Rome, New York, being appointed as its chairman.

A report was made of the fine co-operation of our church schools with the campaign for Armenian and Syrian Relief. Records thus far received show $10,109 secured through the efforts of the General Board for this purpose from the church schools of the country.

During the year Mr. William Fellowes Morgan resigned as treasurer of the board. Mr. Archibald Kains, formerly of San Francisco and now of New York, was elected to fill the vacancy. Mr. Kains is the president of the American Foreign Banking Corporation.

During the year the treasurer received $30,666.62 from the apportionments of 72 dioceses and from gifts and other sources.

A dinner for the members of the board and invited guests was served at the Aldine Club on Wednesday evening.

MISS MARY BOND, who is a member of the congregation of Christ Church Cathedral, St. Louis, has recently been appointed to the responsible position of social service matron in the St. Louis city hospital. The institution has an enrollment of something over seven hundred patients.

BISHOP GREER ARRANGES

UNION LENTEN SERVICES

Clergymen of Many Denominations to Preach at Cathedral

As an instance of continued church cooperation after the war, Bishop Greer has announced that plans already had been determined on for the joint observance of Lent this year by the various Christian denominations in New York. Union meetings will be held throughout Lent in various sections of the city. These meetings will culminate Holy Week, when, each day except Saturday, services will be held in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, conducted and presided over by clergymen of other denominations.

"Unquestionably we must readjust our moral and religious standards as well as our physical standards of living and methods of business as a result of the war," said Bishop Greer in an interview given to the New York Tribune. "We must co-operate. The spiritual lessons of the war have been learned no less than the physical lessons.

"As a concrete example of this there was a meeting held in my offices some days ago of what I may term the outstanding representatives of the different Christian denominations. Among those present was the moderator of the Presbytery of New York and representatives of the Baptist, Methodist, Congregational, Dutch Reformed and other Churches. At this meeting was arranged the joint observance of Lent in the churches of New York. The details will be determined by a committee, probably composed of two members from each denomination. I have already appointed two representatives from the Episcopal Church. These representatives will meet shortly and arrange for united services throughout Lent in different parts of the city.

"The whole theory of these united services will be consummated during Holy Week, when united services will be held at five o'clock each day except Saturday in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine. After a brief prayer and song service the daily meeting will be addressed by a clergyman of another denomination.

"The list of speakers has not been entirely decided on, but probably Dr. Charles E. Jefferson (Congregationalist) and Dr. Charles L. Goodell (Methodist) will be among those to conduct services. This will be a practical and concrete illustration of what I hope will take place all over the world."

Bishop Greer discussed the effect service in the army and navy, both in this country and abroad, would have on the men engaged after their return to civil life. This, he said, would depend largely on the previous education and individual temperament of each.

"We are facing a serious period. There is a spirit of unrest, a spirit of dissatisfaction, not only in business, social and civic life, but in spiritual life. In peace, as in war, every man must do his bit, and a big bit. No man is big enough, or wise enough, to offer a solution of these problems or to foretell what the outcome will be.

"I believe the experiment in New York which I have outlined is a step in the right direction. We must co-operate. It was necessary to do it to gain success in the great struggle on the other side of the Atlantic. I am going to do it here. I hope this co-operation and the removal of denominational obstructions will spread throughout the world. Some people won't like it, but we can't help that."

RECTOR FOUND GUILTY OF VIOLATING ORDINANCE

Grass Valley Clergyman Refused to Wear a Mask

GRASS VALLEY, CALIFORNIA.—The Rev. Bert Foster, rector of Emmanuel Church has been found guilty of violating the ordinance providing for the wearing of masks during the prevalence of influenza here.

It is very probable that an appeal of the case will be made to the Superior Court. Mr. Foster has acted as his own attorney in these proceedings.

The jury was out only a short time and recommended mercy. Mr. Foster made a long argument in pleading for acquittal, telling of troubles in his parish and asserting his arrest was the result of a conspiracy against him.

At the time of the first influenza epidemic here, Mr. Foster was sharply criticized for his disregard of the order of the health authorities against public assemblies, and he was called before the County Council of Defense in regard to the matter.

The Council of Defense called upon all to patriotically assist in controlling the situation, and the meeting was followed by announcement that all violators of the rules would be arrested.

BISHOP ISRAEL TO HAVE SPLENDID RECEPTION HOME

Cathedral of Erie Devotes an Even- ing to Progress

ERIE, PENNSYLVANIA.—On the evening of January 25 the cathedral chapter gave a dinner to the congregation to discuss a reception for Bishop Israel upon his return from France, and also important parochial matters. The dining hall was made beautiful with the flag of the Republic and the flags of the allied nations, which were waving everywhere. A generous donor had presented the cathedral with the beautiful flags. Covers were laid for over three hundred.

Before the evening was over, it had been decided to give Bishop Israel, upon his return, a reception inviting all the clergy of the diocese, his clerical brethren of other communions in the city of Erie, and all civic and social organizations. Then funds were asked to pay a debt of $7,000 incurred before the cathedral had reached its present condition of financial solvency, and to make some necessary improvements. At once $12,000 was given. Since that time the fund has grown to $15,000 and continues to increase every day, until the chapter is expecting that $20,000 will be reached.

CHURCHMAN AWARDED ONE OF FOUR MEDALS OF HONOR

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.—Among the splendid churchmen given by St. Louis to the great war was Capt. Alexander R. Skinker, a member of the Church of St. Michael and All Angels, and a devoted and most efficient teacher in the Sunday School. Captain Skinker was killed in action in the Argonne Forest in September, 1918. Following his death, Captain Skinker was recommended for the Distinguished Service Cross and a report on the events of his action sent to General Pershing. When investigation had been made, the Medal of Honor, the highest award conferred by the United States upon its soldiers and sailors, was awarded by the President in the name of Congress to Captain Skinker.

It is understood in St. Louis that only four Medals of Honor have been awarded for service in the late war. The citation is, in part, as follows:

"Unwilling to sacrifice his men when his company was held up by terrific machine-gun fire from iron pill boxes in the Hindenburg line, Captain Skinker personally led an automatic rifleman and a carrier in an attack on the machine guns. The carrier was killed instantly, but Captain Skinker seized the ammunition and continued through an opening in the barbed wire, feeding the automatic rifle until he, too, was killed. The adjutant general of the army has been requested to make presentation of the Medal of Honor to the next of kin of Captain Skinker."

LIEUT. ANDERSON'S DEATH DESCRIBED BY COMPANION

Made Heroic Effort to Save Comrade from Germans

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.—Bishop Anderson has just received from the Red Cross the details about the death of his son, Patrick Anderson, who was a member of the 96th Aero Squadron, and was killed in action in France.

Four machines of the squadron of which Lieut. Anderson was a member started out on the afternoon of September 16 to bomb the town of Conflans, west of Metz. Lieut. Anderson was leading, with the three other machines following. After they had reached their objective and dropped their bombs, and were turning to come back, they sighted a squadron of twenty-four German scout planes, who divided into three groups and attacked them. Lieut. Anderson got through the attacking planes, but instead of trying to escape, he returned to help the three planes that were behind him. Two of them were hit and fell almost immediately and shortly afterwards Lieut. Anderson's machine went down in flames. Lieut. Codman, who sent Bishop

BISHOPS URGE BUILDING OF NATIONAL CATHEDRAL

Bishop Harding's Anniversary Occa- sion for Emphasizing Need

WASHINGTON, D. C.—On Sunday, January 26, the people of St. Paul's Parish turned out in thronging numbers to keep their patron's feast day and also to celebrate the tenth anniversary of the consecration of Bishop Harding, for many years their rector, and of the rectorship of the present pastor, Canon Robert Talbot, D.D. Bishop Talbot of Bethlehem, brother of the rector, spoke at festival services at both 11 a.m. and 8 p.m., and the Bishop of Washington also spoke at night, when a number of the diocesan clergy were in the church.

Both bishops pleaded strongly for the completion of the national cathedral, not only or chiefly as a memorial of those who have lost their lives in the war, but in particular as a thank-offering for the self-oblation of the people of America. Bishop Harding said that Washington had become not only the capital of the world's greatest nation, but also in a true sense the capital of the world. There could be no more fitting hour to finish the cathedral than the present. The place of a great national cathedral, built by many people as the shrine of free, open and democratic worship, work and preaching, and a blessing to city, church and country, and indeed as often during the war, to men and women of many nations, Bishop Harding impressively set forth.

Kentucky Churchwomen Will Vote

LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY.—Women which form a majority of the membership of the Diocese of Kentucky are at last to have a voice in diocesan affairs as a result of a new canon providing for a House of Churchwomen which was passed by an overwhelming vote at the ninety-first annual council of the diocese at Christ Church Cathedral here, January 28 and 29. Bishop Woodcock appointed Miss L. L. Robinson, Miss Nannie Hite Winston, Mrs. Harry S. Musson, Mrs. Stanley Adams, all of Louisville, and the Rev. John S. Douglas, rector of St. Andrew's Church, Louisville, as a committee to organize the new house and to serve until the three delegates from each church and mission can be elected.

The new House of Churchwomen, which is among the first to be created by a diocese, will give Kentucky women nearly an equal voice in diocesan matters.

Anderson the above account of the fight, was in the fourth machine. This was brought down behind the German lines, and Lieut. Codman and his observer were wounded and taken prisoner.

A letter from the Red Cross, dated January 22, contains the information that Lieut. Anderson's grave has been found by one of their searchers. He was buried by French people in the Cemetery Joudreville, near Briey.

Lieut. Anderson was a graduate of Howe School, and had completed two years at Dartmouth College. He entered the American ambulance service before the United States declared war, and later entered the air service. He was the last flying survivor of his squadron as originally constituted, all the rest having been captured, wounded, or killed. In October word was received that he had been missing since September 16. Nothing more was heard about him until the above account of his death was received a short time ago.

EIGHT "Y" EPISCOPALIANS GIVE LIVES IN FRANCE

Comprise One-Fourth of Official List Printed in Paris

In the Red Triangle Overseas, published in Paris, January 4, appears a list of workers who have given their lives in France to the "Cause of Freedom." Eight names, or one-fourth of the list, are those of communicants of the Episcopal Church. They are, as printed in the Triangle:

Cooper, Hadley Heber, 32, minister, Piermont, New York; Episcopalian; arrived in France February 23, 1918; killed by German gas shell on front lines May 26.

Crandall, Miss Marion C., 46, teacher, Alameda, California; Episcopalian; arrived in France February 15, 1918; killed by German bomb near Chalons, March 26.

Cutting, Robert Bayard, 41, New York City; Episcopalian; died following operation at U. S. A. base hospital No. 15, March 21.

Ellis, Harriet M., 106 East Fifty-second street, New York; Episcopalian; arrived in France February 14, 1918; died of effects of spinal meningitis at the home of her mother in England August 21.

Seymour, Henry Pratt, 48, minister, New York; Episcopalian; died from a fall in elevator shaft at Y. M. C. A. warehouse in Paris October 24, 1917.

30TH ANNIVERSARY KEPT BY RT. REV. BOYD VINCENT

"Has Kept High Courage of Youth," Says Bishop Reese

CINCINNATI, OHIO.—Thirty years of faithful service were brought to a close when Bishop Vincent observed the thirtieth anniversary of his consecration on St. Paul's Day, Jan. 25. In the Cathedral Church of St. Paul's, the Rt. Rev. Paul Matthews, Bishop of New Jersey, and formerly dean of the cathedral, preached the sermon, his theme being the character of St. Paul.

The service was followed with a luncheon given by the Cincinnati clericus at the Queen City Club. The bishop coadjutor, the Rt. Rev. Theodore Irving Reese, paid tribute to Bishop Vincent in a short but most impressive speech.

"Courage," he said, "is the characteristic of youth; caution of age. With all the rich wisdom of full maturity, Bishop Vincent has kept the high courage of youth, particularly in his attitude toward truth, toward the new revelations of reality which the times are bringing forth. . . . Most men as they grow older find life, as it were, a series of closing doors—old friends, old interests dropping away and none coming to take their place. But with our beloved bishop the very opposite is true. He has kept the spirit within him alive and, as a consequence, life for him has proved to be a succession of opening doors."

A handsomely appointed traveling case was presented the bishop by the clericus, in anticipation of his early leave-taking for foreign parts. He will visit Russia and Italy and confer with the heads of the Russian and the Roman Churches in the interests of the Commission on World Faith and Order.

At the close of the luncheon those present retired to the cathedral chapel, where, from 2 until 4, the bishop conducted a quiet hour for the clergy.

GUARD AGAINST SPREAD OF BOLSHEVISM HERE

Worst Enemy Man Who Sows Distrust, Says Dr. Manning

BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS.—The Rev. Dr. W. T. Manning, rector of historic Trinity Parish, New York, speaking at a dinner of the Episcopalian Club of Massachusetts at the Copley-Plaza last week, called on Americans to defeat the efforts of unfriendly influences to cause dissension among the allies, and to guard against the spread of Bolshevik propaganda in the United States by "the disloyal yellow press" and other agencies.

"We must show our open disapproval of any man who by tongue or pen, because of smallness of mind, ancient grievance or ulterior motive, shall dare to sow the seeds of distrust. Let us make it known that to do this is as contemptible, as alien, as un-American, as disloyal, in time of peace as it was in time of war.

"We are all thinking, and with reason, of the menace of what we have come to know as Bolshevism; and it is a menace. For, as has been said, it has no frontiers. I do not feel that we need be in panic, but I do feel that we need to be on guard.

"We need to watch the tendency in that direction which we see even in some high places; we need to watch the cleverly-edited magazines of high class, the notoriety-hunting intellectuals, the German-trained university professor, and the disloyal yellow press, that are giving their aid to this propaganda.

"Put none but Americans on guard tonight. We want no foreigners coming to this country and preaching the overthrow of our Government and the undermining of our institutions. There is no place here for Bolshevism, or its symbol, the red flag."

Cuba Grieves for Mrs. Myers

HAVANA, CUBA.—It is almost impossible to express the shock that has befallen the whole American colony in Havana, as well as the members of the cathedral parish through the news of the sudden death of Mrs. Myers, the wife of Dean Myers, on Wednesday, January 22 in Greenwood, Mississippi. She had just gone over there to bring her mother, who was very sick, to Havana for the rest of the winter, and she contracted influenza on the train, which developed into pneumonia, of which she died almost immediately on her arrival. She was universally beloved and her loss is exceedingly great to the whole community. She left two little children.

Roman Bishop Explains

HAVANA, CUBA.—The Roman Catholic Bishop of Havana has come out in another letter saying that his attitude in forbidding Romanists to attend the Roosevelt memorial service, Holy Trinity Cathedral, was not one of hostility to the American colony in Cuba, nor of non-appreciation of Roosevelt, and that, had he been recognized in the premises, he would have consented to the material presence of Roman Catholics at the cathedral service.

MRS. WHIPPLE DESCRIBES MISS CLEVELAND'S BURIAL

Body Was Wrapped in American Flag; Burial in Italy

From time to time letters from Mrs. Whipple describing the relief work done by herself and her friend Miss Rose Cleveland in Bagni di Lucca, Italy, have been published in THE CHURCHMAN. In November Miss Cleveland died of influenza. The details of her death have just been learned from a letter received in this country from Mrs. Whipple. Living with Mrs. Whipple and Miss Cleveland, and working valiantly by their side, was a Mrs. Erickson, an English lady. The first Sunday in November, after heroic service to the refugees, Mrs. Erickson fell ill with the Spanish fever. The following Friday she was dead. The next Sunday morning, Miss Cleveland, having taken the infection by lifting her friend upon her pillow, was seized by the fever, and on the following Friday her work in this world was over. The rest of the story is told by Mrs. Whipple as follows:

"Miss Cleveland was one of the noblest, truest and really greatest characters I have ever known. She was a passionate lover of her country, to which she has been an honor here. She was a true friend of Italy, an inspiration to us all. She never at any time lost courage or failed to rise and keep to the highest plane of thought and act. It is strange indeed that, answering bravely the call that came to her in the night, by her band of five trained nurses who made the crusade against dirt and neglect and by their faithful care turned the dying into convalescents, she should have become the victim herself!

"The funeral was the most impressive sight I have ever seen. She was wrapped in the American flag. The English chaplain came from Leghorn for the service. Mrs. Lawrence, her niece, the chaplain's sweet wife, and one of Miss Cleveland's nurses (the daughter of the late Bishop of Aberdeen) were the only English-speaking people. The rest were Italian friends.

"By order of the mayor all shops and business places were closed. From every house was a flag at half mast, tied with black. The hearse on either side was guarded by the mayor and the American consul, who was sent by Ambassador Page to represent him. The chief of the town authorities walked on either side holding the gold cords. After two carriages for the household, there followed a long, long procession on foot—the citizens, the schools of the Commune, the two schools of the refugees, bearing flags at half mast, and then the great procession of the refugees themselves bearing wreaths.

"Not a sound was heard in the streets as the silent procession moved on to the little English cemetery on the banks of the Lima. At the grave the American flag was lowered by the consul, and then all the people threw in each a flower, and the sun turned the snow-clad mountain into a dazzling scene—and I came back!"

Italy spoke through the former prime minister, Signor Luigi Luzzatti. "The death of Rose Elizabeth Cleveland," he wrote, "is a national grief and loss, on account of the great and wise beneficence which that true lay Sister has distributed among the unfortunates of Bagni di Lucca and other places in Italy. I beg to make known my deep and sincere condolences to the friends and relatives of the honored sister of the late President of the United States."

EMPTY THRONE OF KAISER FACES CHAPLAIN'S PULPIT

Dr. Jefferys Ministers to Military in Coblentz Royal Chapel

Chaplain Edward M. Jefferys is having the unique experience of preaching every Sunday in the Royal Chapel of the Kaiser's palace in Coblentz in a pulpit that directly faces the empty throne of the ex-monarch. Dr. Jefferys, who is the rector of St. Peter's Church, Philadelphia, has been serving with the A. E. F. ever since the beginning of the war. Since April, 1917, he has been chaplain of the Pennsylvania Base Hospital Unit, Number 10, which has been in charge of an English hospital at La Tréport on the Flanders coast.

Just before Christmas—"with a lovely Christmas program, religious and social, for the unit and the patients" planned—Dr. Jefferys was transferred to an evacuation hospital, on the border of France and Lorraine. Then after a few days' service, he was attached to the Third Army (of occupation) and sent to Coblentz. "Had an awful time to get there," he said, "among other things sleeping two nights on the dirty floor of a freight car, cold and nothing to speak of to eat."

He has been given the Royal Chapel in which to minister to the Protestant military congregation and has his office in the palace. He is billeted on one of the main streets a few blocks from the palace. Opposite Coblentz on the Rhine is Ehrenbreitstein. "Many a time I have used the fortress of Ehrenbreitstein," the chaplain writes, "in my younger days as an illustration (in sermons) of invulnerability, and now it is garrisoned by American troops."

ASK FOR TEN-OUNCE GLOVES

Chicago Clergy Are Opposed to Commercialized Boxing

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.—A group of ministers representing twelve denominations met at the First Methodist Church on January 27, to take action with regard to a bill to legalize and commercialize boxing, which is about to come up before the state legislature.

They took the position that simply as a sport boxing has proved its value in the army camps. They object, however, to prize fights where a purse is offered and admission charged. They further pointed out that for some years an average of seven men a year have been killed in the prize ring and urge the use of 10-ounce gloves in place of the 5-ounce gloves used heretofore.

ROOSEVELT RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED AT PITTSBURGH

PITTSBURGH, PENNSYLVANIA.—At a meeting January 20 of the Pittsburgh Clerical Union of the Episcopal Church, the following resolution was adopted on the death of Theodore Roosevelt and a copy engrossed and sent to Mrs. Roosevelt:

"Very rarely in the remarkable history of our nation has a man filled as large a place, and wielded such a sweeping influence, as can be said without the slightest exaggeration of Theodore Roosevelt. He was a man, fearless, aggressive, able and far-sighted. Behind, and in all these outstanding traits, was a strong Christian spirit. His departure into the life of the world to come has created a void on earth. Our sense of loss language cannot adequately describe, but the fragrance of his complete life, with all its many noble influences, will ever remain with us. This imperfect tribute we gladly and enthusiastically make in the name of the Pittsburgh Clerical Union of the Protestant Episcopal Church, assembled Monday morning, January 20, 1919. Praying that the consolation of God our Father may be specially granted to Mrs. Roosevelt and the family, and that divine guidance may be theirs," Lewis F. Cole, rector of the Church of the Incarnation, Pittsburgh, and president of the Clerical Union.

Shelton Hale Bishop, rector of the Church of the Holy Cross, Pittsburgh, and secretary of the Clerical Union.

CHRISTIAN SCIENTISTS OPPOSED CHURCH CLOSING

Diocesan Convention Is Postponed Owing to Influenza

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA.—At a meeting of the Standing Committee in conference with the bishop and various officials of the diocese, held on January 15, it was decided to postpone the diocesan convention indefinitely from January 29 on account of the alarming increase of influenza in southern California, and especially in the city of Los Angeles.

The resistance of Christian Science sentiment to the closing of churches and to the physical examination of school children, and the resistance of the commercial interests to every health measure that interferes with the normal functioning of the cash register, have placed the health department of the city about in the commanding position of an old woman bewildered in the middle of the street. It was felt that the influence of the Church should be thrown in favor of a policy of prudence and self-restraint that would eliminate unnecessary gatherings of people even at the cost of considerable inconvenience.

To Be Independent Parish

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.—St. George's Chapel, since 1907 a part of the cathedral, has voted to become again a separate parish. This decision was made at a meeting on January 23. Pledges to cover a $6,000 deficit were made at this meeting. Steps will be taken at once to organize into an independent parish and to recover the charter which was surrendered twelve years ago. It was voted that the formal transfer of the property from the cathedral back to St. George's should be made at the 11 o'clock service Sunday morning, May 25, that day and hour being the seventy-fourth anniversary of the founding of St. George's.

It is believed that this event will mean much in the church life of St. Louis. There are nearly 400 communicants and a Sunday School of 200. Bishop Tuttle will celebrate his eighty-second birthday with St. George's on Sunday, January 26, and will preach the sermon.

Methodists Want $2,000,000

Extensive plans of the Methodist Episcopal Church for its part in the work of reconstruction to be carried on with funds obtained through the co-operative efforts of the fourteen Churches to raise $10,000,000 in February in the Inter-church Emergency Campaign, with which to meet the cost of their post-war activities have been announced. The budget of the Methodists in the campaign is $2,000,000.

A large part of this amount will be expended by the Church in its work for returning soldiers and sailors. This work includes the education of 10,000 students of Methodist colleges, whose courses of study were interrupted by the call to arms.

NURSES WORK NIGHT AND DAY IN ALASKA EPIDEMIC

St. John's Hospital Full and Temporary Quarters Established

Special Correspondence

KETCHIKAN, ALASKA.—The influenza epidemic reached here and struck us hard. There was but one bed in St. John's Hospital vacant, and we had three small babies to care for, so it was impossible for us to take all the cases into the hospital. The town authorities arranged a temporary hospital in the Methodist Church basement for white people without homes, and volunteer nurses cared for them. Our native school was fixed up for a hospital for the natives, which, with the hospital ward and the dispensary at the rear of the school-room made a very convenient arrangement.

Before the school was ready Mrs. Molineaux visited the homes and ministered there, but she was also taken ill and went to bed. Then, more bad luck—our cook got it! It was impossible to get another, but two volunteer cooks came to our assistance, and we were relieved, especially as our cooks were school teachers and did everything scientifically. We took all the serious cases in our hospital. Miss Barlow and myself are the only trained nurses in town, and for a while our work was very heavy, one of us staying up all night every other night, besides doing our day work.

Altogether eighty-six cases were reported in the town, with ten deaths among the white people and four among the natives. Four died here and two in the native school. The epidemic was not so severe here as in the States or as farther North, but the town was quarantined and every possible method used to prevent its spread. We are very thankful it was no worse, and also that we were here to be of assistance where we were so badly needed.

The work of St. John's Hospital is constantly in evidence. With 3,000 population, and ours the only hospital, we are needed. The town is constantly growing, and our patients come in from the mines, logging camps, canneries and fishing boats for miles around; mostly white men who would otherwise be utterly without hospital facilities.

During the summer we took care of six sailors from the U. S. navy who were ill or injured while on duty on the submarine chasers or other government boats about here.

Building Fund Commission Meets

At the annual meeting of the American Church Building Fund Commission, held on January 16, the retiring officers were re-elected. Six gifts, aggregating $2,900, were reported as having been promised to St. Andrew's Church, Moose Lake, Minnesota; St. James Church, Mobridge, South Dakota; St. James Church, New Castle, Indiana; St. Mary's rectory, Wind Gap, Pennsylvania; St. Paul's rectory, Clinton, North Carolina; and Grace rectory, Port Lavaca, Texas.

The reports for the year showed an increase, in spite of adverse conditions such as the war, cost of materials and labor problems, of about 70 per cent. on the gross business of the preceding year.

Going to Russia

When the Young Women's Christian Association secretary goes to Russia for work, it is with the understanding that she will remain there three years without coming back. It takes some heroism to do that, though a busy world has not stopped long enough to give it recognition.

CHAPLAINS' WORK BECOMES INCREASINGLY IMPORTANT

Says Pershing in Official Order—War Commission Meets

The War Commission has recently received the following official order from France:

"General Headquarters,
"American Expeditionary Forces,
"France, December 24, 1918.
"Bulletin No. 107.

"With the cessation of active hostilities, the responsibilities of the chaplains and their opportunities for increased contact with and influence over soldiers become increasingly important. New agencies have sprung into force to meet new requirements involving increasing activities upon the part of the chaplains.

"By command of General Pershing.

"JAMES W. MCANDREW,

"Chief of Staff.

"Official: ROBERT C. DAVIS, Adjutant General."

At a meeting of the executive committee held on January 29, it was voted that 10,000 more of the Church War Crosses should be forwarded to Bishop Perry for distribution overseas.

Concerning the value of the war crosses, Bishop Perry writes: "... The war crosses have been sent to the chaplains and are being carefully distributed. They have caused very real satisfaction."

The Executive Committee made the following appointments: The Rev. I. H. Webber-Thompson, civilian chaplain at Panama Canal Zone for four months; the Ven. Edward J. Owen, civilian chaplain at Camp Lee, Virginia; the Rev. Herbert B. Gwyn, civilian chaplain at Ft. Sheridan, Illinois; the Rev. T. Carter Page, civilian chaplain at Hilton and Newport News, Virginia; the Rev. A. Elliston Cole, civilian chaplain at West Baden, Indiana; the Rev. Raymond H. Kendrick, at Debarkation Hospital No. 5, New York City; the Rev. Frank M. Johnson, Jr., civilian chaplain at Ft. Bliss, Texas.

Four hundred dollars ($400) were appropriated for a civilian chaplain at Camp Cody. It was voted that $5,000 per month be set apart for the use of chaplains overseas, each chaplain being allowed a sum not exceeding $50 a month for work among the soldiers.

The plans for a church building at Hilton, Virginia, were approved, the building to be at the disposal of those living in a community of shipbuilders.

The following commissioned and civilian chaplains have received honorable discharges:

Chaplain Samuel B. Booth, from Evacuation Hospital No. 9, A. E. F.

Chaplain Edward H. Earle, from Camp MacArthur, Waco, Texas.

Chaplain Willis P. Gerhart, from Camp Wadsworth, Spartanburg, South Carolina.

Chaplain F. Victor Hoag, from Vancouver Barracks, Washington.

Chaplain Francis G. Hsley, from Camp Upton, Yaphank, Long Island.

Chaplain Christopher Keller, from Camp Custer, Battle Creek, Michigan.

Chaplain Henry E. Kelly, from Camp Devens, Ayer, Massachusetts.

Chaplain H. A. Kirchhoffer, from Camp Devens, Ayer, Massachusetts.

Chaplain Berton S. Levering, from Camp Dix, Wrightstown, New Jersey.

Chaplain Frederic O. Musser (unassigned).

Chaplain Arthur H. Marshall, from Camp Taylor, Louisville, Kentucky.

Chaplain F. B. Roseboro, from U. S.

General Hospital No. 18, Waynesville, North Carolina.

Chaplain I. H. Webber-Thompson, from Camp Sevier, Greenville, South Carolina.

Chaplain Stanley P. West, from Camp Devens, Ayer, Massachusetts.

The Rev. E. A. Rich, from Camp Stuart, Newport News, Virginia.

The Rev. Arthur L. Seiter, from Camp Lee, Petersburg, Virginia.

The Rev. C. H. B. Turner, from Lewes, Delaware.

The Ven. Chas. H. Webb, from Camp Hancock, Augusta, Georgia.

The American Library Association has kindly offered to forward to Bishop Perry 4,500 Soldiers' and Sailors' Prayer Books and 500 musical hymnals. The executive Committee accepted the transfer of St. George's chapel at Wrightstown, New Jersey, to the War Commission.

BUFFALO, NEW YORK.—Apropos of church journals, the Trinity Church News of January 12 says: "They are no longer concerned chiefly with debates upon non-essentials; they bear a message in accord with the vision of our times. They are so vastly improved in many instances over what they once were that one can recommend them without hesitation. The rector most earnestly recommends that every family becomes a subscriber to at least two, namely, The Spirit of Missions and THE CHURCHMAN."

The Rev. E. L. Wells Dies

HARTFORD, CONNECTICUT.—The Rev. Edward Livingston Wells, for the last seventeen years an Episcopal clergyman and prior to that time a lawyer at Bridgeport, Connecticut, died last week of pneumonia at his home here. He formerly did missionary work in New York State and Ohio. Mr. Wells was born in Louisville, Kentucky, fifty-seven years ago. Two brothers, Dr. J. T. Wells and Frederick Brown Wells, live in this city.

ROOSEVELT MEMORIAL SERVICE IN HAVANA CATHEDRAL

The Roman Catholic Bishop of Havana Warned All Romanists Not to Attend This Service, Which Was Arranged by Business Men and Clergymen of Havana

THE STAY-AT-HOMES MAY NOW STATE THEIR CASE

Rector Says Roosevelt Admirers Showed Marked Inconsistency

BROOKLYN, NEW YORK.—The Chimes, official paper of the Church of the Messiah, Brooklyn, of which the Rev. St. Clair Hester, D.D., is rector, carries the following suggestion:

"The Chimes would like to publish a symposium on why people do not come to church. All who stay away, who have got out of the habit, are asked to contribute a short statement of their reasons. Surely an intelligent person must have a reason for staying away. Is the matter with the church, music, clergy, vestry, or with the stay-aways? Speak out.

"Why did so many of the admirers of that great American, the late ex-President Roosevelt, stay at home and spend the morning reading their newspapers, when a memorial service in his honor was being held in the church, Sunday, January 12? 'Be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only,' was Mr. Roosevelt's favorite text. These admirers were not doers nor even hearers. There seems to be a glaring inconsistency between their profession and their practice."

CHURCH HAS PEACE TREE FROM DEVASTATED FRANCE

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA.—While churches, schools and communities, here and there, are planting "peace trees" as monuments of gratitude and symbols of hope, Trinity Church, Orange, California, enjoys the distinction of having a peace tree that is an actual refugee from the war devastated region of France. It was sent to a resident of Orange in the early period of the war and was planted by him in his own yard. It was taken up at Christmas time this year, and after gracing the church and the parish hall at the Christmas day services and the Sunday School festival, was planted in the church yard and dedicated to "democracy, righteousness, and peace."

BISHOP OF NEBRASKA DIES SUDDENLY IN OMAHA

Well-Known Leader of the West Was Native of Ontario

OMAHA, NEBRASKA.—The Rt. Rev. Arthur L. Williams, Bishop of Nebraska, died suddenly of heart disease at his home here, January 28.

Bishop Williams was born in Owen Sound, Ontario, in 1856, and was graduated from the Western Theological Seminary, in Chicago, in 1888. After serving as rector of churches in Colorado and Chicago for several years, he was made Bishop Coadjutor of Nebraska in 1899, and became Bishop in 1908.

Archdeacon Greig to Visit America

Word has just been received that Archdeacon Greig of Worcester, England, will visit New York, Boston and Washington to hold retreats. He will sail from England some time during February. Archdeacon Greig is an eloquent and spiritual preacher. He attended the last General Convention as the chaplain of the Rt. Rev. Dr. Yeatman-Biggs, then Bishop of Worcester and now Bishop of Coventry.

Dr. Nelson Goes to France

CINCINNATI, OHIO.—The Rev. Frank H. Nelson, D.D., the well known rector of Christ Church, left for New York on Friday, January 24, and has sailed for France where he will be identified with the Y. M. C. A. as a speaker and special worker. He went at the earnest request of A. G. Bookwalter, who is secretary of the Cincinnati Y. M. C. A. and at present working at "Y" headquarters in Paris.

The Rev. A. S. Priddis Wins Prize

The Joint Commission on Social Service have just announced the decision in the prize essay contest offered to theological students of all our seminaries last spring on a variety of subjects related to social service. The judges have awarded third prize ($40) to Rev. Alfred S. Priddis, assistant minister of Saint Luke's Church, Rochester, New York, for an essay on the subject: "The Necessity and Duty for the Church to Preach Social Righteousness." The first and second prizes were not awarded.

Units Added to Student Council

At the meeting of the National Students' Council held on the day preceding the meeting of the General Board of Religious Education in New York last week, the Episcopal Church societies in Smith College, Hunter College and Syracuse University were admitted as units of the council.

Personals

THE REV. C. H. JORDAN, formerly rector of the Church of the Advent, Williamston, North Carolina, has accepted the rectorship of the Church of the Holy Comforter, Crescent City, Florida, and has gone into residence in that city.

THE REV. THOMAS M. BROWN, of the Diocese of Pittsburgh, has been called to the Church of the Advent, Williamston, North Carolina, and St. Martin's Hamilton, North Carolina. Mr. Brown had just completed his training as a chaplain when the armistice was signed.

THE REV. HERBERT S. OSBURN, a non-parochial clergyman of Virginia, formerly rector of Elizabeth City, North Carolina, who has been acting as locum tenens at St. Paul's Church, Petersburg, Virginia, has been called to St. Mary's Church, Kinston, North Carolina.

THE REV. GEORGE F. HILL, formerly in the Y. M. C. A. service and stationed at Camp Wadsworth, Spartanburg, South Carolina, has accepted the call extended to him by the vestry of Christ Church, Elizabeth City, North Carolina. Mr. Hill went into residence at Christ Church the first of the year.

THE REV. CHARLES E. SHAW has resigned the rectorate of Ascension Parish, Westminster, Maryland, and will assume the rectorate of Christ Church, Geneva, Ohio, on Sunday, February 9.

THE REV. HARRISON W. FOREMAN, who went from Emanuel Church, Norwich, New York, as chaplain in the 1st Pioneer Infantry, is now in the Army of Occupation and is stationed at Ehrenbreitstein.

THE REV. HENRY S. SMART has resigned the rectorship of St. Stephen's Parish, New Hartford.

ON AND AFTER February 15, the Rev. James S. Russell, principal of the St. Paul's Normal and Industrial School of Lawrenceville, Virginia, will be in New York, Philadelphia and nearby cities, filling engagements in the interest of the school. He will be very grateful for openings in churches, Sunday schools and societies. Letters addressed as below will reach him promptly: James S. Russell, Archdeacon, Lawrenceville, Virginia.

THE REV. GEORGE PARKIN ATWATER, rector of the Church of Our Saviour, Akron, Ohio, has been granted a leave of absence by his vestry and will spend the month of February in California.

UNION SEMINARY STUDENTS WILL ALL PAY TUITION

Many Other Changes Announced in Progressive Program

Union Theological Seminary has decided to charge tuition of all students entering the seminary in September, 1919, and thereafter. The fee for regular students doing full work will be $150 a year; for special students doing less than full work $6 per point, a point representing approximately one hour a week for one semester.

The seminary is also announcing a considerable development of its system of graduate fellowships and scholarships for the purpose of encouraging advanced theological study and a higher grade of theological scholarship. The number of its traveling fellowships has been doubled and their stipends largely increased, and four new resident fellowships have been added to those already in existence.

At the same time a new plan of student field work is announced. A director has been secured who will give his whole time to the supervising the field work of the students, visiting them at their tasks, holding personal interviews with them, conducting seminars for the study of specific problems and various types of service, and assigning such lines of special study as the needs of the particular student may demand. The seminary has made arrangements with certain churches and other institutions for definite stations where the men can find the kind of opportunity they need and can enjoy the advantage of expert guidance in their work.

D. S. O. for Another Chaplain

The Commander in Chief of the A. E. F. has awarded the Distinguished Service Cross to Chaplain William E. Patrick, 23d Infantry. The citation reads:

"For extraordinary heroism in action during operations on the Meuse River, France, 1-11 November, 1918.

CHAPLAIN WM. E. PATRICK

"During this period, Chaplain Patrick constantly exposed himself to the enemy fire, while giving first aid to the wounded and assisting in their evacuation."

Chaplain Patrick was formerly assistant at Grace Church, New Bedford, Massachusetts. He is a graduate of Harvard and the Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge.

Our Weekly News Letters

NEW YORK

Services on Roosevelt Day—The rectors of the New York churches are planning special services to commemorate Colonel Roosevelt next Sunday morning. At the cathedral the Rev. Henry B. Washburn, D.D., will make the address in memory of the late ex-President. At Trinity Church there will be special services both morning and afternoon, the latter service under the auspices of the American Defense Society. At both services Dr. Manning will be the preacher. At Grace Church also the rector will make the memorial address. At Calvary Church Mr. Guy Emerson will be the speaker, and the service will also mark the opening of the campaign for the War Commission fund.

Students' Service—On Sunday afternoon a special students' service will be held at the cathedral under the auspices of the Diocesan Board of Religious Education. The preacher will be the Rev. J. Howard Melish of Brooklyn. This service is part of the general plan of the Committee of Higher Education of the diocesan board to minister to the students in the city. After the service the students present will be invited to meet Dean Robbins and Mr. Melish in Old Synod Hall. The services for Oriental students are being held regularly. Next Sunday a celebration of the Holy Communion in Japanese will be held in the cathedral, the celebrant being the Rev. Charles F. Sweet, of Japan.

Ninth Coast Artillery at Church—Last Sunday the members of the Ninth Coast Artillery Corps of the New York Guard under command of Colonel Burleigh marched down Fifth Avenue and Broadway from their armory to attend service at Trinity Church. The service was under the direction of the chaplain, the Rev. Dr. Duffield for many years pastor of the First Presbyterian Church.

Episcopal Preachers, and Others—Bishop Darlington was in New York last Sunday and preached at the Church of the Heavenly Rest. Bishop Wise, also in town in connection with the meeting of the G.B.R.E., preached at the Church of the Transfiguration. Bishop Remington, just back from service overseas, preached at the annual missionary rally of the Sunday School at Calvary Church. The Rev. Bernard Iddings Bell was the preacher at Trinity Church last Sunday morning and at Grace Church in the evening.

Quiet Day at Trinity Chapel—The annual quiet day for the members of the congregation of Trinity Chapel will be held on February 22. The vicar, the Rev. J. Wilson Sutton, will make the meditations. The experiment of selecting a holiday for the annual quiet day has been so successful that it is the vicar's plan to have February 22 the regular time for this day of preparation for Lent.

KENTUCKY

Council Meets—At the urgent request of Bishop Woodcock the council which met in Louisville January 29-30, voted to increase the Bishop Dudley Memorial Fund of $35,000 to $135,000, the money to be used as an endowment fund for the support of the episcopate. The Rev. J. M. Maxon, rector of St. Mark's Church, Louisville, and Mr. Gilmer S. Adams, a prominent Louisville business man, were named by the bishop to take charge of a campaign to be inaugurated shortly to raise the money. In accepting the appointment the Rev. Mr. Maxon agreed to refuse his recent appointment as head of St. Mary's College, Knoxville, Illinois, and to stay in Louisville at a lower stipend.

The Council discussed informally but took no action on the recommendation made by the Rev. James B. Minnegerod, rector emeritus of Calvary Church, Louisville, that a bishop coadjutor be chosen to assist Bishop Woodcock who has recently been in poor health. The Rev. Mr. Minnegerod who is the oldest clergymen in the diocese made his suggestion at the thirteenth annual dinner given in Bishop Woodcock's honor on Monday night, January 27, at the Pendennis Club in Louisville, by nearly 200 laymen and clergy of the diocese.

Parishes hereafter will have the option of electing their vestrymen for three year terms instead of one, four new members being elected each year.

Deputies to the General Convention in Detroit next October were elected as follows: Clerical, the Very Rev. Richard L. McCready, dean of Christ Church Cathedral, Louisville; the Rev. J. M. Maxon, rector of St. Mark's Church, Louisville; the Rev. John S. Douglas, rector of St. Andrew's Church, Louisville, and the Rev. George C. Abgitt, rector of Grace Church, Hopkinsville. The lay delegates will be John J. Sauders of Louisville, who was re-elected secretary of the diocese, Judge Charles S. Grubb and Alex Gault Robinson also of Louisville, and R. W. Covington of Bowling Green.

Isham Bridges was reelected treasurer of the diocese and the following standing committee named: Dean McCready, the Rev. L. E. Johnson, rector Grace Church, Louisville; the Rev. Mr. Douglass, A. L. Terry, R. A. Robinson and George P. Walton.

SACRAMENTO

St. Paul's Day—Jan. 25 marked the 20th anniversary of the consecration of Bishop Moreland. The day was observed in Sacramento by a celebration of the Holy Eucharist in the cathedral, the bishop officiating. The bishop received many letters and telegrams conveying the loyal and affectionate expressions of his people. The prevailing epidemic prevented the assembling of congregations at this time. Bishop Moreland was the first bishop consecrated on the Pacific Coast. He succeeded the Right Rev. H. D. Wingfield, D.D., the first bishop of Northern California, who died in 1898. Through the energy of Bishop Moreland the missionary district became a diocese in 1910, an endowment of $65,000 being raised for the purpose. There are 16 self-supporting parishes, 35 clergy, 28 lay-readers, 51 parishes and missions, and there has been an increase of $280,000 in the value of church property during the twenty years of the present bishop's administration.

The diocese embraces twenty-six northern counties of California, being mostly mountainous and rural. Every town of 4,000 population or over has a resident priest and self-supporting congregation of the Episcopal Church, which is thought to be a record among American dioceses. Population of the diocese has increased 50 per cent in twenty years, while the number of clergy has grown 130 per cent and of parishes 240 per cent.

DULUTH

Two Deaneries Have Joint Meeting—A joint meeting of the two deaneries of Mississippi River Valley and Red River Valley was held on January 28 and 29, in St. John's Church, St. Cloud.

In the conferences upon Wednesday the subjects discussed were: The revision of the Prayer Book; the needs and prospects of our mission work in the different portions of the extensive field; and the needs of our church schools and the best methods of improving our modes of religious instruction.

The Rev. E. W. Couper, chairman of our diocesan board of religious education, gave a most instructive address on the subject, and it was resolved to secure if possible from the General Board of Religious Education a representative to visit our missions and parishes and address them. There was a delightful meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary in the afternoon, where great interest was manifested in the mission work of the church at home and abroad.

HARRIET M. MORRISON.

BETHLEHEM

Death of Prominent Churchman—The diocese lost last week in the death of William R. Butler, one of its most prominent laymen. He died in Mauch Chunk on January 27, and the funeral services were held in St. Mark's Church, that community, on Wednesday, 29. Bishop Talbot with representative clergymen from the various committees and commissions gathered from all parts of the diocese.

For many years Mr. Butler was the active secretary of the Diocesan Board of Missions. He had been a deputy to the General Convention elected by the diocese without any hesitancy to represent it over a long period of years.

MISSOURI

A Happy Reunion—In connection with the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the Church of the Holy Communion, St. Louis, one evening was devoted to a sort of reunion of those who had in other years been connected with the parish. At this gathering a beautiful bronze bust of the first rector of the parish, the Rev. Dr. Robert, was unveiled. Mr. Hudson E. Bridge, prominent manufacturer of St. Louis, now a member of the vestry at St. Peter's, praised the Holy Communion Parish for the good work it had done in giving him his wife, "quite a number of years ago." The Rev. J. Boyd Cox, rector of Trinity, brought greetings from the mother parish, and a touching letter was read from Mr. William H. Thomson of Trinity vestry, St. Louis banker, too ill to attend the celebration, the only living member of the original vestry of Holy Communion. Dean Davis of the cathedral, the Rev. J. S. Bunting of Ascension, the Rev. J. Courtney Jones of Emmanuel, Webster Groves, the Rev. B. T. Kemerer of St. George's, all spoke in happy vein.

An Effective Work—A large congregation greeted the Rev. J. J. Clopton on Sunday, January 19, when he celebrated his fifth anniversary as rector of Christ Church, Cape Girardeau. Mr. Clopton is a Virginian and a graduate of Virginia Seminary. Most of his ministry has been spent in the East and in Virginia.

Among interesting and hopeful things accomplished in his five years' ministry in Cape Girardeau are: the membership has nearly doubled, twenty-nine being confirmed; several beautiful memorials have been added to the church, and over $800 spent on rectory, church buildings and other church property.

At his mission in town of Illmo he has built and furnished a beautiful chapel. He is an active member of the Cape Girardeau Commercial Club and has taken part in every Bond, Red Cross and Y. M. C. A. campaign and made a number of addresses as a "Four Minute Man."

A Great Home—The annual meeting of the Board of Directors of the Country Home for Convalescents was held in St. Louis, January 21, with a luncheon at the University Club. Dr. Cleveland Shutt, hospital commissioner of St. Louis, spoke from the viewpoint of his profession and gave warm praise of the work which is being carried on. He said that this was really the only thing of its kind in this whole country and that the Church ought to be very proud of the splendid beginning it has made. Addresses were also made by Bishop Johnson and Dean Davis of the Board of Directors.

HARRINGTON ROGERS.

LONG ISLAND

Meeting of Archdeaconry—The annual meeting of the archdeaconry of Queens and Nassau Counties was held at the parish house of Grace Church, Jamaica, January 29.

The Rev. R. F. Duffield, archdeacon, was re-elected chairman for another term of four years. The Rev. C. H. Brewer, of Roslyn, was elected secretary and Mr. W. M. Baldwin, of Garden City, treasurer.

Two clergymen and three laymen were elected members of the executive committee, and are the Rev. A. L. Bumpus, of Hewlett; the Rev. W. H. Littebrandt, of Merrick, and the Messrs. E. W. Denton, W. E. Jay and D. Whitford.

James R. Strong, Jr., of the Diocese of Newark, New Jersey, spoke on the missionary work of the Church.

The other speakers were Bishop Burgess, Dr. Sturgis and Bishop Thomas.

Reception to New Rector—Several hundred members of the Church of the Redeemer, Astoria, gave a reception to their new rector, the Rev. W. C. Charlton, on Tuesday evening, January 28, in the Sunday School rooms. Mr. Charlton comes from Atlanta, Georgia.

Churchmen Protest Against Mr. Hearst—The Men's Club of the Church of the Incarnation, Brooklyn, has adopted resolutions, protesting against the appointment of W. R. Hearst, as a member of the mayor's committee to welcome returning soldiers.

Scandinavian Day—August Reymert, legal adviser of the Swedish-Norwegian Consulate, and Consul Gen. George Beck of Denmark, spoke Sunday, January 26, at a "Scandinavian Day" service in the Church of the Holy Trinity, Brooklyn. The service was opened impressively by the entrance of Danish boys in American khaki, carrying the Swedish, Norwegian and Danish flags, and followed by the Red Cross unit of the church, representatives of the Danish chapter of the Red Cross, wearing the customary blue veils, and members of the Danish Women's Civic League in costumes representing different peasants and various sections of Denmark.

Aage Wang-Holm, a royal Danish opera singer, sang. Mr. Reymert, Mr. Beck and the Rev. Mr. Melish were speakers for neutral nations.

Memorial Service—Memorial services were held Sunday, January 26, at St. Mark's Church, Brooklyn, for Pvt. Harold Roth of Co. K, 106th Infantry, who was killed in action on September 27. Boy Scouts attended the service in a body. A memorial tablet which had been placed in the church was dedicated.

Answer to Prayer—The Missionary Society of one of our Brooklyn parishes that has always been in the habit of sending a missionary box each winter, wherever needed, decided this year to send the money instead. It was to a clergyman having a very poor parish in Wisconsin, where the thermometer goes from 10 to 25 degrees below zero. This is part of the answer received:

"And we want to thank you for the sending of the money, so that we can make our own selection. I think that your ladies can appreciate Mrs. _____ pleasure in doing her own shopping.

"Besides this, the sending of the money is the direct answer to my prayer for financial aid during the past two years. We have been in straitened circumstances, financially, and especially this fall, so I asked the dear Lord to give us some financial aid, if it was His will, and the answer came from your good ladies."

As this left the members of this society without their usual sewing, they are making little garments for the children of a mission school in Mayaguez, instead.

Dr. Lacey—Dr. Lacey, of the Church of the Redeemer, Brooklyn, has returned from Florida, where he went as special deputy appointed to convey the greetings of the Anglican Eastern Church Association to the Greek celebration at Tampa.

Dr. Lacey presented to Father Seraphim Stelides, at a remarkable service, a handsome scroll of greeting, and he had many engagements to speak and preach.

MARY E. SMYTH.

NEWARK

Death of Mrs. Mary Brainerd—Mrs. Mary Brainerd, mother of Deaconess Effie M. Brainerd, died at St. Luke's Hospital, Saturday morning, January 18. Deaconess Brainerd is a graduate of the Church Training and Deaconess House, Philadelphia, and came to St. Louis six years ago. She is a member of the staff which ministers in the institutions of the city, of which the Rev. J. Howard Lever is head. Deaconess Brainerd's work is largely with the unfortunate girls and unmarried mothers and orphan children of the slums of the big city, ministering to them as they are found in the city hospital, and following them with loving ministrations as they leave the hospital and go back again into the city. Everywhere she goes, she is the blessed instrument of a highly spiritualized social service work. Mrs. Brainerd contributed much indeed to the success of Deaconess Brainerd's work. Many friends who had learned to love Mrs. Brainerd's sweetness and gentleness of character gathered for the burial at St. John's Church, of which she was a member, on the afternoon of Monday, January 20. Bishop Johnson, the Rev. J. H. Lever and the Rev. Douglass H. Atwill officiated at the church and at the committal in the family lot in Valhalla Cemetery.

WASHINGTON

Churchman's League Meets—The mid-winter meeting of the Churchman's League of the diocese was held on Monday night, January 27, and was a brilliant occasion. The scene of the meeting was Trinity Hall, the centre of the new diocesan community work, which was opened with a full schedule on February 1. This, at the invitation of the bishop, was in the nature of an advance private view of the extensive changes and improvements made to fit and equip the building for its new uses.

Admiral Stockton made the first speech of the evening. "After the War—What?" was his theme, and he drew on his great store of military, educational, diplomatic, and economic experience and learning to give pertinent and illuminating answers to the questions arising in the minds of all as to the international, political, social, and religious problems resulting from the war.

The Rev. David R. Covell, newly elected social service secretary of the diocese, and vicar of Trinity Diocesan Church (the new title of this old foundation, now nearing its 100th anniversary), gave an address full of information, insight and fire entitled "The Soldier's Challenge and the Church's Answer—A Venture in Christian Social Service." He showed the great call in this central section near Union Station and many lodging houses, from soldiers and sailors for hospitality and social and religious influences, and the way Trinity plans to meet the call. He also set forth the neighborhood's need of welfare work for its uplift, and told some of the things to be done in this direction. His appeal was so strong that a number of the laity present tendered him their services in the development and management of this new diocesan undertaking.

SPRINGFIELD

Best Year Financially—The report of the treasurer of the diocese, Mr. Dan G. Swannell, to the Board of Finance at their meeting on January 21 at the bishop's house, shows the diocese to have had the best year financially that it has had for some time. More parishes and missions paid up in full their quota of diocesan assessments and arrears to the diocese and missionary assignments than for many years past. Thirty-four out of fifty-four parishes and missions paid in full their assessment and a number cleaned up arrears.

The diocese is free from debt and looks forward to the coming year with confidence and hope.

Roosevelt Memorial Service—The Rev. Lester Leake Riley, rector of Christ Church, president of the Protestant Ministers' Ministerial Association this year, is making arrangements for the Roosevelt memorial service and meeting to be held at the State Armory on Sunday afternoon, February 9, under the auspices of the Illinois State Historical Society and the Protestant Churches of Springfield. Gov. W. L. Harding of Iowa, is to be the chief speaker, and the Rev. Holmes Whitmore of Milwaukee, will speak on "Roosevelt as a Man and a Citizen."

Mission at Christ Church—Beginning Sunday, February 9, the Rev. Holmes Whitmore of Milwaukee, will conduct a four days' parochial mission in Christ Church. Mr. Riley writes in his announcement of the mission, "this is an opportunity for intensive study of the new responsibilities that have come upon us today and an endeavor to revise the message of the Church to meet the needs and demands of a new day. It takes time and effort, but if we are to do our work and express our lives for the business of life we must give time and effort and attention. The Church after all can only advance as far as you are prepared to follow it. Here, then, is an opportunity for enlightenment and education under a leader of broad experience and prophetic insight, combined with a balance of judgment, breadth of view and forceful utterance."

JOHN C. WHITE.

MISSISSIPPI

A Mystic Cable—On January the 11 the word "Exceeded" was cabled to Bishop Bratton in France. Bishop Bratton had said that if that particular word reached him he would be the happiest man in France. It reached him and meant that Mississippi had exceeded her apportionment for general missions.

Old Church Renovated—Trinity Church, Pass Christian, well known and loved by tourists from all over the country has been completely renovated, repainted and repaired, and was reopened recently for services. The funds for the purpose were in the bank before repairs were begun. The Nestor of the diocese, the Venerable Dr. Nowell Logan has been in charge for a number of years. Dr. Logan was ordained in Mississippi and has never left the diocese. He is eighty-one years old.

Archdeacon Receives Gifts—The Ven. Archdeacon Waddell, eighty-one years old in January, was presented with two purses of eighty-one dollars each in gold by two of the Masonic orders in Meridian in honor of his eighty-first birthday. The archdeacon is hale and hearty, industriously visiting his territory of many hundred square miles in East Mississippi. As he is well known and much loved, distress calls come to him from all over his field, day and night. The archdeacon answers them all.

ALBERT MARTIN.

ATLANTA

Conference Postponed—The annual conference of the Diocese of Atlanta, which was to have convened on January 23, has been postponed to the last of May, on account of the ubiquitous flu. The conference was to have been held in All Saints' Church in the see city, but so many of the delegates were sick with influenza, and Bishop Mikell himself was in the hospital, so it was deemed advisable to wait until warm weather.

This is the second time an attempt has been made to have the conference in mid-winter, but it has not so far been successful. April or May have been the months for the meeting heretofore, and anyone who has ever seen a southern spring cannot wonder.

The Woman's Auxiliary was contemplating a new departure which it was hoped would increase its efficiency. They have always met on the first day of the diocesan conference, sharing the opening service with the clerical and lay delegates and then going to their own business meeting. This time they had decided to hold their conference the day previous, which would have enabled the bishop to have met with them. Without doubt this is what will take place in May.

E. S. TAYLOR.

COLORADO

Notes on St. John's Seminary—St. John's, Greeley, the theological seminary of the diocese, has taken another forward step. Mrs. Sarah M. Hall has accepted the position of matron. Mrs. Hall is a pioneer missionary in every sense of the word. In the early days of Kemper Hall, Kenosha, Mrs. Hall was matron. Later she became housemother in the church school for Indian girls in South Dakota. Trinity Church, Greeley, furnished the apartment for Mrs. Hall and the guild gave a house-warming reception that was in reality a donation party. During the influenza epidemic one of the students, Samuel Brooks, had a severe attack and died as a result of the disease. Mr. Brooks' death has left open a scholarship at St. John's for some young man who is desirous of preparing for missionary work in the West. Application for scholarship should be made to Dean Bonell, Greeley, Colorado.

Returning Priests and Others in War Work—The Rev. Francis E. Anthony expects soon to return to his old residence in Denver. He has the rank of sergeant, which he gained in service with the medical corps before being invalidated home.

The Rev. Donald Ottman, also formerly in charge of Trinity Memorial Church, will not return to the diocese, but much to the regret of the Bishop of Colorado takes up work at Lexington, North Carolina. It will be remembered that Mr. Ottman was succeeded by his own father in his other Colorado charge at Trinidad and afterwards became chaplain at Fort Sill.

The Rev. Floyd Van Keuren, formerly rector of Canon City, deals now with sixteen French departments and 200,000 refugees as director of general relief in the southwestern zone of France. Mrs. Van Keuren is also working in France in the Home and Hospital Communication Service at Bordeaux.

Christmas Offerings and the Influenza—About Christmas time suffering from closed churches and the ravages of the epidemic, St. Mark's and St. John's Cathedral, Denver, asked for increased offerings, hoping each to get about $600 which they needed, and they received approximately the gratifying sum of $800. The personal losses to the churches of Colorado have fortunately been light.

G. H. HOLORAN.

PITTSBURGH

A Diocesan Conference.—On Monday evening, January 27, in Calvary Parish House, Pittsburgh, a large conference of rectors and superintendents of the Church Schools of the diocese was held. The purpose of the gathering was to make clear and thoroughly discuss the standard of excellence composed and adopted by the Diocesan Board of Religious Education. An address of cordial welcome was given by the rector of Calvary Church, the Rev. Edwin J. Van Etten. The standard of excellence consists of ten phases. Brief and able addresses, of ten-minute duration, were made by the Rev. Messrs. R. N. Meade, R. E. Schulz, Geo. W. Lamb and Lewis B. Whittemore. After each address a free discussion followed. The evening proved to be one of the most enthusiastic and instructive that has ever been held under the auspices of the diocesan board.

JANE CUDDY.

WEST TEXAS

Conference of Clergy—Bishop Capers convened a meeting of the clergy and other officers of the diocese January 22-23 to confer on matters of urgent importance and to engage in a season of prayer and mutual counsel. Practically all the clergy responded. It was determined that more strenuous efforts should be made to reach the unchurched parts of the diocese, since 64 per cent of the population of the State of Texas is positively without any church affiliation and that there are still numerous counties in this diocese entirely without the services and ministry of the Church.

Notes—The Rev. B. S. McKenzie, until recently rector of Gonzales, has been appointed civilian chaplain at San Antonio. His place as dean of the Gonzales convocation has been taken by the Rev. Gayner Banks of Cuero.

Mr. Roy Miller, mayor of Corpus Christi, opened the conference on Wednesday with a rousing speech on the responsibility of the layman in church affairs. Wednesday afternoon a reception was given at St. Mary's Hall in honor of the bishop and clergy of the diocese.

West Texas Military Academy, a diocesan school for boys, has been recognized by the Government as a reserve officers training school.

Mr. George Kirwan, formerly superintendent of St. Mark's Church School, San Antonio, is now a Y. M. C. A. secretary in Mesopotamia, and spent Christmas with relatives in Bombay en route for his future field of service.

A movement has just been inaugurated by the laymen of the Diocese of West Texas to purchase the Episcopal residence at San Antonio. $20,000 is required for this purpose, and the San Antonio churches have pledged themselves to raise $12,000 of this amount, the balance to be secured by the other parishes of the diocese.

A. J. GAYNER BANKS.

WESTERN MASSACHUSETTS

Memorial to Chaplain Danker—On a recent Sunday morning three beautiful stained glass windows by the Gorham Company were dedicated by Bishop Davies in the chancel of St. John's Church, Worcester. They are in memory of the Rev. Walton S. Danker, late rector of the parish. The window on the right represents St. John the Evangelist; that on the left, St. John taking the blessed Virgin Mother to his own home after the Crucifixion; and the central window, an angel pointing the aged John in Patmos to the vision of our Lord in glory. A flag of the republic of France was presented by Mr. and Mrs. Matthew J. Whittall.

RHODE ISLAND

Churchmen's Club Meets—Bishop Reese was the principal speaker at the dinner of the Churchmen's Club of Rhode Island on January 21, at the Turks Head Club, Providence. He was listened to by 200 members from all parts of the diocese, with Mr. William A. Viall as presiding officer. Bishop Reese stressed the importance of the Church's after-war work for soldiers and sailors. "The front," he declared, "is now here in this country." The bishop also outlined the need of providing for the great number of able men who wish to leave the service to enter the ministry whose families must be cared for while they are in training.

Patronal Festival at St. Paul's Pawtucket—The days around St. Paul's Day were observed by St. Paul's Church, Pawtucket in an unusual way. On Sunday morning January 26, the rector, the Rev. Roberts Selhamer, preached an anniversary sermon, with the attendance in a body of teams of visitors, who spent the afternoon in a so-called every name visitation of the parish, when calls were made not only upon members of the church but also upon a who have shown interest in the parish and have called upon it for ministrations. At the evening service the music was from the oratorio "St. Paul" and the preacher was the Rev. Wm. H. Van Allen, D.D., of the Church of the Advent, Boston. On the following evening the annual parish meeting was held, followed by a reception in the parish house, with a large attendance of the men, women, and children.

Bishop Perry's Return—Bishop Perry expected to return from France earlier than had previously been planned. It is now understood that he will arrive the first of March.

JOSEPH M. HOBBS.

KANSAS

Getting Acquainted—Pursuant to his policy of "getting acquainted with individuals in each parish," Bishop Wise spent the octave January 12 to 19, in Epiphany Parish, Independence.

The order for the week included the bishop and the rector getting acquainted; the bishop and the people getting acquainted, and the rector and people getting acquainted, or more deeply acquainted with God and themselves, by means of a parochial mission, which the bishop conducted, and an informal parish reception.

Saturday afternoon was designated as a time for Baptism, and on Sunday, the 19th, a class of adults was presented for Confirmation.

No attempt was made to reach any one who had not hitherto been interested in the parish, but those whom the bishop sought to reach received a more real sense of "life's values."

The mission revived and clarified the individual parishioner's vision of the Kingdom.

ALBANY

An Effective Canvass—Toward the end of the year 1918, the Rev. W. W. Silliman had planned for an every member canvass in St. Mark's Church, Malone, hoping that it would result in assuring sufficient funds to meet the budget of $4,700. At this time Mr. Silliman came down with a severe attack of influenza and was unable to carry out the proposed plan. The men of St. Mark's Parish, under the leadership of the vestry, took over the entire responsibility and work of the canvass and carried it through with such success that they have secured already pledges of $4,714 with the expectation of still more.

Meeting of the Archdeaconry of Troy—The winter meeting of the archdeaconry of Troy was held in St. John's Church, Troy, the Rev. H. R. Freeman, D.D., rector, January 27 and 28. The missionary service, Monday evening, was of the usual order, only that this beautiful church, with its well-trained choir, added double interest to the stories of diocesan missions which were told by the Ven. Archdeacon Purdy and the Rev. C. B. Alford, one of the missionaries.

The missionaries' stories were of unusual and pathetic interest because these faithful priests told of their experiences during the influenza epidemic. After luncheon in the parish house the Rev. James Caird of Troy, president of the Standing Committee of the diocese, read a most thoughtful and devotional paper on "Some Thoughts on the Spiritual Life."

J. N. MARVIN.

CENTRAL NEW YORK

Ordination—On Sunday, January 26, Bishop Fiske advanced to the priesthood, in St. John's Church, Elmira Heights, the Rev. Condit Nelson Eddy. The candidate was presented by the Rev. Henry E. Hubbard, rector of Trinity Church, Elmira. The Rev. Norton T. Houser, rector of St. Peter's Church, Auburn, and dean of the Fifth District, preached the ordination sermon.

Receives Purse—The congregation of St. John's Church, Ithaca, recently presented their rector, the Rev. Henry P. Horton, with a purse of $750, as a token of their appreciation of the work he has done among them.

Farewell Sermon—The Rev. Wm. R. McKim, for the past fourteen years rector of St. John's Church, Oneida, preached his farewell sermon on the Third Sunday after the Epiphany, having accepted a call to the rectorship of Trinity Church, Rochester, where he began his work February 1. He leaves behind him a host of friends and a legacy of substantial work accomplished.

A Growing Work—Remarkable growth and energy has been shown by All Saints' Mission, Johnson City, the Rev. T. Raymond Jones, priest in charge. Although established less than two years ago, it has organized as a parish, and as a result of an everymember canvass will become self supporting. Johnson City is a rapidly growing industrial community, the home of one of the Endicott-Johnson shoe factories.

Important Changes—At recent convocations of the several districts of the diocese a proposed revision of the missionary canon of the diocese has been largely discussed. Notable provisions of the proposed canon are the classification of places receiving aid into (a) organized missions, (b) parochial missions, (c) assisted parishes, (d) preaching stations. Provision is also made for the gradual withdrawal of financial aid, and for the establishment of a minimum salary.

An Interesting Service—Binghamton daily papers gave much space to a notice of a Confirmation service for a class of deaf mutes in Christ Church of that city. The class was prepared and instructed by the Rev. H. A. Van Allen, deaf mute missionary. Bishop Olmsted officiated and addressed the class in the manual language.

THEODORE HAYDN.

NEW MEXICO

Takes Charge of "Big Bend"—The Rev. Clarence Stuart McClellan, Jr., B.D., has recently been appointed by Bishop Howden of New Mexico the head of the missionary district of the "Big Bend" in West Texas. This missionary field, one of the largest in the United States, covers an area of 32,000 square miles and is three times the size of Belgium and larger than Ireland and South Carolina together. It extends for hundreds of miles along the Southern Pacific Railroad and is immediately north of the Rio Grande. Its military importance is great and there are established all through this territory detachments of troops and one large camp of over 2,500 men at Marfa. Marfa is the headquarters of the district, and here the Rev. Mr. McClellan has his home in the rectory of St. Paul's Church. The church here dates from 1897, and to-day its membership includes many of the representative ranchmen of that section.

Mr. McClellan has recently inaugurated a movement for a new community center for Marfa, to be built in connection with St. Paul's Church, and in this center the soldiers of the camp will find a club for dancing, pool, reading, and there is to be a theatrical society formed in connection with the movement. At Alpine, another station on this vast mission field, plans are out for a new church, St. James by name, to be erected this coming spring. During the month the Rev. Mr. McClellan visits Fort Stockton, Fort Davis, Sierra Blanca, Van Horn, Pecos, Marathon, Son-derson, Langtry, and many other places where he has established a monthly service of the Church.

EAST CAROLINA

Death of J. R. Matthews—The Rev. John R. Matthews, a non-parochial clergyman of the Diocese of East Carolina, died of pneumonia on January 22 at Saltville, Virginia. Mr. Matthews was born in England about fifty years ago. Throughout the South Mr. Matthews is well known as a missionary. Memorial services were conducted at St. Paul's Church, Greenville, North Carolina, by the rector, the Rev. C. H. Bascom on January 26. Mr. Matthews was at one time rector of St. Paul's, Greenville. He is survived by his wife.

Ordination—The Rev. Howard Allgood was ordained to the priesthood at St. John's Church, Pitt County, North Carolina, by the Rt. Rev. Thomas C. Darst, D.D., bishop of East Carolina, on January 24. The Rev. Messrs. C. H. Bascom, M. C. Daughtrey, G. F. Hill and J. H. Gibboney assisted in the service. The sermon was preached by the Rev. G. F. Hill, rector of Christ Church, Elizabeth City, North Carolina, and the candidate presented to the bishop by the Rev. M. C. Daughtrey, examining chaplain of the diocese. The newly ordained priest will continue his work at St. John's, Grif-ton and nearby missions.

Change Meeting Place—The bishop has announced that the thirty-sixth annual council will be held in St. Peter's Church, Washington, North Carolina, instead of at Fayetteville, on Tuesday, May 13.

J. H. GIBBONEY.

GEORGIA

Ordination—The Rt. Rev. F. F. Reese, D.D., Bishop of Georgia, advanced to the priesthood the Rev. William Worthington Webster on January 25, in St. Paul's Church, Augusta, Georgia. The candidate was presented by the Rev. G. Sherwood Whitney, rector of St. Paul's, and the bishop preached the sermon. The Rev. Thomas Noe, of Graniteville, South Carolina; the Rev. H. H. Barber, and Rev. F. W. B. Dorset, of Augusta, assisted in the service. Owing to quarantine regulations a special permit for the service was issued by the Board of Health, and only a few persons were permitted to be present.

Again Quarantined—A second wave of influenza has again put both Savannah and Augusta in quarantine. In both places the churches have been closed since January 10. The Rev. G. Sherwood Whitney, rector of St. Paul's, Augusta, has been serving as member of a citizens' committee to aid the Board of Health in controlling the situation. He has made vigorous efforts to secure a modification of the regulations for permitting the churches to open for one hour on Sunday morning; but while a very large public sentiment supports this plea, the Board of Health has not yet granted it. The influenza is waning rapidly, and it is hoped the quarantine will be lifted before another Sunday.

Notes—The Rev. William Johnson became rector of St. Mark's, Brunswick, on January 1.

The Rev. H. H. Barber has become locum tenens at the Church of the Good Shepherd, Augusta.

St. Paul's, Augusta, has lost a consecrated man and a valuable member in the death of the junior warden, Mr. J. A. A. W. Clark, who succumbed to pneumonia on January 6. His wife died also a week later of the same malady, leaving three young children.

Bishop Reese is making a two weeks' series of visitations for the Bishop of South Carolina, who is still in France.

G. SHERWOOD WHITNEY.

Protest Closing Churches—For the third time the churches have been closed because of influenza in spite of divided opinion among the doctors as to the necessity or benefit of such closing.

The Savannah clericus sent this resolution to the sanitary board without effect:

"Resolved: by the Savannah clergies, composed of all the clergy of the Episcopal churches in the city—that a respectful protest be filed with the Board of Sanitary Commissioners regarding the present existing ban on the holding of religious services in our respective places of worship, and further we respectfully urge that we be permitted to exercise our clear right and duty to hold our accustomed services in the church of God."

At the meeting on January 23 the clergies considered the establishment in connection with St. Augustine's Colored Church of a bureau of employment, there being a zeal for such a work.

EDWARD W. OSBORNE.

CHICAGO

Interchurch War Work Service—On January 24 a meeting was held at St. James's Church, in this city, under the auspices of the Interchurch Emergency Committee, which is directing the united campaign to raise $10,000,000. The opening prayer was said by Bishop Anderson, and the Rt. Rev. W. T. Stearly, Bishop Co-adjutor of Newark, was one of the chief speakers. Other speakers were W. A. Quail, of St. Louis, Methodist bishop, and the Rev. Nehemiah Boynton, of the Congregational Church, at present a chaplain in the coast artillery.

Memorial for the Rev. A. H. W. Anderson—The committee that was appointed at the time of the funeral of the Rev. A. H. W. Anderson, rector of All Saints' Church, Ravenswood, which took place on January 20, has drawn up a memorial for Dr. Anderson on behalf of the clergy of the diocese. A paragraph from the memorial follows:

"Dr. Anderson admirably manifested the virtues of the Christian priesthood. His stalwart ministry brought blessings to all, and was especially fruitful in the lives of men and boys. His life was dedicated to Christ and His Church, and that service led him to high tasks for the state until he laid down his life for God and country. Enriched by friendship which proved its reality in time of need, we, his brethren, shall ever cherish his memory—loyal friend, true patriot, faithful priest of Jesus Christ."

Financial Campaign in Elgin—The Church of the Redeemer, Elgin, Illinois, of which the Rev. James M. Johnson is rector, will celebrate the 61st anniversary on February 17. This celebration will mark the successful completion of a two months' campaign to cancel the church debt, which amounted to $9,000. The campaign was started with a parish supper, at which Bishop Griswold introduced the Rev. William W. Newell, D.D., a church financial specialist, and an appeal was made which brought in pledges amounting to $6,800 that evening. A strenuous follow-up campaign by the men of the parish has raised the balance. This campaign marks the culmination of three years of intensive effort on the part of the rector and people of the Church of the Redeemer. In 1915 a small Sunday School room was enlarged into a parish house. In this work 112 men of the parish did $3,500 worth of work themselves. In 1916, three weeks after it had been redecored, the church was gutted by fire. In 1917 the parish utilized what was left of the old building, and spent $16,000 in the construction of a new and much larger edifice.

Moving Picture Censorship—The Social Service Commission held a meeting at St.

Mary's Home for Children, January 21, when the matter of moving picture censorship, which was discussed at the last meeting, was brought up again by the secretary, the Rev. J. B. Haslam, and a resolution was passed recommending that the features to be excluded from the pictures be not left to the discretion of the censor, but be named by city ordinance. It was further recommended that the censorship should be taken out of the hands of the police and given to a special board of censors.

At the last meeting of the commission a Social Service Council was formed, composed of representatives of the several parish social service committees. This council met at the close of the meeting of the commission. A committee was appointed to draw up a list of respectable moving picture houses in the different sections of the city. The matter of the relationship between capital and labor was discussed, and the Rev. C. M. Andrews offered the auditorium of St. Timothy's Church for a forum to be held by the commission.

CHARLES L. STREET.

LOS ANGELES

New City Mission Chaplain—The executive board of the Los Angeles City Mission Society at its January meeting elected the Rev. A. F. Randall chaplain to the public institutions of Los Angeles city and county. Mr. Randall's previous experience qualifies him peculiarly for this position, he having been for several years chaplain of St. Luke's Hospital in Spokane and a member of the municipal Charities Commission. He thus brings to his work that rare balance of sympathy and judgment which is essential in the equipment of a social worker.

Work for Armenia—All the churches in the city of Los Angeles, including the Roman Catholics and the Jews, are devoting themselves to the Armenian and Syrian Relief campaign, for which they have accepted the entire responsibility. It was expected to utilize in this drive the machinery of the war savings organizations that had done such effective service for the Government. But when after the signing of the armistice it was found to be impossible to rally these organizations, the Armenian and Syrian Relief Committee frankly laid the whole burden of the cause upon the churches, and they, in turn, although inexperienced in such drives and lacking compact central organization, have accepted the challenge and set themselves nobly to the task. Three hundred thousand dollars have been asked for from the whole city, of which the sum of $15,000 has been apportioned to the Episcopal churches.

The Happiest Parish—The happiest parish in Los Angeles at the present moment is St. Athanasius, which is about to occupy a new and strategic site, the gift to the parish of Miss Madeline F. Wills. St. Athanasius has been a somewhat migratory church. Nearly twenty years ago it left its first location on Court Circle, almost in the heart of the city, and went out to seek new opportunities at Custer Avenue and Temple Street. Here an important work was established and might have continued but for a progressive immigration of Jews. The generous gift of Miss Wills places this church at the very center of a thickly populated and growing section where there are large opportunities for religious and social work. Incidentally the location is the most beautiful church site in the city, a flat iron lot with almost three hundred feet frontage on each side, facing picturesque Echo

Park and its lake charmingly nestled among the hills. The church and the rectory have been moved and remodelled under the personal direction of Mr. Arthur B. Benton, well known architect and churchman, and a large space has been reserved for the greater church of "St. Athanasius by the Lake," which exists yet only in sketch and by faith.

THOMAS C. MARSHALL.

HANKOW

Thanksgiving—Thanksgiving Day was especially marked in Wuchang this year by a joint parade of Boone, St. Joseph and Trinity with more than six hundred students in line. The Boone Band also led the parade of the volunteers from church to consulate after the Thanksgiving service.

Bishop Home—The bishop reached home from his trip to Ichang and Shanghai on November 20. At both places the epidemic (influenza and malignant malaria) had abated, though the effects were still evident. The Heckang school is closed, several deaths having taken place among the pupils. The teacher is incapacitated and the catechist has had to retire to Shanghai to recuperate. The Rev. James Tsang accompanied the bishop to Ichang, and finding that traveling conditions were comparatively safe, he and Mr. Cooper started overland on November 20 for Shihna, where the workers have been in some distress for money. The latest word sent back en route showed that they had safely reached Lang Pin on November 23. Oftainable carriers were weak with disease. Food was scarce and many deserted dwellings were passed, but no other hindrance had been met.

Parents' Day—November 23 was observed at Boone as Parents' Day. A special invitation was sent to the parents of each guardian of each boy, and a fair number came. They were shown over the buildings; the Boy Scouts gave them a show exhibition. They saw a football game, and then they gathered in the library, where Mr. Ts'en explained to them the management of the school and tried to make plain just what were the legitimate expenses of the students.

For Victory—An American special service of Thanksgiving for the allied victory was held in St. Paul's Cathedral on November 28 and was in charge of the clergy, the bishop making a short address. Where practicable special services were also held in Chinese throughout the diocese. A prayer for use during this time of peace deliberation and reconstruction has been set forth for use in the diocese.

INDIANAPOLIS

Mobilization of Man Power—A movement to solve one of the practical problems of the Churches—the mobilizing of the "manpower" of the local church—took practical shape recently at St. Paul's parish hall, New Albany, when a group of active and representative men laid plans for the forming of a men's club. The keynote of the meeting was "efficiency" in service for men by men. Addresses were given by the Rev. Frank J. Mallett, rector of St. Paul's Church, and Mr. Edward C. Swigert, "Y" worker at Camp Zachary Taylor. F. B. Stotsenburg presided, and a committee consisting of William E. Coolman, Harry Marquis and Earle Embrey was appointed to draft a workable constitution and arrange for the adjourned meeting for men on Friday night.

BALTIMORE

Annual Convention—The 135th annual convention of the Diocese of Maryland, at the Memorial Church, Baltimore, January 29 and 30, was largely attended, business-like and harmonious. It was preceded by a mass meeting under the auspices of the Commission on Social Service at which effective speeches were made by Professor Vida D. Scudder, of Wellesley College; Bishop Lines and the Rev. Tinker, director of the City Mission in New York, the subject being "The Church and Reconstruction." There was speech-making than usual by members of the convention, but two especially strong effective addresses were delivered by speakers from outside. The Rev. Dr. Tinker produced a profound effect by his vivid presentation of the work of the City Mission of New York and the convention referred a project for the organization of a City Mission in Baltimore to the board, the trustees of the Cathedral Foundation, the Committee of Missions, the Social Service Commission with power to act. The Rev. Roy B. Guild was urged upon the convention that there should be a Council of Churches in Baltimore for cooperation in as many lines of religious and philanthropic work as possible and steps were taken in this direction. After an earnest presentation of the need of uniformity in Sunday School work, it was determined that a meeting of clergy should be held at an early date to the adoption of a uniform system of education in the Sunday Schools of the diocese.

One of the outstanding features of the convention was a rousing report from the Social Service Commission dealing especially with the responsibility of the Church in the reconstruction which is to follow war, which resulted in the adoption of the following resolutions:

Resolved, that this convention favors the formation of a league of nations to enforce peace and to secure justice to all nations, large and small.

Resolved, that this convention place its record as endorsing a minimum wage in industry, interpreted as a "community wage," an amount on which a man can bring up his family in wholesome decency.

Resolved, that we favor increasing application of the plan of cooperation of employees with employers in the working management of business enterprises.

Elections of officers resulted as follows: Standing Committee—The Rev. Drs. William Meade Dame, Edward T. Helfenstein, Hur B. Kinsolving, and Peregrine Wroth; Messrs. Herbert M. Brune, Henry Harlan, Joseph Packard and Charles Scull.

Deputies to General Convention—The Rev. Drs. Philip Cook, Edward T. Helfenstein, A. B. Kinsolving, John I. Yellott, Messrs. Edward Guest Gibson, Joseph Packard, Blanchard Randall, George C. Thomas. Alternates—Rev. Drs. Arthur C. Yell, Peregrine Wroth, William Page, and John D. LaMothe; Messrs. Glenn, Henry Barton Jacobs, Edward Rich and Arthur Thompson. Social Service Commission—Rev. Messrs. Romilly Humphries, Philip Cook, Richard W. Gue, E. Dering Evans, John D. LaMothe, E. T. Helfenstein, C. E. Perkins, C. L. Atwater; Messrs. John S. Fulmer, Daniel Randall, William F. Cochran, Anna S. Abercrombie, Mrs. Janon Herber and Miss Elisabeth Gilman.

Secretary—Mr. A. De R. Sappington, 1000 Building, Baltimore.

Treasurer—Mr. Blanchard Randall.

WYLLYS REDE.

English Church News

"Starving Clergy"—The Bishop of London has not yet got his £50,000 to relieve the pressing necessities of the London clergy, but he has passed the half-way mark, and he writes to the Times to thank that journal for the backing which it gave to the scheme, and to report progress. Very many of the richer clergy have contributed and many soldiers; indeed one colonel has spent his leave in acknowledging the checks, besides giving a handsome donation of his own. The bishop still hopes that the fund may reach the figure which he set, so that no incumbent shall have less than £400 for 1919, and no curate less than £250. He also complains that the public departments which have church patronage in their gift do not sufficiently recognize the claims of the chaplains—not the army chaplains, but those who had congregations of church people in various continental cities. These men have been ruined by the war, and the Bishop of London, under whose diocesan supervision they worked, has nothing to offer them, except one of the London "poor livings." He mentions, amongst others, the case of the Dresden chaplain, the Rev. C. A. Moore, who stood up to the Germans when they tried to fine him 4,000 marks, by telling them that they would have to pay 4,000 million marks when the war was over. He succeeded in getting back to England, to find that the only job open to him was an east-end London curacy. Another brave man, also named Moore, stuck it out as chaplain at Lille right through the war, and is at present unemployed. But doubtless the publicity which the bishop gives to these cases will remove the scandal.

The Central Fund—While the Times is printing letters on the subject of clerical poverty, the church press is discussing the proposal for a central fund. Archdeacon Peile's letters to the Guardian have brought a reply from the Rev. J. H. Ellison, vicar of St. Michael's, Cornhill, London, who has for many years been recognized as an authority on church finance, and is chairman of the Propaganda Committee. It is a very temperate letter: he does not reproach the archdeacon, but asks what alternative he has to propose? The present plan "has been thought out by the best brains the Church can produce: no one has yet suggested an alternative plan." He claims also that St. Paul himself would have used such a method, if a newspaper press had existed in his day. He would not have hesitated to make the straightforward appeal, "it's your money we want," when it was necessary to equip the church for new tasks.

The archdeacon, writing in the same issue, adds to his previous criticism by explaining that it was not his object to check the natural flow of offerings. But it should be a natural flow: not "an artificial pumping." He distrusts this central reservoir, because "centralization means oligarchy." There will be nothing really representative in the organization which administers the money: places at a distance from London will come off badly. He dreads the power of the purse in a few hands. And the appeal to the moneyed classes will give these people some right to dictate the policy of the Church of England. He quotes the "millionaire influence in certain American universities."

Bishop of Chester Resigns—In a few weeks there will be another vacancy to be filled in the episcopal ranks. Dr. Jayne, Bishop of Chester, has been in bad health for some time, and it is expected that when he completes his thirtieth year of office, which he will do next month, he will resign. He is seventy-four years of age. Another bishop who is getting on in years is Dr. Ridgeway, Bishop of Chichester, who has just given an indication that he is contemplating the same step. When these two resignations go into effect, the Prime Minister will have an opportunity of making a couple of "reform" appointments. The Challenge, in commenting over the appointment of Canon Pearce to the See of Worcester, is not enthusiastic. He will be a "thoroughly worthy bishop, who will preside with dignity over his diocese." He will do nothing rash: "but it is just rashness that we want upon the bench, it is bold experiments that we long for in the dioceses. The Church needs less chairmanship and more leadership. We fear that the last appointment has but added one to her well-filled ranks of chairman."

Pope and President—Dean Welldon, of Durham, still continues his habit of writing to the newspapers on anything that interests him. His latest discovery is that there is a peculiar interest in the meeting of President Wilson and the Pope. The Papacy and the Presidency are the "supreme embodiments of the democratic principle, as being the most exalted offices to which a man can rise, and frequently has risen, without any antecedent privilege of birth, or rank, or favor." The dean does not contend that both offices have been equally loyal to democracy, for the one has been "autocratic in spirit and influence, while the other has always been republican." That is all that the dean has to say: so there is not very much point in the letter, though he does recall the fact that a meeting was at one time proposed between the late Theodore Roosevelt and Pius X. But the meeting between the ex-president and the Pope did not take place.

"A Landslide of Moral Values"—Canon E. A. Burroughs is again speaking at meetings, having made a good recovery from his breakdown in health. Speaking at a meeting for Intercession at Queen's Hall, London, he said that the victory had not brought us nearer to peace on earth. "If you want to have this, you must have goodness." He maintained that there had been a perfect landslide of moral values during the war. Yet he was not without hope: there was idealism in the air, "but we have to get it from the air into the stuff of the nation." The general election had begun with the cry: "Make Britain better," and had ended with: "Make the Germans pay." So feeble is our Christianity that the State does not take it seriously. What we need in the Church is the spirit of Marshall Foch: "I can't hold on: well, then, I attack." On the proposal of Canon Burroughs, a message was sent to President Wilson thanking him for upholding before the world a high standard of Christian statesmanship, and assuring him that the Christians of the world will be solidly behind him.

BOOKS ON CHURCH ART AND ARCHITECTURE, SYMBOLISM AND HERALDRY

THE following bibliography contains only a few of many books on church art and architecture that might have been included, and only such books as are now in print. Those volumes published by the Oxford University Press form a series which in its entirety constitutes a good working library on church art and architecture. It is also to be noted that the articles in the Encyclopedia Britannica and in the Catholic Encyclopedia on ecclesiastical art are reliable and interesting. This bibliography has been prepared with the assistance of Mr. Wilfrid E. Anthony, the authority on ecclesiology in Mr. Bertram Grosvenor Goodhue's office in New York.

A SUGGESTED ORDER OF SERVICE FOR ROOSEVELT DAY

THE following order of service is suggested as appropriate for use next Sunday, February 9, when the late Colonel Roosevelt will be remembered in many churches. The passage from Micah, suggested for the first lesson, was Colonel Roosevelt's favorite Scripture passage. Hymn 636 was his favorite hymn:

- PROCESSIONAL—Hymn 194.
 PSALM—91.
 FIRST LESSON—Micah vi., 6 to end of chapter.
 SECOND LESSON—St. Matthew xxv., 14-30.
 HYMNS—636, 505, 196.
 RECESSIONAL—Hymn 507.

FREE PEWS

The Rev. Henry Sloane Coffin, D.D.

THERE are two sorts of institutions with which a church may be compared. One is the club which its members support for their own benefit and that of their guests; the other is the public school, which is maintained by the community for the education of the children of the entire neighborhood. At first sight a church supported by the voluntary contributions of its adherents seems more analogous to the social club. It is maintained because the congregation desires its inspiration and teaching and fellowship for themselves and their families. And churches are an unusually hospitable form of club, offering their privileges to any who desire to receive them, bringing the dues down to the abilities of the poorest, and usually attempting to welcome strangers with friendly courtesy.

If the church be such a club, then special provision for the seating of its paying adherents seems congruous with its nature; although even then it is to be hoped that the seats will not be graded with prices varying according to location, so that Dives lines the middle aisle while Lazarus finds a rear seat in the gallery—a method plainly at variance with the Christian ideal of fellowship and in manifest opposition to the explicit teaching of the Epistle of James.

But in reality a church is far more like a public school, erected and supported by a congregation for the benefit of its entire neighborhood. As Christians its adherents are more eager that the religiously indifferent and unenlightened shall be reached than that they shall themselves be further edified. Under such circumstances they cannot wish for themselves any preferential treatment in the house of God. They ought rather to prefer to stand, if necessary, that the casual attendant may be seated where he will hear most satisfactorily and be impressed with the courtesy and kindness of those whose guest he finds himself in God's name.

The main point in all matters pertaining to a church is that the church be kept true to its own genius as a fellowship of people meeting together as the household of God, and the custom of leaving the sittings free and unassigned seems to promote the family spirit and to give the entire company more readily a homelike feeling in this place of prayer.

Crusade Against Hearstism

(From a sermon by the Rev. Van Rensselaer Gibson)

THERE is a dangerous foe to our moral and national integrity in our midst. The Church is ultra-conservative—yet Jesus Christ's religion is the most radical thing in the world—so radical that it would be more dangerous than the evil we attack, were it not actuated by the Holy Spirit of Love. In spite of this, it seems more difficult to inspire action on a great moral issue of this character within the Church than elsewhere. The argument is that it is the Church's function to hold services, punctilious in their observance of all the niceties of ritual; to bury the dead and so on. This is an obvious absurdity. Indeed, it is pure camouflage, the real reason being indifference, lack of courage, or such a gross ignorance of what constitutes real religion as to be an unpardonable sin in this enlightened day. So far as I know no Church and few groups within the Churches have placed themselves on record as enemies of Hearstism. Certainly the Church has not been conspicuous in action protesting against this great moral and national menace, nor has it declared itself in strong terms of denunciation, in any way reflecting the withering scorn or echoing the vociferous invective of its Master in His unsparing attack on His moral enemies.

"No loyal citizen or group of citizens, friends of the sacred cause of liberty and righteousness, above all among those who name the name of Christ, should rest until this tremendously powerful internal enemy is rendered impotent, until this cursed thing we call Hearstism is crushed. The Kaiser is well on his way. What are you going to do with his friends here? Away with the whole tribe! Let us make a clean sweep of it! Along with the Hohenzollerns, along with the German militarism, along with German beer made in little Germany here, along with Boloism in France, along with ruthless and hateful kultur in its every form, this unspeakable Hearstism in America, too, must go! In the name of God, we demand its suppression, we demand its destruction, we demand its annihilation."

The Gorham Company excels in the production of Memorials, Honor Rolls and medals in Bronze, Gold, Silver, Glass and Mosaic, which by their artistic excellence and their patriotic appeal fulfil the most exacting requirements as to taste and expenditure.

THE GORHAM COMPANY

FIFTH AVENUE AT THIRTY-SIXTH STREET NEW YORK

The Open Forum

In Memory of Nova Scotians and Prince Edward Islanders

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

In a few days there will be sent out by the Diocesan Women's Cathedral League, to every town in the Diocese of Nova Scotia—that is to say, to every town in the Provinces of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island—a circular letter announcing the beginning of a carefully planned campaign with the object of raising the sum of $10,000 for the erection in the Cathedral of All Saints', Halifax, the diocesan church, a beautiful stained glass window as a memorial of all Nova Scotians and Prince Edward Islanders who, in the great war now so triumphantly ended, were content to die that freedom, truth and justice might live. The circular will be accompanied by a letter from His Grace Archbishop Worrell, heartily endorsing the movement, and bespeaking support for it, and by a short but detailed description of the design. It may here be stated that this will be in entire harmony with the purpose of the window, and that the latter will indeed be an "holy offering, rich and rare." Colored prints, giving some idea of the beauty of the window, have also been secured by the league and will be available by any of those who undertake the active work of collecting funds, should the latter think these would serve to stimulate interest.

Purchased with the voluntary offerings of a proud and thankful people, the memorial will, down through all the peaceful years which are to come, perpetually exalt the infinite sacrifice by which peace was purchased, and since it is not to be a memorial of members of the Church of England only, but of all the men of the two provinces who died, will silently but after an exquisite fashion also testify to and exalt the Christian principle of universal brotherhood. The names of all the dead of both provinces will be inscribed in a vellum book, which will be placed near the window, and which will be open to all.

The members of the league have, after due consideration as to the most effective method of procedure, decided to send the circular letter referred to, to one representative churchwoman in each town, to whom they will look confidently for leadership in the movement in that town, and to whom they will give all possible backing.

The window, the handiwork of a firm of worldwide note, will be a masterpiece of artist and craftsman, and will stand behind and overlook that holy table which is sacred to the "Blest Sacrament of Unity." There, in the cathedral church, it will perpetually exalt, before every worshiper and every visitor, the dignity, the loveliness, the triumph of that sacrifice which has indeed made holy ground of the battlefields of France and Flanders, and consecrated the waters of the sea to every Canadian worthy of his heritage.

"No calendar blazons their triumph

With service of vigil or feast,

And he that was greatest among them

Is even as he that was least.

For the fearless of heart and the fearful

Who trembled—but came at Thy call,

We bless Thee, we thank Thee, we laud

Thee,

We love Thee, O Father of all."

All who desire to contribute to the fund and wish to send their subscriptions direct are requested to forward them to Mrs. A.

H. Whitman, 63 Victoria Road, Halifax, and they will be promptly acknowledged. Let it be borne in mind that the window is to be erected with the voluntary offerings of all who wish to contribute, and let none be deterred from contributing by the fact that his or her contribution must be small. The small gift with the heart of love and loyalty behind it will be as gladly welcomed as the larger gift from the person of larger means.

Let Them Remain in France!

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

I understand that it is the intention of our Government to remove the bodies of our soldiers who have died or who have been killed in battle over here, to the United States after peace has been declared. Such unfortunate action must be prevented, if possible.

At a meeting of the chaplains of the First Division a resolution was unanimously passed requesting the Government to allow these bodies to remain where they are now buried in France. We have American cemeteries in the French cities and villages and in these cemeteries the bodies of our men who died while fighting in France ought to remain. The cemeteries at the front were of necessity more or less hastily selected, but doubtless by this time the Graves Registration Service has gone over this area and arranged them in a decent and orderly manner.

After the battle of Soissons, General Mangin sent a message to the American troops who had taken part in that operation. He said in closing: "American comrades! I am grateful to you for the blood so generously spilled on the soil of my country. I am proud to have commanded you during such days and to have fought with you for the deliverance of the world." By all means let the bodies of our men, who were killed at Soissons, remain in the American cemeteries in that area to remind the world of their bravery and their valor, and as an honor to our country. Let the same thing be true of every front upon which we have fought. Let the bodies of the men remain near the field of battle in which they gave their lives.

I hope that such a sentiment against their removal will manifest itself at home that the authorities will allow the bodies of our dead to remain in France, a soil made sacred by their sacrifice.

An Important Matter

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

Anybody who loves Christ wants to do all he can for Christ, and is thankful to be shown a way to do this. I write of what mine eyes have seen, and of some things I have handled so to speak, and I know my testimony is true. There may be fields more fruitful, though I doubt it, but I am sure none in all the missionary endeavor of our Church have been better prepared, tilled, or made more plenteous in all manner of spiritual store than our field in Brazil.

Nowhere where our Church goes to work for Christ are opportunities more abundant, workers more devoted, and fruit more plentifully evident. A field that has furnished a missionary for the coadjutor bishop of a diocese like Virginia and has given to the world a translation of our Prayer Book, and the entire Scriptures into Portuguese, deserves consideration and approbation and generous assistance. Missionaries in Brazil are picked men, most of them native, all of them well educated men and recognized spiritual leaders.

Much of this is due, most of it indeed to the wonderful bishop whose cheery temperament, attractive attainments, impelling common sense, and genuine spirituality are everywhere in evidence.

On Epiphany, 1899, Lucien Lee Kinsolving, then a missionary in Brazil, was consecrated bishop of that extensive jurisdiction in St. Bartholomew's Church, New York. Members of that parish will remember this with becoming pride.

The Brazil Committee of the Woman's Auxiliary in New York wish to commemorate this anniversary. They ask for offerings to send him a fund of a few thousand dollars for his use in his great field. There are parishes, and schools, and mission stations, all of them supported somewhat by the natives, who fully appreciate these efforts for their good. There are places where, could missions be planted, churches would soon be built.

To get the fund started and push it to completion is the great consideration. I cannot refrain from telling others about it who, like myself, seeing a good thing want to help it along. I am not begging. This is not needed. I am giving good and generous people a great chance to show their gratitude to a noble, stirring, ideal bishop who is known all over Brazil, and indeed throughout South America, as a fine type of man, the right sort of citizen, the exemplary Christian and an enthusiastic patriot.

A list of contributors without the amounts will be sent to Bishop Kinsolving. Large amounts though welcome are not expected. Small amounts in large number will be sufficient. Checks or money orders may be made payable and sent to Mr. Joseph N. Blanchard, 1109 Madison Avenue, New York City, the chairman of the committee. Rectors can help us by making this project known through their weekly bulletins or parish papers.

Information Wanted

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

Can any of your readers supply me with a picture of the Rev. Dr. C. F. Crusen, born of Danish parents in Philadelphia June 27, 1794, who died as librarian at the General Theological Seminary, October 18, 1865?

Does anyone know how old was the Rev. Dr. Solomon Halling, a Dane, surgeon in Washington's army, ordained priest by Bishop J. Madison in 1792, who died as rector at Georgetown, South Carolina, December 24, 1813?

Breweries in China

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

In your issue of January 11 you had an editorial, "China to Get Our Breweries." Can't you write stronger than that? Does nobody in America care—not even a Christian Church—about the degradation and corruption of the Chinese? I have heard as yet no strong word spoken in pulpit or press against this despicable venture for making money by ruining people whose ignorance and gullibility makes it easy.

Never suppose that the Chinese are to be sold any such non-existent thing as liquor of good quality. The classes most easily taken in by the intensive advertising methods of modern brewing interests will be able to afford only the worst of the bad whiskey, and all that goes with it will keep their nation down in the mire. On the shoulders of helpless China is shifted a curse that America with all her strength took scores of years to throw off! Do you and I regard this with complacency?

This sordid betrayal of another country's weakness may be something we have no legal means of interfering with, but we should not even refer to it in anything less than the most burning, stinging words at our command. The American (?) perpetrators of this "enterprise" should be made to feel the withering scorn of the Christian Church and awakened public conscience of their fellow-countrymen.

The Common Cup

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

The total effect of so much recent discussion of exceptional ways of administering the Communion cup has been not to allay apprehension among the laity but rather to increase an entirely unnecessary sensitiveness and alarm in the matter. What really needs to be done is to show them that all this is largely due to imagination and without the least foundation in fact. Accordingly I am asking you to be good enough to give currency to these brief quotations from a little booklet containing an address some years ago in St. Augustine, Florida, by J. Ewing Mears, M.D., LL.D., an eminent Philadelphia physician and churchman. They are made with his kind permission. His address is 1535 Land Title Building, Philadelphia, in case any one wishes a copy of the little book itself.

BOYD VINCENT.

(Here follow the quotations)

The principle which controls the transmission of germ diseases is the same—the germs must, in order to infect our system, gain access to the blood, directly, as by wound, or through either the digestive or the respiratory organs. We must ingest them, or inhale them, or receive them directly into the blood. . . . It has been shown by experiment that the venom of the rattlesnake may be eaten with impunity, but prompt intoxication occurs when the snake injects the venom into a wound made with its fangs.

From the above information you will know in order that infection should enter the body through the use of the cup in the Communion service it could only do so by bacilli which may enter through the mouth. . . . The skin possesses very slight powers of absorption, and the mucous membrane is very similar to it in this respect. It covers the outer surface of the lips, and may be said to form a barrier to the ingress of deleterious or harmful substances. Against this surface of the lips rests the edge or rim of vessels from which liquids are taken into the mouth, and in this way anything which may rest on the rim comes into contact with a membrane which possesses low powers of absorption. . . . After each communicant has received the wine the priest should wipe the rim with the purificator or napkin, and rotate the cup in order to offer an untouched surface to the next communicant. . . . With these precautions the cup can be used in the Communion service free from any danger of disease-contamination. . . . I shall conclude by presenting the opinions of men distinguished in the science of medicine, teachers in the great medical institutions of our country, practitioners of eminence in the special branches under discussion, and workers in laboratories of research. From these all there comes but the one opinion—and it is this—that no authenticated cases are on record in which disease has been conveyed through the use of the cup in the Communion service. Professor James Tyson and Professor John H. Musser, professors of the Principles and Practice of Medicine and of Clinical Medicine in the University of Pennsylvania, and Professor James C. Wilson, professor of the Principles and Practice of Medicine in Jefferson Medical College, all unite in this opinion, conveying the information to me by message. . . . "There are no authenticated cases of the transmission of tuberculosis in this manner." . . . "I know of no instance in which disease has been transmitted by the Communion cup."

Dr. W. M. Parker, Manchester-by-the-Sea, Massachusetts, contributes to the Medical Record, New York, date of March 5, 1892, a paper containing information upon the subject of the "Hygiene of the Holy Communion." He says: "Some eight years ago I sent out circulars to prominent clergymen and medical men in this country and in Europe. . . . In all of this mass of professional experience and of carefully prepared opinions, not one case could be found, either in this country or in Europe, where any injury had resulted of any kind whatever. Nor is there one instance on record of the transmission of disease to the clergyman who consumes the last contents of the chalice. Upon him would certainly fall the greatest danger, if it were present." . . . Dr. Howard S. Anders, Philadelphia, who has made a special study of the subject, . . . read a paper before the section on state medicine at the meeting of the American Medical Association, held June 1, 1897, in which he made the following statement: . . . "We know of not one bona fide instance of disease contracted from a common Communion cup."

A SOLDIER'S CHRISTMAS IN FRANCE

This charming letter, written by a young churchman now serving in the American Expeditionary Force, has come to the office of THE CHURCHMAN. We think that the narrative is worth sharing with our readers.—Editor.

I WOKE up Christmas morning most appropriately in a stable, lying on straw. Up in the lofts the men were calling their morning greetings to one another. The bugle blew and we fell in on the road in out little French village at seven o'clock, while it was still twilight.

After formation we had breakfast—prunes, bacon, bread and coffee. As soon as I had my mess kit washed I was off for my favorite town. I have already written you of it, "nestling down to the landscape," a mile away. When I entered the village church Mass had already begun. This church is a gem, with its low, rounded arches, discolored wood carving and stalls seasoned and rare, lovely standards, many flowers, banners, candles and a Christmas shrine. I wish you might have seen that shrine. It was as though the December greens from the hillside, a hundred yards up behind the church, had come in to the Christmas Mass and arranged themselves in wonder around the images of the cows and the holy three. Pine, mistletoe, white snowflowers, holly, moss wreathed themselves about the thatched roof; and on the green bank some disproportionately tiny sheep were sprinkled, suggesting the lovely old conceit of "flocks of stars." A tiny oil lamp with a red star in front of it all, hung on a delicate gold chain.

The whole town was present, the men, most of them, acting most formally, the women piously and the children naturally. The choir of shrill-voiced girls sang horribly, but sang "Noel" with such obvious delight and it was such a situation and such a carol that I must confess what I suppose the vivisectioners of our personalities would call a "complex," or something or other. At any rate I just about lost control of my eyes for the joy of it.

I walked back to my own town in time to go to another Mass—there is actually no other place to sit down, to say nothing of a place to go, but the church. In it—it was begun in 900—is a Dutch painting of St. Jerome at his studies.

Then came our company Christmas dinner, probably the most often discussed occasion of the month. Let me see. We had ham, cauliflower, mashed potatoes, bread and coffee, nuts, a box of cigarettes, and half a pound of chocolate.

Immediately after mess I determined upon a bold step. President Wilson was to be in Chaumont, seven kilometers off. Passes were not issued. Arrest awaited anyone who went there. But the prospects of Christmas night in an old and beautiful French city, decorated for a celebration, as against a dreary frozen time about the village, made me bold. I took a companion under my arm. This was, as it happened, something of a Christmas charity. The poor fellow is an over-sensitive, effeminate, self-pitying, self-conscious, timid, irresolute Jew, who has made life utterly miserable for himself in the army. The animal spirits of his comrades exercise themselves at his expense. As you may imagine, his sensitiveness gives him some redeeming features. He has rare taste in decorative art, which is his profession. I really am afraid for the fellow. At any rate it seemed only decent, and not particularly unpalatable to me either, to save him the misery of an utterly cheerless Christmas. So down the road we went to Chaumont.

On the way we passed Pershing's headquarters, the famous old Château Marne.

There were guards on the highway every ten yards and many Frenchmen from the countryside had come down to see Wilson and the general pass. We saw them. When we reached town it was getting dark. Our first goal was the cathedral. It is a fascinating monument of many styles and ages. The wood carving and the tracery of the side aisles and chapels of the choir are most memorable; also many antiques and some rare wood painting on little panels. I should think Dürer might well be contented with them. Some charming, merry French children who said they "belonged" in the church got hold of us and insisted on showing us the tower. The chimes were fifteenth century, mellow and soft. When we reached the top of the spiral stair one of the children pointed out a narrow window. I was all expectation, but never could I have expected a glimpse of anything so lovely. Beneath us lay the whole city with its winding streets and pointed, irregular roofs. A dense, large snow was falling and covering everything, half visible through the twilight and half by the glow of the festival lights of the city. Beneath in the town the chimes were ringing for vespers. The children were all excited but a little awed too, so they whispered eagerly to us not to miss a feature that made the full magic of the hour. Really I have not known many more happy scenes. Isn't there something sainted in such an experience?

We stayed in the cathedral for vespers. The choir was drilled by an artist, a real conductor. We sat behind the altar, where the candles were shining behind the flower pots and the organist, and he and his choir were in full view. Their earls and Evensong were of a sort I know would have been especially delightful to you.

Our next experience I know you cannot appreciate as we did. It was a real meal—napkins and all. We carefully selected our café and met at the table two very pious Y. M. C. A. secretaries, quite incapable to my mind of a single religious thought. They insisted on talking of the decadence of religion in the Church and the religious elements (among much of course "simply foolish") which we find in Socialism. There was also at the table an intelligent Frenchman.

On the way home we had a good talk. Also we got lost. We got in after taps, but the guards were good to us, for after all Christmas comes only once a year.

My mind had been running all day on the philosophy of Christmas. Isn't it a complicated thing? The reunion of friends, oranges and nuts, legend, carols, and many, many other ingredients combine. No day can compare with it in the popular imagination. The sum of it seems to be to be: Good will, cheer and a faith that somehow an ounce of good is worth a pound of shame. Even the selfishness of the commercial exchange, I mean presents, can't kill it. Even sentimentalism and, deadliest, even optimism can't kill it. It seems to me all great democratic ideals are like the sea. We may pour all our garbage into them, defile and desecrate them, but still they go on "in their priest-like task of pure ablution round earth's human shores."

When I got to the stable I brushed the snow off my overcoat, took off my shoes and went to sleep. I have seldom spent a merrier Christmas.

TRIBUTE

Tribute of respect and esteem to the memory of WILLIAM R. BUTLER
by the Vestry of St. Mark's Church,
Mauch Chunk, Pa.

At a meeting of the Rector, Church Wardens and Vestrymen of St. Mark's Church, Mauch Chunk, Pa., duly convened for this purpose, January 29, 1919, the following resolution was ordered to be spread upon the minutes, and a copy of the same to be conveyed to the family:

Resolved that in the death of our Senior Warden, William Richards Butler, there is in all our hearts a sense of loss that cannot be put into words. He has been more to us than companion, guide, and familiar friend, for in all matters of parochial importance we have been in the habit of looking to him as a counsellor, and have depended upon him for wise leadership. Trained as he had been from childhood days in love and reverence for the Church, and being specially and continually identified with this, his home parish, he seemed to know instinctively what things were best suited to promote its best growth, and establish most surely its venerable foundations. He was not only a constant worshipper, a steady communicant, and an untiring worker, but a man of high education, broad, fearless, far-sighted, and thoroughly abreast with the times; a believer in prosperity, an advocate of cheer, and an exemplar of the true Christian spirit in all the affairs of life. Great for emergencies, and absolutely dependable for all ordinary duties, and routine obligations, he was indeed a tower of strength to us.

Bowing submissively to God's will in removing him from this present scene, we proffer to the family of our beloved Warden our heartfelt sympathy, and join with them in thankful remembrances of a noble life.

NILES—Entered into Paradise on Wednesday, January 22d, at noon, The Rev. Charles Martin Niles, D.D., Rector of the Church of the Ascension, Atlantic City. A Requiem was said at 8 o'clock in the Chantry of the Parish Church by the Rev. Chaplain Edmund Banks Smith, U. S. A., on Saturday, the Feast of the Conversion of St. Paul. The funeral took place in the church at 2 o'clock, the officiants being the Rev. Arthur Lewis, curate of the Church of the Ascension, The Ven. Archdeacon Shepherd, representing the Bishop of the Diocese, who was unable to be present, and the Rt. Rev. Philip Rhinelander, D.D., Bishop of Pennsylvania. A large representation of the clergy from New York, Philadelphia and New Jersey were present. The interment was in the Atlantic City cemetery.
Eternal Rest Grant unto him O Lord, and let light perpetual shine upon him.

? Is the Soldier Accountable to God ? for His Individual Share in the War ?

—a question, the answer for which, many Christians are seeking today, is only a part of the age-long problem which

Prof. Loring W. Batten of General Theological Seminary, New York

treats and discusses in his new book, entitled GOOD AND EVIL

¶ Prof. Batten's new book is recommended strongly to "Churchman" readers. The author is well known to many through his distinguished success of a quarter century at the General Theological Seminary, and his book is a fresh, broad, satisfying study—"the import of which," The Boston Transcript says, "no review can express."

THE LIVING CHURCH SAYS:

"The problem of evil in the world has always been the great stumbling block to faith. If God is a God of love, why did He not make the world good and keep it good? If evil is the result of sin, and sin a necessary possibility if man were to be given free will, why is not evil restrained? Why does suffering come alike to the just and the unjust? What shall we say of vicarious suffering? All these are problems we have always had with us; the great war has but brought them out into sharper outline."

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN SAYS:

"Dr. Batten's twenty-five years' work as a teacher of the Old Testament has well fitted him for its systematic exploration. Though learned, his style is clear and simple, making his book a delightful one to read."

UNITED PRESBYTERIAN SAYS:

"The problem of good and evil in the world has always confronted men, and always will while good and evil exist. The treatment here presented is fresh, interesting and able."

A CHAPLAIN'S EXPERIENCES IN CUBA—II

By the Rev. E. Clowes Chorley, D.D.

I AM writing this article in the tent which serves at one and the same time for a bedroom, a study and a reception room for the men who constantly seek out the chaplain. It is my good fortune to be attached to the Seventh Regiment of the United States Marines aptly described by Kipling as "soldiers and sailors too." The marines are proud, and justly proud, of their record. It is second to none in the service and its prestige has been permanently enhanced by the way the "devil dogs" fought in France. These fine young men of the Seventh have had no chance to show their metal across the seas, but they have made a fine record for themselves in Cuba; their restraint under difficult conditions has been beyond praise.

About a year and a half ago the President of the Republic of Cuba offered facilities for the training of American troops on this island. That offer resulted in the sending of two regiments of marines. We are encamped around the San Juan Hill, famous in the annals of the Spanish-American war for the charge of the Rough Riders led by Colonel Roosevelt.

Work in a camp like this falls, broadly, under three heads.

The first line of work is social. Here are four hundred men drawn from almost every state in the Union and representing every social class in life. Banker's sons and artisans; lawyers and farmers are "bunkies"; that is, they occupy the same tent. Every company has its quota of college men and not a few were noted athletes. They have been linked in a common life from the same motive—patriotism. Every man is a volunteer; they did not wait for the draft. These men have a good deal of time to themselves. Long before sunrise the bugle calls them to the duties of the day. When most people are asleep they are drilling in the green meadows, for this work must be done ere the heat makes it dangerous. Those who are not on guard duty or on special detail have practically finished the day's work by the hour of mid-noon. Under ordinary circumstances they have liberty to go into Santiago or whither they will, but that needs some expenditure of money, and money is rather a scarce commodity in a military camp. A good many men have allotted half their pay to the folks at home and most of them are paying the monthly premium on the government insurance as well as installments on Liberty Bonds. They have very little spending money left. Not a few of them are in the position of a bright lad from Calvary Church, New York, who confided to me that when all the charges on his month's pay had been met he had twenty cents left for himself. The practical result is that most men have to find their amusement within camp limits, and therefore social service looms large.

We have no army Y. M. C. A. work here at San Juan; indeed, none in Cuba. The Red Cross, however, has stepped in and nobly supplied the need. In the next tent to me there lives temporarily Mr. Walter Johnson, a field director of the Red Cross. Mr. Johnson gave up, for six months, the direction of the leading newspaper in Kansas to serve in the Red Cross. That wonderful organization has provided the lumber for a large recreation hall in this camp, also for a social center for the younger officers. It has equipped us with a piano, a pool table, a phonograph, baseball material and many sorely needed supplies for the hospital. In addition, it has supplied each post with a moving picture machine and arranged for a regular supply of films.

The recreation hall is a veritable god-send for the boys. The two long tables are amply supplied with writing paper and envelopes, for the marine loves to write letters and still more, to receive them. In our hall the number of letters written averages one hundred a day and the supply of paper is constantly giving out. Through the kindness of the Church Periodical Club I brought down four thousand sheets of writing paper. Not one sheet is left; it has all been distributed among the posts.

Equally in demand are the magazines and newspapers. Within two weeks I have distributed more than 200 magazines and papers, and I could use many times that number. When no railroad strike, as at present, cuts off our communications we have open air moving pictures three times a week, given to an audience which is critical but appreciative. By these varied means we seek to provide wholesome recreation and to minimize the desire to seek less healthy amusement in the adjoining city. For, let it be remembered, we are stationed on foreign soil. There is, and there can be, no law in Cuba forbidding the sale of liquor to men in uniform. Santiago is "wide-open," and the tropics have an insidious way of impairing one's power of resistance to temptation.

Our second line of work is the religious work. For some reason or other, the United States Government has not made any provision for detailing chaplains to the marine corps. Doubtless in time such provisions will be made, but until then the work must be done by civilian chaplains. Religious work in this camp was begun in the spring of this year by Dean Myers of Havana, who laid a strong and true foundation. Prior to my arrival it had been carried on most admirably by a young Methodist minister from Santiago, but he had also the care of an English and Spanish congregation. A resident chaplain is essential in a camp.

Of course we have all the denominations represented here. It is even whispered that there are some Mormons. We begin on Sunday morning with a celebration of the Holy Communion in the recreation hall at ten minutes before seven, and fifty minutes later the Roman priest has Mass. The service is inexpressibly beautiful. Outside the newly risen sun is bathing the mountains in light against which the tall palms stand out with arresting distinctness. Inside a little group of faithful boys kneel on the bare wooden floor and partake of that mystic food which is at once so awful and so sweet.

Our later service at ten fifteen defies all ecclesiastical order; it would make strict liturgists shudder, but it meets the need of a very varied audience. We always say the creed and I use the collect for the day and one psalm, but otherwise it is not very liturgical. The singing is led by a choir of six men, all of whom are old choir boys from cities as far apart as Philadelphia and Minneapolis. The address must be short and to the point and if one can succeed in doing that no more attentive audience could be desired.

I am trying one experiment which promises to be successful—that is, what has come to be called a “chaplain’s conference.” At seven fifteen the men gather in my tent to discuss some vital problems affecting life and conduct. Each man brings his own camp stool—for I am allowed only three—and practically everybody smokes. The first Sunday night seven men came and discussed the question, “What is it that makes a man a Christian?” Last Sunday night sixteen turned out and the topic for discussion was, “Why men stay away from church.” They talk with the utmost frankness. There is no beating round the bush; no attempt to spare the parson’s feelings, but at the same time there is a note of seriousness and many evidences of deep spiritual feeling.

Were it not for my wholesome fear of the genial editor’s blue pencil I should like to write much about the personal side of the chaplain’s work as I see it here. After all, it is by far the most important side. Take these lads here in Cuba—for lots of them are not twenty years old. They are away from home and all that home means. For two months the camp has been under strict quarantine because of the prevalence of influenza, both in camp and city; that means men have not been allowed to leave camp for that period, and liberty is not yet in sight. Every boy here enlisted with the understanding that the marines would be sent to France, and consequently every boy is most woefully disappointed. Now that the war is over these boys who enlisted “for the duration of the war” want to be discharged, but they can be held till six months have expired after the signing of peace. Added to all this, they are sick to death of life in the tropics. They have been in Cuba for sixteen months, and life here grows very monotonous. The temptation to “break camp,” that is to steal into the city in spite of the quarantine, is tremendously strong, and not a few men have succumbed.

Conditions like these afford a priceless opportunity for personal work. The men seek out the chaplain and pour out their story of woe. They get a letter from home where some difficulty has arisen, and they come and tell the chaplain; it is a relief to unburden their hearts. One boy—and a Roman Catholic at that—came into my tent a few nights ago and said, “Some fellows in my company are going to break camp and they wanted me to go with them, so I thought I’d come and talk to you.” And so it goes.

I understand that the War Commission is shortly to make another appeal for funds to carry on its work. Pray do not get the idea that the necessity for such work has passed. Whatever good may be done by the chaplain in this regiment is due to the War Commission and its agent, the Church Periodical Club. All my equipment was found by them. They loaded me down with writing paper, Prayer Books, Bibles, games and everything else that seemed to be needed. The war is over, but the need is greater than ever. Our soldiers, sailors and marines were buoyed up with the great expectation; they were carried on the wings of a great exaltation. That exaltation has passed with the ending of the conflict. Now, there is nothing before them but the plain path of discipline and duty. If they needed the ministrations of chaplains and the comfort of the Church and the strength of the Sacraments in war time they need them ten thousand times more in the piping times of peace.

How to Know the Bible

By GEORGE HODGES

Dean of the Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, Mass.

More than a commentary, HOW TO KNOW THE BIBLE is a guide to intelligent reading and a stimulus to a daily study of the scripture. By its clearing up of difficult passages in the Bible it increases faith in this book of books.

In Dean Hodges’ HOW TO KNOW THE BIBLE the results of scholarly research and the consensus of reverent scholarly judgment are embodied, and are set forth by it in a very helpful way.

DANIEL S. TUTTLE, D. D.,
Bishop of Missouri.

A book which can revive a general interest in the Bible is the special need of our day. Dr. George Hodges’ book on “HOW TO KNOW THE BIBLE” fills that need. Everyone who reads it will yearn to place it in every home in the world.

RUSSELL H. CONWELL, D. D.,
The Temple, Philadelphia.

The practical everyday usefulness of HOW TO KNOW THE BIBLE is shown by the chapter headings listed below.

I. The Making of the Bible.

THE REV. H. ADYE PRICHARD, M.A. Oxon., whose article, "The Uses of Diversity," appears this week, is the rector of St. Mark's Church, Mt. Kisco, New York.

KATE CHAMBERS SEELYE, Ph.D. (Mrs. Laurens Seelye), who reviews some recent books that have been published dealing with the problems of Armenia and the Near East, was brought up in the mission of the Congregational Church at Adana, Turkey, and has lived through several massacres. During her student days in this country she twice heard that her family had been wiped out in a massacre, but in both cases the rumor proved false. Mrs. Seelye has done graduate work in comparative religions. She hopes some day to return with her husband and little girl to Armenia as a missionary.

MR. RUDYARD KIPLING was asked by the Imperial War Graves Commission to choose an inscription for the great stone which is to be placed as a monument in each of our sadly numerous war cemeteries abroad. His choice will commend itself instantly to everyone. CHASTITY

THE Treasury Department has addressed to the ministers of America an appeal to make a united attack on the menace of venereal diseases. The war and conscription have brought the whole problem into public view. A few years ago the subject of venereal disease would not be admitted for discussion in any American newspaper. Distinguished specialists, delivering addresses before medical societies upon the subject, could not get these addresses published in any daily paper, even when the articles were specially designed for publication in the press. Bishop Lawrence's notable address before a medical society in Massachusetts was the first of its kind to get into general circulation. It was printed in The Living Church and THE CHURCHMAN. The war has put a new face upon the whole subject. Governments when at war suddenly realize the value of healthy bodies. Unfortunately, governments have not always perceived that healthy citizens are a commercial asset in times of peace as well as in wartime. Tuberculosis, alcoholism, industrial casualties are a heavier tax upon the resources of a nation than are most of the wars upon which the nation embarks. Conscription convinced the Government that venereal diseases must be grappled with in the open. If America had never had conscription, the Treasury Department would not have addressed to the Churches of America an appeal to set aside a Sunday for a united attack upon this menace.

But from the point of view of the Churches, the whole problem is far more complex than the Treasury Department, perhaps, perceives. The Government is concerned with venereal diseases as a problem in national health and efficiency. The Church is also concerned with people's health, but it is primarily concerned with their morals. The Treasury Department has no theory whatever concerning the Christian virtue of chastity. The Church has such a theory and it holds that virtue to be inestimably precious. Because this is true, the ministers to whom this appeal is addressed by the Government, may view the problem altogether differently from the War Department. It is conceivable that a clergyman may believe, as did Dr. Münsterberg, that the sex problem ought not to be brought out into the light of day; that open discussion, especially among the young, is likely to destroy those sanctions and inhibitions which the custom of silence has hitherto provided. Such an attitude is by no means unworthy of the scientist's respect. Many a sound psychologist holds that view. There is certainly enough truth in it to cause us to be on our guard.

What the War Department is gravely concerned over is not sex morals, but sexual disease. It insists upon the prophylactic treatment. Christianity, on the other hand, insists upon chastity, because incontinence is a sin. It strikes spiritually and physically at the root of the family.

The war, which has brought the whole sex problem into the open, has also given a grave impetus to sexual immorality. We are, without doubt, upon the eve of a period of the loosest sexual morals. This is the testimony of those who are conversant with the facts. It is natural that such should be the case. During the war we have openly taught the soldier how to avoid the physical penalty of what hitherto the Church and the family have regarded as a sin. It has been the business of the War Department to keep the body of the soldier sound. It could not concern itself with fine moral distinctions. But the moment the penalty of an abused appetite is made the chief concern, we have gone a long way to destroy nature's most delicate safeguard of the sex instinct, namely, shame. Now, if the Treasury Department believes that the Churches of America are going to attack the problem of venereal diseases in precisely the way in which the Government has been attacking it, they will be disappointed. In fact, Churches might well have been appealed to to use their influence to counteract the injury done to the nation's youth by the Government's method of attacking venereal diseases. The Government was wise, and was compelled by necessity to attack those diseases in precisely the way it did. It deserves unstinted praise for having promptly seized upon the most scientific and intelligent method of reducing the ravages and mitigating the consequences of syphilis. The Government is justified, and every city and town in the land would also be justified, in protecting the innocent, the foolish and the guilty. But because necessity compelled such a course, the problem of the Church is made tenfold more complex and pressing. Never in the history of the nation has it been more urgent that the Churches teach continence than at this hour. Sexual morality must be based upon something other than medical knowledge, or we shall breed a race which will sin skillfully and without shame.

Parents and educators are anxiously handling the problem of sex education. Better late than never; but there is a bitter disappointment in store for those who expect to derive purity from medical information. Christianity was the first religion to make chastity a popular virtue. It contrived to do so in one of the foulest ages known to history. And it did so by creating the conviction of the beatitude that only the pure in heart shall see God. After nineteen hundred years that conviction still remains a potent inhibition and sanctifying impulse. Anxious parents have not done their full duty by their children when they ask their family physician to have a talk with their boys. A knowledge of danger never made anyone love purity; a knowledge of God can. The Church still holds the key to the only effective deterrent of sex immorality. In the Gospels, light is flashed straight from the presence of God on the dark and fetid places where the sexual instinct breeds misery and shame. In all the literature of the world we can find no finer, more subtle handling of this problem than that simple narrative in the eighth chapter of St. John's Gospel. The restraint of the Master in this story is as marvelous as the wisdom of His remedy. A soul that has sinned is made to feel the eyes of a living God. It was redemption that was offered; and the power to sin no more came from a mighty, surging desire in the sinner's heart to be like Christ.

WAR MEMORIALS

A GOOD deal is being said about war memorials. There is a desire to make them express the ideal of democracy for which the war has been waged. Stone, an architectural journal, in a recent editorial made the happy suggestion that New York's war memorial, instead of an arch of triumph, as has been so generally suggested, should be an open forum where the people of the city, thousands of them at once, could gather for popular meetings and discussion. The arch of triumph, Stone pointed out, was the symbol of imperial Rome, but the open forum was the mark of the republic.

In the smaller places no monuments to the soldiers who fell in the Great War will stand in village green or town square beside the statues of federal or confederate soldiers; instead community playgrounds, neighborhood houses, libraries, Little Theatres will commemorate the men and women who died to make the world safe for democracy.

Individual memorials might well strike the same note. Beautiful furnishings for the house of God, stained glass windows, rood beams will all bear testimony to sacrifice. And this is well; such gifts are to the glory of God. But there is another sort of memorial that seems more appropriate because living and creative—we mean endowments for carrying forward the work of the Church, especially the missionary work.

It has been said time and again that no other people have done so much to further a true spirit of internationalism as have foreign missionaries. What more appropriate memorial, then, for a glorious lad who has fallen in France than the endowment of a scholarship in St. John's or Boone in China or St. Paul's in Japan? What more beautiful monument to a young woman, dead in the service of her country, than a new building for that wonderful school maintained by Miss Ashhurst in Guantanamo, Cuba? Such living gifts would continue the gracious work of weaving the golden bonds of international love in which the heroes of the present war have gladly given their lives.

The Anglican Church in Canada is starting a fund for the creation of a permanent memorial to the fifty thousand Canadian soldiers (more than half of whom were members of the Anglican Church) who have died in the course of the war. This memorial will take the shape of an endowment fund for the maintenance of Christian missions amongst the Indians and Esquimaux who are scattered over the boundless tracts included in Keewatin, Athabasca and other dioceses of the Canadian Northwest. This is an example which our Church may well emulate.

THE ROOSEVELT ASSET

THE sermons throughout America on Roosevelt Day revealed the wealth of moral leadership which our people have had during the past quarter of a century in Mr. Roosevelt's public utterances and example. There was an abundance of themes to develop, founded upon incidents in his career. The things which the Christian preacher ought to have taught from the pulpit had been preached by Mr. Roosevelt for so long that it was not till after he had left us that we knew what an asset he was to the Christian church. He taught the fathers and mothers of America, year in and year out, how sensual and indecent, how immoral and irreligious it is to shirk the obligations of parenthood. This theme has not grown threadbare from too much emphasis on the part of the clergy. We have dodged it disgracefully. We shall miss sadly Mr. Roosevelt's stinging rebukes to many a morbid, sickly New Thought with which our Bohemias steam and fester. He made the dilettante and the parlor Bolsheviks look foolish. We need today more than ever his clean-cut Americanism. The men and women who over their cigarettes and tea cups jauntily scrap the convictions that it has taken the race some thousands of years to write into its codes and sanction, are pretty numerous today. The Churches can learn a great lesson from Mr. Roosevelt's philosophy. He can teach the preacher how to make the homely moral maxims shine for boys and girls.

THE WEEK

Chronicle and Comment on Current Events

THE MAYOR OF SEATTLE

THE normal American who prefers even a faulty civilization to anarchy, will rejoice that Seattle during the recent strike had a mayor who knew his mind. Many a revolution has got under way in the past because somebody lacked nerve. The French Revolution was brought to a close by a young general who had the courage to train cannon down the streets of Paris. It is not unlikely that there will come a good many crises in America during the next few years when mayors, governors, and the President may be compelled to choose between anarchy and order. Wishing won't do it. Somebody will need to act. America for better or for worse is some sort of a democracy. It ought to become a better democracy than it is, but our Constitution provides the method of improvement and evolution. If labor union and the I. W. W. think that there are quicker ways to get what they think they ought to have; if some editors of polite journals of opinion believe that idealism can be given swifter feet than the ballot provides, then let them take the consequences. But the citizens who believe in law and order must have the courage of their convictions. They must be willing to fight for orderly evolution of law.

We believe in freedom of discussion and freedom of the press. It is a safety valve. It is not a natural right, but it is a safeguard of rights. But we also believe that the men and women who go about setting up amateur revolutions ought to be shot down at the first move. If a democracy believes in itself, not as a perfect but as the best way out, then self-preservation is one of its first laws. There is very likely to come a time when Americans will need to ask themselves, do we really believe in our country? If the answer is "yes," then prompt, united, forceful action against anarchy will be needed to back up the conviction. The Mayor of Seattle believes in American democracy. He was willing to use guns.

Some of us have a good deal invested in American history. Our ancestors paid dearly for their dreams and convictions. We know our country's faults; but, after all, it has been our country for a good many generations. We still have some fight in us.

A HINT FROM THE SOCIAL WORKER

THE report of District Attorney Swann's investigation of war charities made public last week is distressing reading. Millions of dollars given by the public for war work among soldiers and sailors, and for war relief, were stolen, and there was waste and loss occasioned, we are told by the New York Times, by the ambitions of "social climbers."

The revelation of these facts ought to be a wholesome warning to the Church. Not only in war times but in peace times as well church organizations have shown a marked gullibility in raising funds for parish and social service purposes. They have employed persons to "put on" entertainments, and have paid them percentages of gross receipts which have been little short of criminal. Fifty cents of every dollar the public gave for social service in such cases has gone to some man who came to town for a few weeks or days and went away with some hundreds of dollars which should have gone for welfare work.

Helpful lessons might be learned by the Church if it would study the methods employed in raising money for social service by such cities as Cincinnati. Under its Council of Social Agencies money for the major part of Cincinnati's social service work is raised each year at a cost of less than three per cent. In the old days, under the old system of money raising, the cost was from fifteen to twenty-five per cent, which social workers there have proved to be outrageously high. No wonder social workers shiver at the antiquated, morally questionable "fifty-fifty" method of many parishes!

MORALE FOR THE POOR

THE title is borrowed from as admirable an editorial as we have read in many a day, one recently appearing in the New York Evening Post. We should like to quote liberally from the editorial. No one, as it seems to us, can dissent from its teaching. The war among other things has taught us two practical lessons: our ability to finance any philanthropic undertaking if it have behind it the pressure of a great enthusiasm, and, second, that it pays a nation to keep its fighters in good fighting trim, otherwise called morale.

We are too optimistic to believe that what we have learned about the morale of a nation's fighting forces will be forgotten with the signing of peace. Civilization has other precious uses for morale than those of war. If a great city can raise millions to send comfort and cheer to the soldiers abroad, it can, if it sets about it, raise millions to cheer up and clean up its slums. Communities and various civic organizations are discussing the question of a memorial to Mr. Roosevelt. We can conceive of nothing more fitting to commemorate his spirit and his devotion to the interest of wholesome Americanism than a great nation-wide movement to erect community houses in the poorer districts of our great cities, liberally equipped with the means of building up morale. The war drives have taught us that we can always raise money if the heart is touched. The war has taught us that morale in nine-tenths of the equipment of a good soldier. It is also nine-tenths of the equipment of a good citizen.

Here are some illuminating passages from the editorial in the Evening Post:

In factory towns, desolate hill settlements, and in slums unnumbered people lead, as a matter of course, cheerless lives. Civic pity seldom goes to the extent of supplying them with the practical aids to morale which we have energetically sought to give our soldiers and sailors. . . .

The soldier has his theatre, the sailor his all-night canteen, and there is no reason why shoeless children should not have a playroom with a phonograph. If they can be kept in reasonably good spirits by an occasional party, they may be inspired to dig their gradual way out of the slum. Morale has never had an honest trial here, because it is one of the recent discoveries of the war. Moralizing has been its depressing substitute. . . .

We have expected the poor, who have often to fight sickness along with poverty, fairly to scintillate gratitude and fresh courage upon being presented with a sack of coal. Bread alone will not give the soldier endurance, and every nation has been careful to supply him with chocolate, cigarettes, and moving pictures. Yet if men who are supported by the consciousness of a great mission and the knowledge that it is brief and therefore possible to be borne need these things, the unfortunates who have never since birth been in fighting trim must find it hard to contend with fate in places where morale is not a subject of concern, and warmth, food, and clothing are only to be had through unceasing struggle.

FRIENDS' GREETING TO MR. WILSON

THE Society of Friends, upon Mr. Wilson's arrival in England, addressed to him a greeting which reads like a benediction over the Peace Conference in Paris. We have not seen it quoted in this country as widely as its fine spirit deserves. This is the greeting:

We thank God for the stand which we believe you are making for the fuller expression of the spirit of Christ in international affairs. We believe your task in the forthcoming conferences is essentially a spiritual one, and we desire to support you in it by our prayer and faith. We are confident that the Spirit of God our Father, working in the hearts of men and women in all nations, is leading us to break with an evil past, marked by secrecy, suspicion, and opposing alliances, and to create, in brotherly love, a new order based on generous trust and true reconciliation. Such an order, expressed in a federation of free, disarmed peoples, working through open diplomacy and unhindered circulation of truth, is the hope of countless common men and women like ourselves. May God help you as you seek, in co-operation with your colleagues, to realize this splendid hope for humanity.

MR. HUGHES ON BUREAUCRACY

MR. HUGHES has given, as it seems to us, few wiser words of counsel than those which he spoke before the Bar Association of the State of New York in reference to the conduct of the minor courts in America.

I never speak of this work of our higher courts without the reflection that after all it is the courts of minor jurisdiction which count the most, so far as respect for the institutions of justice are concerned. . . . If our Bar Association would create a sentiment which would demand that in all our cities the police courts and minor civil courts would fairly represent the Republic as the embodiment of the spirit of justice our problem of Americanization would be more than half solved.

A petty tyrant in a police court, refusals of a fair hearing in minor civil courts, the impatient disregard of the immigrant's ignorance of our ways and language, will daily breed Bolsheviks, who are beyond the reach of our appeals. Here is work for lawyers. . . . Look after the courts of the poor, who stand most in need of justice.

There have been a good many petty tyrants in police courts. It has been known to be the case that ignorant foreigners, strangers to our language and ways, get scant justice in some lower courts. Americans have been proud of their higher courts. They have jealously guarded their integrity. But citizens have been too little concerned with the type of men who are appointed or elected to sit as judges in the minor courts. The social service experts and workers have done what they could to arouse public interest in these matters; but they have had a pretty apathetic public to deal with.

SATURDAY NIGHT SERMON

The Voice Out of the Whirlwind

BY THE REV. GEORGE THOMAS DOWLING, D.D.

Then the Lord answered Job out of the whirlwind, and said, Who is this that darkeneth counsel by words without knowledge? Gird up now thy loins like a man; for I will demand of thee, and answer thou me. Where wast thou when I laid the foundations of the earth? declare, if thou hast understanding.—Job XXXVIII—1-4.

I HAVE met men foolish enough to throw away Christianity because of the mysteries of religion; but I have never met one foolish enough to throw away life because of the mysteries of life. Mystery is only another name for our ignorance. And the mysteries of your experience during the next twenty-four hours, will be just as deep and unfathomable as any which are found in the Bible.

You say, if that is God's Word why does He not explain the things that we want to know? the exact conditions for example of the life, which the Scriptures tell us is to come; why is it we so often see the bad man getting rich and the good man getting poor?—and a thousand other questions which we all ask, but which are never explained?

Well here is one answer: Henry Ward Beecher in one of his prayers in Plymouth pulpit said, "O God, we ask Thee for what we want and Thou dost give us what we ought to want." But are you sure that even if our Maker wanted to reveal to us these mysteries, He could do it?

How old are you? If you are an old man you are seventy years of age; if you are a very old man you are eighty or ninety. Read the whole chapter containing this text, and realize what a babe you are. How old is this earth? Millions and millions and millions of years. Why in comparison with what you see about you, you are not even a youth; you are only an infant, "muling in its nurse's arms."

Now has it never occurred to you that it might be just as impossible for you to comprehend these problems, even if they were explained, as it would be for your little child to comprehend a proposition in Euclid? That is the meaning of this chapter; it is the meaning of this entire Book of Job; the most sublime poem this world has ever known. God can be apprehended by the simplest soul who has learned to trust; but He cannot be comprehended by anybody, not even by you.

How much can we comprehend anyhow? How much will this little thimble of ours hold, even when it is full? Let us see. Take, among a thousand illustrations, the measure of distances.

You know what a mile is; perhaps you have circumnavigated the globe: twenty-four thousand miles. But tell me, do my words have any meaning to you or to me, when I remind you that the planet Herschel is 1,800 millions of miles from the sun, and that the nearest fixed star is twenty billions of miles away?

We speak of the sun being distant from the earth about ninety-three millions of miles, and the words trip from our tongue in a moment. But do you know what they mean? They mean this: suppose that you had an arm long enough to reach to the sun. You know how quickly, when you burn your finger, the sensation of pain is carried along the nerves to the brain. If you were to thrust your hand into the sun, you would not know that it had been burned for one hundred and fifty years. It would require that length of time for the message to run down your nerves. "Pull!" And for a century and a half there would not have been anything there to pull.

Now see whether it means anything to any of us when I say, further, that the star Sirius, the brightest star in the heavens, said to be a thousand times bigger than the sun, and a million times as far away. Can you comprehend that, O babe of seventy winters?

Here is something more wonderful still. Suppose a locomotive were invented which would go from New York to Chicago, a thousand miles, while your watch was ticking one second. Lay down this article for a moment and try to conceive what that means. That would be marvelous would it not? But I know of something that travels faster than that. Suppose that locomotive could go to Chicago and back again in one second. Well I know of something that travels faster than that. Suppose that locomotive could go to Chicago and back, one hundred times in one second. Have you enough gray matter in your brain to enable you to think a thought like that and have it mean anything? Light travels that fast. Can you grasp that fact, or I, with any real intelligence?

Here is something more wonderful still. See whether you would willingly believe this, and yet it is true. Although it flies so fast that in each second it speeds eight times the distance around our globe, the light by which the mariner tonight may steer his bark, left that North Star forty-five years ago, and that which is leaving it at this moment, will never reach this earth until you who are today in middle life, shall have become nonagenarians, aged and feeble and tottering upon your staff, forty-five years hence. And there are stars yonder, the light of which, if they were destroyed tonight, would be seen by your great-great grandchildren one hundred years from now, for that light will arrive at just about the same time they do.

Now these are facts, established; and yet the man does not live, and never has, to whom these statements can mean anything more than when the child stretches out its baby fingers expecting to grasp the moon.

Then "O man, who art thou that repliest against God? Shall the thing formed say unto him who formed it, Why hast thou made me thus?" Well may the Master ask "If I have told you of earthly things and ye believe me not, how shall ye believe if I tell you of heavenly things?"

Surely the wise man is he who in humility will exclaim with the psalmist, "Such knowledge is too wonderful for me; it is high; I cannot attain unto it"; and concerning these questions of divine government, the answer to which we can never in this life comprehend, because God is so great and we are so little, shall say, "My Master, I leave it all with Thee. I will be satisfied to be thy disciple and sit at thy feet. I will trust thy guidance and thy love. Lord, to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life."

Thus shall we find, amid all the perplexities of this strange life of ours, the fulfillment of the Apostle's benediction: "The God of hope fill you with all joy and peace in believing." It is the only way.

WHAT HAS HIT MASSACHUSETTS?

BY A MEMBER OF THE STAFF

THAT there is something stirring in the Church in Massachusetts has been evident for some weeks past. People in New York have felt the groundswell and wondered. People in the Middle West and even out on the coast have been pricking up their ears and straining their eyes eastward to the staid Commonwealth where strange things in the realm of religion have been known to happen.

And so I packed my bag and went to see what it was all about.

To say that things are happening in the Episcopal Church in the Diocese of Massachusetts that have never happened in the Episcopal Church before is a pale pink statement. When Bishop Lawrence issued what is known as "the bishop's call to the diocese," he naturally expected a response. But I have it on perfectly good Massachusetts authority that even at the maximum wave of his normal optimism the bishop never pictured these thousands upon thousands of Church people leaping up to follow his every wish as they have done from the first day of the Twenty Weeks' Campaign.

It would be utterly futile to attempt putting the meaning of this thing on paper. If it were a matter of dollars and cents one might give statistics. The Church outside of Massachusetts has grown accustomed to thinking of Bishop Lawrence in terms of dollars and cents—if one may say so without being misunderstood. He has "put over" the biggest drives for money the Church has ever had. And I am not altogether sure that the bishop has been entirely happy in the consciousness that the Church has thought of him primarily in these latter years as a getter of great sums of money. At all events he has now "put over" something immeasurably bigger than anything he has ever done before—and no columns of figures can tell the story.

Strange things are happening over there in Eastern Massachusetts these days. There is a specialist tucked away somewhere in one of those Boston streets who is kicking because the conversation in his office has suddenly turned to one theme—the Bible! A dentist asked a patient the other day, "What's this twenty weeks thing everybody's talking about? People come in here and talk, talk, talk—about the Bible." I was told, though I had no opportunity of verifying it, that one of the best-known bookshops in Boston sold more Bibles during the first week of the Twenty Weeks' Campaign than it had sold in the whole year previously.

A man went into a bookshop one day and told the clerk he wanted a Bible for his chore man. "Why are you buying it for him?" asked the clerk. The buyer said that the chore man had come to him and said he had thrown away his Bible the year before because it wasn't of any use to him. "But I've got a message from the bishop and he wants me to read the Bible every day, and I've got to have one," said the chore man.

I talked with clergymen and laymen and church women. I asked them why it was that everybody in the Episcopal Church in Massachusetts had suddenly taken to reading the Bible every day and saying their prayers—I suppose not everyone had before. "Because the bishop has asked us to," was the inevitable response, in one form or another.

"You see," said a layman who is very well known in the Church outside of Massachusetts as well as inside,

"you see, there's a tremendous loyalty to Bishop Lawrence here. He's asked us to do these things and we are doing them. The bishop is one of the most democratic men who ever lived. He knows all the most prominent and cultivated people in and around Boston, but he's just as friendly to me or to any other layman as he is to any of them. And he hasn't any of this," said the man elevating his chest, and being as pompous as possible. "Unfortunately a good many of our bishops seem to get that with the episcopate. Those little booklets that the bishop got out with daily readings are perfect wonders. He showed his common sense in making it simple enough for everyone. I suppose I'm like the average layman. I've read the Bible before, but I confess that I never read it with any regularity, and I never read it very intelligently. But every night my wife and I sit down and read the passage for the day—sometimes just three or four verses—and say the prayers. And by the way, those prayers are wonderful."

My friend reached into his pocket and pulled out a card. On it were pasted three or four of the prayers which he had clipped from one of the booklets prepared by the bishop. "Isn't this a beautiful prayer, and this?" he added.

And sitting there in his dingy Boston office I listened as he read two of Robert Louis Stevenson's prayers. "I look them over sometimes during the day," he said.

I talked with two of the women on the bishop's central committee. One of them told me, as an illustration of another phase of the interest in the movement, of her trip to a little town where she supposed there would be a small gathering to hear her exposition of the campaign. "When I got there the church was packed," she said. "And people were intent on every word I said. And it has been so wherever we have gone to speak."

Another woman told me of a family whose names were on the books of a certain parish, but who hadn't been to church for years. In the course of events she received, in common with every listed person in the diocese, a copy of the bishop's booklet containing his call and the prayers and Bible readings. In a few days she turned up at the church, and asked for four more copies. "I want them for my husband and the children," she said. "We are reading the Bible every day." And similar stories are told of many families.

When the campaign was planned Bishop Lawrence knew that it was necessary to have very careful preparation on the part of the whole diocese. A small, sixteen-page booklet was issued, the first of a series of three, the third of which has not yet appeared. It was called "A Message from the Bishop to ———," a blank being left for the name of the person who was to receive the booklet. In it the bishop said that the Church had to get ready for the boys who were coming back. A few helpful books were suggested, and then, for the first week in Advent a series of very short daily Bible readings, and for each week thereafter up to the first of January.

These little booklets, together with the amazing loyalty to the bishop, seem to be the inner secret of the startling success of the campaign. The bishop and his committee saved themselves from making the first blunder too often made by church people in getting out booklets. They did not try to save money on printing. The result was a booklet not only rich in material wisely selected and arranged, but a booklet so attractively printed as to immediately lure any sane person to read.

"I laid out twenty dummies for the bishop on that first booklet," the printer who did the job told me. "As soon as I put them before the bishop, he reached out his hand and said, 'That's the one.'" If I were a person given to slang I should say that the bishop made a safe bet.

In the middle of the booklet were seven short prayers. Beyond these were some pages printed in red for the children, with Bible readings, some wonderful little prayers and a message from the bishop to the kiddies. On the last pages were a children's pledge and a pledge for the grown-ups. The latter pledge was as follows, with a space along side each item for the mark of the person making the pledge:

Before God and my own conscience I will try to keep true for eight weeks to the promises which I make herewith:

I will read the Bible selection each day.

I will use one or more of these prayers each day.

I will go to church each Sunday.

I will be faithful at the Holy Communion.

I am sorry that I have not been better in the past. During the next weeks I will try to be more pure and sincere, more considerate of others and altogether better and finer than before.

I will study definitely during these weeks some subject which will make me a more intelligent Christian and a better citizen.

I write a cross against such promises as I make, and sign myself.

And here again the bishop and his committee showed a rare use of common sense. As a layman put it to me, "You see the pledge wasn't to be handed in to anybody. It was to be a pledge between a man and God. I am sure that this has been one of the elements of success in the campaign. A man will make a pledge like that when he wouldn't even consider the other kind because he might feel himself to be some sort of a hypocrite."

The second booklet, headed "A Call to Service," followed the same general design. There is a theme for the week, with related Bible readings, and the suggestion to the clergy that on the following Sunday they preach on a related subject. For example, the seventh week has for its subject, "The Christian in Social Life." The subject for the sermon on the following Sunday is "Faith without Works is Dead," St. James 2:14 to the end. The suggestion is made for that Sunday also: "A. M. Gather the workers of the parish at the Holy Communion." The suggestion at the end of the week on religion in the family is: "Let this be a day when all the fathers and mothers and children come to church together." Some such suggestion is made for each Sunday.

The first message was delivered personally to everyone on the parish lists by committees who went from house to house. The rector of one of the Back Bay parishes said to me: "If anyone had told me fifteen years ago that I could get sixty men, among them, supreme court judges, professional and business men, to take out a message like that I should have thrown up my hands." I was told by another person that one of these men who is very well known in Boston had an amusing but disquieting experience that afternoon. His district was South Boston. The first door bell which he rang brought no response. He rang again and waited. No response. His third jerk at the bell was not over tender, nor was the response which came immediately in the words: "What the hell do you want?" "I have a message from the bishop," said the layman. What happened after that I didn't hear, but, judging from what is happening in Massachusetts these days, I should say that the person who answered the bell is reading the Bible every day, and saying his—or her—prayers.

One of the most appealing results of the campaign is found in the letters which the bishop has received from children. In the second booklet Bishop Lawrence said to the children: "Write me a letter giving your own idea of how you can do something to please Jesus Christ." Over 300 letters have come to the bishop. I saw some of these with their queer little scrawls. One boy wrote: "Dear Bishop—Being kind and not taking pennies for it." Another said: "Dear Bishop—To please Jesus Christ you ought not to tell lies or steal." Still another began: "I am writing to tell you about religion as it ought to be."

Of the first message 105,000 copies were distributed. Of the second, based on requests for the booklet,—and this is the remarkable side of the story—104,000 were distributed. Clergymen who failed to answer letters in connection with the campaign sent out from the central office got a series of telegrams, collect. It took five such telegrams to get an answer from one clergyman—but he answered!

Nothing that has been printed during the campaign has been more in demand both inside and outside the diocese than the pamphlet called, "Suggestions for Service," prepared by the bishop. As its name implies its pages give, under carefully prepared divisions, a comprehensive program for Christian service in the parish, the community, the nation and the world. It tells very definitely what the men may do, what the women may do, and what the children may do. It gives a list of organizations which offer opportunities for service. Under the division devoted to education are listed not only the classes which are being held at the cathedral and other places in connection with the campaign, but there are suggestions of books to read, and various kinds of classes to be held in the local parish. Again, the demand for this booklet has shown the wisdom of being concrete.

I saw letters from all parts of the country asking about the campaign. I saw statements from the chairmen of parish committees ninety per cent of which said that there was a marked increase in church attendance, sometimes amounting to fifty per cent. Every person to whom I talked said that the vast majority of the hundred thousand people were reading the Bible daily and saying the prayers. Some day the whole Church will have the same kind of campaign.

A PRAYER FOR CHILDREN

BY BISHOP FISKE

BLESSED JESUS, Who for our sake didst come down from heaven and become a little child, make us to be pure and holy like Thyself. Help us to be good and kind and obedient. Guide and guard us and all our relatives and friends. Give Thy holy angels charge over us, to keep us in all our ways: Who livest and reignest, with the Father and the Holy Spirit, ever one God, world without end. Amen.

THE USES OF DIVERSITY

BY THE REV. H. ADYE PRICHARD, M.A., OXON.

WE are most unfortunately compassed about by a number of reformers who, whatever their private beliefs, act on the apparent assumption that external uniformity is the one and only requisite for success in all spheres of endeavor. These are the reformers who, when it stirs their ardent souls to uplift a community of button-makers, begin, and usually end, their laudable endeavors by building rows of little pink villas exactly alike even to the blue tiles in the bathroom, in which to locate whole families of button-makers whom they have dragged, protesting and recalcitrant, from their erstwhile happy homes. The theory is, we suppose, that as each button-maker will own a house exactly the same in all respects as every other button-maker, the wanton seeds of envy and jealousy will be removed, and, with these insidious passions safely out of the way, the general standard of button-making will be vastly improved. This may be so. But the reformers do not stop there. They insist that the occupants of their artistic villas, and the occasional users of the blue bathtubs, will not only be better button-makers but better men. There we thoroughly and categorically take issue. We see no moral value in uniformity as such. The neighboring Episcopal rector affects a traditionally flat clerical hat; it puts to shame our mottled cap with the scent of Scotland in its fuzziness. But we refuse for one moment to allow that he is the better Christian.

We believe with all our heart that in unity is strength. The only thing, therefore, to decide in order to be strong is exactly what we mean by unity. What is unity at the front? Not the fact that our armies are dressed in approximately the same costumes, go through practically the same training, and perform their manoeuvres in identically the same way. It is the fact that, in the hearts of the individuals that compose those armies, there burns the same flame of devotion to one cause. We need an internal, not an external, bond. There is a popular superstition to the effect that the bestowal of an enameled pin, the recital of a husky shibboleth, and the painful execution of an elaborate handshake will weld men into the fellowship of brotherhood. We fondly imagine that we have unity in our societies and organizations. The only unity is a uniformity of superficiality. Deep down below must lie the real unity, which requires no vows of fealty for its display.

What is unity in the Church? Of course, that is essentially debatable ground. Why, you say, reopen the discussion? Simply to inquire if there may not be some solution in the logic of analogy. The Church's unity is no different from any other unity. Why not learn the lessons of other spheres?

Many of those who have spoken most windily on the subject of church unity came undoubtedly from the ranks of the reformers who build cottages for button-makers. They aim at an entirely superficial uniformity. We are all to worship in churches called by the same generic name, to believe identically the same in matters of doubtfully essential doctrine, to aim at a carefully prearranged similarity of mode and practice. By this, although they do not usually say so, we must imagine that they hope to make us better Christian men and women. It is curious that so little is ever expressed about the moral or spiritual value of so-called church unity. We have been brought up to believe that the churches exist in order to spread the spirit of Christ, irrespective of external and artificial conformity with the dictates of men. But it would seem that the fallacy is obvious. Unless it can be shown that these schemes for a uniting of Christendom actually benefit the work of Christ to an extent to make the upsetting of tradition worth while, they are in no sense schemes of Christian unity, though they may be schemes for denominational unity.

We need to go deeper than that. We need to inquire whether any moral or spiritual good would really be done by the various alignments they suggest. If not, why waste our time?

In the first place, let us seek the analogy of history.

The world has progressed to our historical knowledge for a period of at least three thousand years. During that time its inhabitants have groaned and died, have laughed and grown fat, under every conceivable form of government. Kings have slipped from their thrones, and the mob has sat itself down on soap boxes, and then resurrected the thrones again and shouted itself hoarse in monarchical adulation. Peoples have been ruled by old savages in sheep-skin tents, and by illegitimate princesses in cloth of gold. Prelates have put their jeweled hands on the helm of state, and clowns have laughed to see an empire tumbling in ruin. But no one has ever yet dared to say that he has found the perfect form of government for all the world. We talk of democracy, we believe in democracy; but there are a myriad forms of democracy. England is democratic under a king, and the United States under a president. He would be a far-seeing statesman who should say that, for the excellency of government, we must have so many representatives elected in a certain specific way, and endowed with certain unequivocal prerogatives. Why then should we presume to demand this exactness of government for the Church? Because there is more implied in that case than mere decrees or policies?

But is there? If we really believe in the spiritual life of the Church, as coming from God, and existing through the agency of the Holy Spirit, we are surely confident that that life will go on under whatever external authority it may be directed. No government, however bad, can destroy the life of the race it governs. And even if it could there is no proof that any of the existing forms of church government are intrinsically bad.

If it could be proved that the true life of the Church could only be continued through a certain type of government—a type, let us say, handed down through the centuries since the Church was organized in an unbroken line of descent, the above argument would most certainly fall to the ground. Our premise from the first has been that we should discover what is best suited for the moral and spiritual needs of men. If it could be proved that this—let us call it—apostolic type of government universally fulfills this requirement, then there is nothing further to be said. The sense that a clergyman of the Episcopal Church is a member of a traditional and historic organization, in control of such powers and prerogatives as have been in the possession of his spiritual ancestors for sixty generations, fills him with a comfortable feeling of authority and security. It adds weight to his word, distinction to his act. But if it leads him to deny that his Presbyterian or Methodist brother across the way is truly and sincerely helping to foster and continue the life of the Church, his very apostolicity has become a grave stumbling block to his Christian charity. When the Nonconformist bids the members of his flock join in a commemoration of the Lord's Supper, am I to accuse him of committing an impious and fraudulent act? Is there no spiritual value in his sincere and devout celebration? We gloss over these things, even at a meeting of our own church and cloth. Is it fair to the Apostles or to future converts in China that we should gloss them over any longer?

Historically speaking, then, there would seem to be small objection to diverse forms of government.

In the second place we find food for reflection in the analogy of science.

It was Herbert Spencer who put into words the famous expression of evolution which states that "matter passes from an indefinite, incoherent homogeneity to a definite, coherent heterogeneity." We believe that the Christian Church is following suit, as it should. Its eventual form, speaking again externally, for the inner bond has still to be discussed, will be a definite, coherent heterogeneity. In the earliest ages it was an indefinite, incoherent homogeneity. The Apostles, and their immediate followers, were as indefinite and incoherent as any body of men could very well be. As to their indefiniteness, they had little conception of the relative moral values involved in going to the Holy Communion in a state of intoxication or eating meat offered to idols. As to their incoherence—the fact that they were cut of such different cloth that they could not even be used to mend the same garment without showing unseemly patches—we need only remember that converted Jews and Gentiles could not join in the same prayer meeting without quarreling. And yet they were homogeneous. They observed punctiliously the same Christian rites and ceremonies because the ones they knew were the only ones there were. They were externally uniform, superficially united. Their spiritual conceptions were undoubtedly as multitudinous as the sands of the sea, as varied as the leaves of autumn; and yet they subscribed to one symbol, and in that their homogeneity consisted.

But, as any student of church evolution will tell us, this state of things did not last for long. Gradually, through the transforming passage of the centuries, the Church became beautifully and radically heterogeneous. Sects, taking as their fount or origin this or that oracle of law or metaphysics, almost imperceptibly arose. But the astounding thing is that, in all essentials, in proportion to its growth in heterogeneity, its definiteness and coherency increased. It may be taken as a historical fact that the point of view of Christendom is far more united today than it was in the year of the Council of Nicea. Even in so intimate a matter as the Creeds almost all the various Christian denominations are in agreement. Our differences are infinitesimal when compared with our similarities.

Why, then, if we are definite and coherent on all the points that seem to bear on the avoidance of sin and the furtherance of love, should we worry about the fact that we are heterogeneous in externals? To use our former analogy, those who sit absorbed by night and worry about such things are in precisely the same position as those who would maintain that button-makers are not good workmen because they are not carpenters. There is room in this world for those who are cheered by the inspiration of the possibility of immediate conversion, and those who prefer to take that conversion in small, educational doses; in the same way as there is room in this world for those who admire grand opera and those who prefer chamber music. De gustibus non est disputandum. We maintain that the adherents of the various so-called denominations are advocates of different degrees of taste. And we should hesitate to dogmatize on the subject that one taste is better than another. Billy Sunday has undoubtedly brought some souls to a communion with God; Father Officer has incontrovertibly brought others. Is Billy Sunday a heretic because he does not wear a cassock, or Father Officer less of a Christian because his language is that of a gentleman? Heaven forbid! They both love God and love their neighbor—and go about doing good. Do we require any more? Or, what is more important, does God call either of them unprofitable servants?

Is not the fact that there are different sects an encouraging sign for the future of Christianity in that it shows that people care enough to disagree? One can picture the spiritual stagnation in this small village if its entire population were enveloped in the paternal fold of one only church. Do we not gain immeasurably by the fact that, as the old ladies we constantly visit are in the habit of reiterating, we are all going to the same place though it be under different auspices? We have church unity now, if only we knew it. We all worship the same God in much the same way. We are all stirred by His spirit, swayed by His command. We are all allied for the same cause, though under different standards. We are all uniform with the greatest uniformity there is—an underlying bond which knits us close together in the mystical body of Jesus Christ, our Lord. We are all workmen, in different capacities, on the same building, of which He is the cornerstone.

The only trouble is, my brothers, that we are jealous in the small things. When a family leaves my church to go to yours, I do not speed them with words of love—unless they were particularly troublesome members of the flock. I look at them reproachfully, and tell them, in polite and equivocal language, that they are going to hell. Why should I do that, any more than I should consign my friend who differs from me in preferring a home in Europe to one in America to the same nebulous destiny? How many of us teach our people that there are as many manifestations of God in the world as there are men and women, and argue with them not to be reproachful if those of somewhat similar views prefer to worship together? How many of us teach the love of God as a love that is offered to all alike; the faith in God as a faith which is tested only in its results; the working of God as a work which no human mind can follow or understand? We worship different gods; but the promise of universal salvation lies in the fact that we all worship God.

There is only one rock to be afraid of—and that is the rock of Holy Communion, upon which so many ships of the union have been dashed to pieces. But, in view of that rock, we take so much for granted. Let us confess, frankly and sadly if we will, that there are only a certain few people in the world with a sacramental instinct. They may be the elect; they probably are; but the lack of what makes their election cannot constitute damnation for the rest. “Do this in remembrance of me” are precious words, precious beyond measure to those of us who seem to understand. But they are not words of universal appeal. Active remembrance is a comparatively rare trait in any walk of life. Active gratitude is rarer still. There must be ways of salvation in God’s uncovenanted mercy which are independent of Holy Communion. We can try, as we do try, to awaken in all a response to its vivid appeal; but, when we fail, as we so often do fail, there is no need to be broken-hearted. In some other form the vision of God, and the sacrifice of Jesus, is opening before the sinner; and we can safely leave its glory in His hands. We must try; but God never guaranteed success.

If we would all unite in preaching the love of Jesus, the will of Jesus, the power and forgiveness of Jesus as the Son of God, and forget the churchly quibbles by reason of which that love and will and power and forgiveness is nullified, the Christian Church would suddenly rise in a new life. If we would tell Christians that the bond of their fellowship is Christ, and forget whether it is the Christ of the cathedral or the Christ of the evangelist’s tent, we should meet together with something real to bind us each to each. It is we who are to blame for the disunity of Christendom, because we have never preached the unity that is our present heritage.

THE WINTER TREES

BY E. D. WARD

O WINTER Trees, O Winter Trees!
Sing me your glorious song.
How bravely you hold your branches up!
How sturdy you are and strong!
“Care not for the fallen leaves,” you sing,
“Look up to the Heavens above.
God, God is about us everywhere,
God, and His name is Love.”

WHAT OF THE SALOON’S PATRONS?

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

IN the near future the public and lawful sale of alcohol in the United States will cease. At the moment when the prohibition law goes into force tens of thousands of saloons and drinking places will go out of business and close their doors, turning out their frequenters and patrons.

Where will the men who have made the saloon their meeting place and common emporium of democracy go? With all its evils, the saloon has contained certain elements of good. Within its precincts all who had money to buy stood on an equality. It was there that politics and family affairs were discussed and there that employer or person sitting in high or low place was criticized without fear or favor. Combined with these elements of freedom and democracy was much evil, for it has been aptly said that alcohol is the spiritual counterpart of the blood and tears of women and children.

A splendid opportunity is within the grasp of the Church. Can she reach out and take these men and transform them into citizens within her borders? Can preachers and teachers lay aside during the transformation period their technical religious speech and simply bring these people in by offering them proper social recreation, trusting to so endear her to them that in the course of a few months or years they will willingly and of their own volition seek the greater gifts she has to offer in the priceless truths of Jesus Christ? There will be, of course, those who are so rotted with alcohol that nothing can be done with them, but the vast number are good men.

The continuation of the war work communities will partly take care of this work, but there is a greater work for the parish house and the men’s club. Preachers and teachers ought not to expect from these men who will come from the saloon a too-great delicacy of speech. It will take time for the ribald song and racy story to die out of our folk-tongue. But here is the work of the Church.

How can it be done? Send out your wisest men during the coming months into the saloon. Let them listen much and speak little. Let them learn who frequent the saloon, so that later they may know whom to greet on the street with the invitation to the church club or activity. Let them forbear for the time being to speak of religious matters.

If the Church does not do this work, the “Blind Tiger” and the “Speak Easy” will do it, hiding away like venomous serpents among the rocks, and will exercise, through the attraction of secrecy and vile, unspectated liquor, an influence infinitely worse than that of the comparatively clean and orderly saloon as we know it today.

THE CHURCH IN THE YEAR OF WAR

BY BENJAMIN W. WELLS, PH.D.

SOME reaction of the war on the Church was inevitable. That great social and moral upheaval could not but leave its mark on every national institution that had any claim to be alive. There has been anxious questioning what for us that effect might prove to be and no doubt many have turned to the pages of diocesan statistics in our Year Book for guidance and they have, perhaps, turned away from them again with a quite unjustified dismay. The figures have indeed a story to tell, but there are cross currents and shoals in them for the unwary. To one of the chief of these the editor of the Year Book himself calls attention in his preface, as was done in the same case last year in this journal. The dioceses have all undertaken to conform to the injunction of the General Convention to base their accountings on the calendar year, but they have made the adjustment each in its own way. So there are a number of dioceses which report this year for less than twelve months and naturally have proportionally fewer Baptisms, Confirmations, and the like, to record. Quite apart from this, however, it was inevitable that where many of our bishops were deeply engaged in war work of vital import to the nation, often in service abroad, Confirmations should be comparatively few. Where many of the most energetic of our clergy had found their mission near the battle front there would of course be fewer infant Baptisms. Our questioning should not be on which side the balance inclines, as between loss and gain, but rather how much—let it be said immediately, how little—is needed to swing the scale the other way and restore normal conditions to the Church.

What then are the figures? The tables give us fourteen items for comparison—the number of clergy, of Ordinations, of candidates, of postulants, of lay readers, of Baptisms, infant, adult and without classification, of marriages and burials, of Sunday School teachers and scholars and of contributions. There is a loss in every one of these items—except (who would have supposed it?) in Ordinations. These have gained by ten. But the war has taken its toll of our clergy, directly and indirectly, and the total is less by eleven. That candidates should have decreased only from 377 to 340 is, in view of the circumstances that attended the gathering of the nation's youthful strength for the upholding of our country's honor and ideals, as much as could be justly asked or expected, the more as postulants show a falling off of but nine, lay readers of only 253. There were many more than that who left their places in the parishes vacant to answer the greater call, but they did not go, not till others had been found to take up for them the work at home. Infant Baptisms, when the figures printed are correctly added, show a decline of 7,145, or about one-seventh. Adult Baptisms have decreased in almost exactly the same proportion. The total is 8,587 less than last year, 53,972 in place of 62,559, which, considering the dislocation of families through the demands of war work, war industry and the draft, is hardly as much as would have been anticipated had the reckoning been for a full twelve month. The itineraries of our bishops make any further explanation of a decline in Confirmations from 52,099 to 42,946 quite unnecessary. The com-municant figures seem to show a decline of 16,973. Of this more presently. Of marriages there were 331 less than last year. This again is less than would naturally be looked for.

How far the totals are affected by the shortened period of report appears strikingly in the burials. The national death rate last year was exceptionally high. Those whose friends seek the consolations of a churchly funeral were not spared above others. There would naturally have been more burials than in 1917. There were when the figures given are correctly added actually fewer reported by 4,631, a decline of full 10 per cent. If like allowance were made in the other cases all our losses even in this war-time, would be turned to gains. Sunday School teachers are fewer by 4,377; scholars by 33,876, after the rectification of an error in addition. The causes are obviously in transitory social conditions. That contributions should show an apparent decrease of a bare 6 per cent from $20,709,610 to $19,422,028 is, when the conditions are taken into account, encouraging.

So much for the Church at large. But let us look at the matter a little closer. What part of the country has been most affected by the war? Of course the seaboard states and above all those whose dioceses make up Province II. But this province led all the Church in 1918 with a gain in 9 out of the 14 schedules. Then came IV and VI with gains in 7 and VII with gains in 4. Only III, V and VIII showed a general decline. But of course these fourteen schedules are not of equal import. We are rightly most concerned with the figures for Baptisms, Confirmations and communicants. In Baptisms II alone shows an actual gain, 902. The others show an aggregate decline of 9,489. The greatest loss is 2,960 in III. In proportion to numbers the decline is least in VI and ascends through IV, I, VII, III to VIII where, with least to disturb on account of the war, it happens to be proportionally largest of all.

Turn now to Confirmations. Here again II alone registers actual gain, a goodly figure too, 598. Elsewhere the declines range from 3,895 in III to 489 in IV and VII. The ranking of the provinces in this field is II, I, IV, VII, V, VI, VIII, III. But what of the 16,973 fewer communicants? Once more there was gain in II. It amounted to 896. There was gain also in IV of 221 and of 718 in VI (the comparison in every case with last year's figures. The Year Book's statement of losses and gains seems based on other authority or, as with Pennsylvania, on an exchange of plus and minus signs). Declines from last year's figures as printed range from 304 in I to 14,612 in III. The ranking of the provinces on the face of the returns is VI, II, IV, I, VIII, V, VII, III. But where the figures presented show, as with Pennsylvania, a falling off in communicants of some 8 per cent in a single year, or, as in Maryland, of over 22 per cent, the only possible explanation is that the facts are presented in these cases too inadequately, if not too inaccurately, to call for any explanation, though they are certainly not presented in a way to avoid comment and occasion of possibly misdirected reproach.

With peace ahead and a full twelvemonth the figures next year should have a quite new story to tell.

BISHOP BRENT'S INSTALLATION ADDRESS

MY friends of the clergy and laity of the diocese of Western New York, I give you greeting as your chief pastor.

* * * *

I wonder if, in the history of our church, any bishop has ever been treated with the same generosity and trust and loyalty as has characterized your relation to me during the extremely trying months of the past year. It may be that you knew that it would have been quite impossible for me to have borne the burden of responsibility which was thrust upon me in behalf of the Church and the nation, without the kind of support which you gave me. That wonderful message that came across the seas, at a moment when the whole situation was dark even unto night, was just the inspiration that I needed to carry me on and enable me to face the worst with determination, that, even though there might seem to be a victory on the part of the foes of righteousness, there would be no victory over the purpose and over the vision which God had given to me in common with all defenders of liberty.

My friends, I gather all the gratitude of an humble heart and of a wealth of affection in the simple words "I thank you."

My friends, I give you "hope," that glorious gift that God has given to us human beings, to us who are like little children, so easily depressed, so easily overborne by the events and circumstances of the moment—but, even in the darkest night, God keeps burning the steady star of hope, and now that star is brilliant in our sky.

It is true that the cessation of hostilities is not the same as peace. It is true that victory is only a single step in the direction of that settled condition of human life which is called peace. None the less, we have at least proved to God that we were loyal to His vision even at the cost of the most precious thing that there is; I mean the cost of human life.

And now, although we stand on the threshold of a new era, all about us is ruin. Not only are there shattered towns on what was once the great western battle front, but there is a shattered society. Only men inspired by hope can secure sufficient courage to enable them to lay their hands to the work of reconstruction, of rebuilding this world that is now, as we are told, as the physical, the material, world was at the very beginning, in all conditions waste and void. But the spirit of God is moving on the face of the deep. God is asking us to co-operate with Him in this tremendous undertaking. And what a wonderful expression of trust in human life God has given in appointing us—appointing you and me—as His co-workers in this task of new creation. Remember that God, with all His almightiness, is powerless to remake human society unless human society looks for the will of God and for opportunity to co-operate with Him. It is not so much God with us as we with God. And so it is with a triumphant note that we would march out into the future, you and I, hand in hand, grateful for the past, hopeful for the future.

This is not a moment, my friends, for me to make any extended survey of the conditions of the diocese, or to lay plans before you as to the exact character of the work which I propose to take up, but I do wish to lay stress on two fundamental principles which, God helping me, will be the foundation of my life as your chief pastor. The first principle is that we must, in an active way, recognize in all phases of life and in every department of society, we must in a practical way recognize the fact that our God is a God who knows human life from the inside and who has identified Himself for all time with the human race. There is absolutely no ray of hope for mankind without the towering fact for the individual and for society—society in its industrial phases and its political, as well as its more restricted religious aspects—there is no hope for society without the incarnation as a living force in the life of each one of us. What can the sufferers today do without a profound belief in God, Who so loved human life that He could not be kept outside of it, and Who could not do anything less than come as man among men to reveal the glory of the Godhead and also to reveal the glory of manhood. What would we think of a God Who had had no actual, personal experience in the suffering which you and I know so well because we have been passing through its fierce furnace? What would we think of a God who, standing outside the world that He made, living in the bliss of a distant heaven, looked down and managed His creatures as though they were puppets and part of a great mechanism? It is no such God that you and I worship. The God we worship is one who has so completely identified Himself with human life that every pang that shoots through our heart also shoots through His heart.

* * * *

This brings me to the second fundamental principle. God was made man in Jesus Christ—He was not made "men," He was made "man"; therefore, the individual has a care in God's sight, is cared for by God, as though each one were the only one; none the less, we are cared for not as individual units, separated from one another and not organically united, we are cared for as members of a body, as part of a social whole—and that social whole is the family of mankind.

A short time since, such a phrase as that would have been left chiefly to the missionary, the missionary who was supported generously by a few tolerated by a considerable multitude, despised by many and ignored by the majority—but to-day the missionary principle is proclaimed from our high places, and men are saying, "We can no longer live a merely individual, selfish life, we have to live with the practical recognition of our relationship to the whole commonwealth of mankind. No more can America move back into her aloof position; no more can we busy ourselves with mere petty nationalism; all that we think and all that we do must be colored by the fact that our nation is related to all the nations of the world and is, in a measure, responsible for their wellbeing. If that is true of national affairs, much more is it true of the Kingdom of God—and I beg of you to take your stand by me and make missions throughout the world your chief interest as a diocese. In so doing there is not the least danger of your impairing your own influence on your deepest interests; on the contrary, they will flourish anew. The more vigorously you give yourself to those far interests, the more truly will the light of God's wisdom and love shine upon you and your homes. I am not thinking of money—God forbid! I am thinking of the gift of human life to the Cause. While ago the bugle called men to be led to lay down their lives in order that the world might be made safe for democracy. We counted democracy such a precious thing that we were led to give our lives for it. But there is something still greater than democracy to give life to. There is the Kingdom of God that must be spread throughout this world, and, until it covers the world as the waters cover the sea, even a league of nations, however wisely organized, cannot hope to maintain stable and righteous peace. The missionary, the despised missionary, is the greatest candlestick of God in the whole world at this present time, as he has been in the past and must be in the future.

* * * *

And I wish—this I say in conclusion—I wish to establish a link to-day between America and Europe. I hold in my hand a piece of marble which, with another relic of Europe—part of a stone pillar—I wish to present to this diocese with the request that they be inserted in the walls of this central church of Buffalo with suitable inscription. And we will always think of them as binding together in spirit the old and the new. This is a fragment of the shattered altar of the cathedral at Rheims. I was permitted to take it and now I present it to this diocese; Rheims that speaks of the splendor of its shattered glory, of the whole history of France and of the valor of the French in the defense of the liberties of mankind. And when we speak of Belgium we speak of one of the most heroic, though one of the smallest, countries of Europe. This is a piece of one of the pillars of the church hall of Ypres, that was picked up immediately after the pillar had been shattered by a shell, and which comes to us fresh with the marks of the vandalism that destroyed that glorious city. The courage and faith of France and the courage and the endurance of Belgium! Through these stones they speak to us and bid us to be as brave and as true in times of peace as France and Belgium were brave and true in times of war.

This, then, is my message to you to-day; and I pray God that, before many months, I may be released from my military responsibilities and allowed to come and share with you my life as long as God gives me life.

NOT long ago, I was talking to an American about this ending of war by internationalism. He said: "If two great peoples would agree to it, it could be done; and if your country and mine would agree to it, it would be done." Don't think me a dreamer, an idealist, a pacifist. I am for the common man and woman, whose tears and blood pay for war. And in that matter of payment, the poor German pays, equally with the poor Belgian. He pays with all he has. On the battlefields of this war I have seen the men who paid. I have seen enemy dead, and Turk dead, and French dead, and English dead, and every dead man meant some woman with a broken heart.

Those men had no quarrel with each other. They lie there in the mud, because man, who has conquered the black death and typhus and smallpox, and the yellow fever, has not conquered the war fever. And the war fever takes him in the blood and in the soul and kills him by the hundred thousand.—From The War and the Future, by John Masefield.

NEWS OF THE CHURCH

BUFFALO GIVES ROUSING WELCOME TO NEW BISHOP

Citizens Extend Hospitality at Mammoth Popular Meeting

BUFFALO, NEW YORK.—Bishop Brent was cordially welcomed at a reception held in his honor on the evening of February 6 in the Elmwood Music Hall. It was a notable occasion. Bishop Brent himself struck the keynote of the welcome and the beginning of his work here as citizen and churchman in the phrase, "unity of understanding and enlightened sympathy," in his address at the close of the enthusiastic meeting. Seldom has a churchman or a layman begun his work in Buffalo under more auspicious auguries for a service of wide influence and helpfulness.

Bishop Brent was welcomed as a soldier of the republic who has won the praise of General Pershing. He was welcomed again as a son of Buffalo who after years of missionary and other service in far off lands has returned home to lead his people in a great diocese of his Church. From the city council, he had welcome as a citizen with many gifts of leadership. As a churchman of international renown, he was welcomed to Buffalo by the Roman Catholics and others not of his faith because of his sympathetic toleration and his force as a strong religious impulse for the moral uplift of peoples. He was welcomed as brother and friend by the ministers of faiths other than his own.

Responding to these many gracious, sincere tributes to his personal qualities, Bishop Brent aroused the great audience of some 5,000 men and women to repeated outbursts of applause by his declaration of faith, the working creed with which he closed his address.

This was as follows:

"I have been speaking about great unities. We must have a large background for our life even though our life be but a little thing. Now I think of the unities that this great city and this great diocese which has been committed to my charge may be able to develop.

"Yes, I wish, in thanking the mayor and council for their kind welcome to me to-night, to pledge to them my loyalty in every attempt to develop good government in this great city of Buffalo.

"In thanking those who have welcomed me in the name of the citizens of Buffalo, I want to say that I consider that because a man is a bishop he is not the less a citizen. He is all the more. I wish to stand by the side of the humblest and the lowliest in order to fulfill anything that I may do in service that will make citizenship a cleaner and a finer and a nobler thing.

"And I wish to say to my friends of the other Churches whose hand of fellowship I shall never let loose that they can always count on me to labor by their side for the kingdom of God, and if sometimes we may find that our convictions do not allow us to do some of those things that sentiment would perhaps advise, then the difference will be not the difference of antagonism but the difference of friendship."

Every seat in Elmwood Music Hall was filled a half hour before the time set for John Lord O'Brian, the chairman of the night, to open the reception. Hundreds had to be content then with such standing room as the narrow aisles permitted along the east and west walls. Sometime after 8 o'clock, three young men in the choir vestments of the Church moved up the center aisle, carrying the American flag. Behind them slowly paced more than 500 little boys, older girls and the young women and women of the vested choirs of the Episcopal churches in Buffalo. All wore the long black cassock and the white surplice except the girls of St. Paul's choir, who gave a brilliant touch of color to the procession as they walked forward in their long red capes.

There was a great outburst of applause as Bishop Brent came forward to his seat on the stage, escorted by Mr. O'Brian. The great crowd of 5,000, many of them looking at the broad-shouldered, gravely serious man who could smile so sunnily and charmingly, liked him then and there. And they became his firm friends, if one is to judge by spontaneous applause and hearty laughter, as they became acquainted with the humor and wit of the man and his ideals of service as citizen and churchman during his first speech before a Buffalo audience in some thirty years. The crowd was quick to note and comment on the gracious courtesy of the senior chaplain as he acknowledged from time to time the remarks and observations directed to him by the various speakers.

But there was one occasion of the climax which marked a unity of Christian brotherhood and the applause continued then for several minutes while the children and the

BISHOP ISRAEL HOME FROM WESTERN FRONT

Cannot Think Soldiers Would Vilify Y. M. C. A., He Says

PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA.—Fighting for the same principles and enduring the same hardships the men of the American expeditionary forces have broken the barriers between the various religious sects and as a consequence will lead more moral lives when they return to this country, according to the Rt. Rev. Rogers Israel, Bishop of the Diocese of Erie, who arrived here on the Espagne last week.

Bishop Israel had been in Europe for eighteen months. During the first year he was a Red Cross chaplain.

"A great deal of good will come out of this war," he said. "I found that the men, when in the front lines, sought solace in prayer, and looked to the chaplains for words of cheer. The boys coming out of the fight are men—real men.

"Wherever I went throughout France I received the hearty co-operation from the chaplains of all creeds, as well as the officers and men, and I hope that this spirit will be manifested when they return."

The bishop, during the last six months, was associated with the Y. M. C. A. and he said it did not seem conceivable soldiers would vilify the efforts of the men who would have sacrificed their lives to aid them. He said the boys had the idea the Y. M. C. A. would distribute goods and entertain them gratuitously and it was difficult to alter this thought.

BISHOP BRENT INSTALLED IN WESTERN NEW YORK

At Request of Diocese Withdraws Request for Coadjutor

BUFFALO, NEW YORK.—The adjourned meeting of the Special Council of the Diocese of Western New York convened in St. Paul's Church, here, at 11 o'clock on Thursday morning, February 6, with a very large attendance of both clerical and lay members. Immediately after the processional the Standing Committee retraced their way down the main aisle and escorted Bishop Brent to the choir entrance, where Dr. Sills in behalf of the diocese read an address of welcome and delivered to the bishop the pastoral staff. When the prayers for the newly installed bishop and for the diocese had been offered Bishop Brent was escorted to the Episcopal Seat and the great congregation sang "Christ is made the sure foundation, Christ the head and corner-stone."

Bishop Brent's message to his people, which appears on another page, was full of hope and affection. The bishop presented to the diocese two religious relics of the great war—the one a portion of the altar of the cathedral at Rheims, the other a splintered fragment of the town hall at Ypres.

At the Holy Communion service which followed the installation Bishop Brent was assisted by the two archdeacons of the diocese and the members of the Standing Committee, and only the members of the council partook.

The important matter before the council was that of electing a bishop coadjutor. In view of the strong probability that Bishop Brent will be released from his duties as senior chaplain of the American Expeditionary Forces within a few months, the members unanimously passed a resolution introduced by Judge Seldon Brown of Rochester as follows:

"Resolved, That this Special Diocesan Council do hereby respectfully ask the Right Reverend Charles Henry Brent, D.D., Bishop of the Diocese of Western New York, to withdraw his request for the election of a bishop coadjutor.

Bishop Brent consented to do this.

This long-discussed matter having been disposed of to the great satisfaction of everybody concerned, other items were taken into consideration and the council voted to set about immediately to increase the Episcopal Endowment Fund of the diocese to $200,000.

Dr. Goodwin made a strong plea for an advance step in our missionary giving—as a suitable mark of thanksgiving for our new bishop and a pledge that we would follow his strong missionary appeal of the morning—and the council voted to ask every parish to endeavor to give at least 25 per cent more than its apportionment from now on, its apportionment being the minimum and often far less than a parish could give to the Church's mission.

The council empowered a committee, of which the Rev. Walter Russell Lord was chairman, to cable a message of love and gratitude to all our Western New York chaplains serving abroad.

FLITTING CLERGY SHOULD NOT HAVE BEEN ORDAINED

Bishop Hall Makes Stirring Address on Anniversary

BURLINGTON, VERMONT.—In his convention address last week, on the occasion of his twenty-fifth anniversary, Bishop Hall said in part:

The whole number of clergymen who have been under my jurisdiction is one hundred and seventy-four. At the present time we have only thirty-seven priests, and of these only twenty-eight are actively employed in the diocese. This, I trust, is our low-water mark. Our high-water mark was fifty-five.

Averages are not of much value in the matters of terms of service in the diocese or of the length of pastorates (nor with regard for stipends), for one or two figures exceptionally high or low will upset any calculation of what are the ordinary figures. It will be more illuminating to give the number of settled pastors that the parishes and mission which were in active and independent existence in February, 1894, have had between that time and this. The first group consists of five parishes (Bellows Falls, Burlington, Montpelier, Rutland, and Shelburne). Each of these now has its third rector. Bennington and Windsor have had three, the latter with a long intermission during which the parish was served by a clergyman from outside the diocese. Swanton has its fourth pastor, but the first did not begin till 1895. Four parishes have their fifth clergyman. Six have their sixth, while five more have had six and are now vacant. Four have their seventh, with another vacant. One has its eighth, with two more vacant. One has its ninth rector, and one has had nine and is vacant. Two missions founded since 1894 have had respectively nine and eleven pastors.

This is a truly deplorable record, heart-breaking for the bishop, damaging to the unsettled clergy, and sadly unprofitable for the people.

What is to be learned from these figures? Three lessons, I think: 1—The need of a sifted, prepared and devoted clergy; 2—The necessity of adequate stipends; and 3—of a reasonable and worthy field of work. On each of these I propose to say a few words.

1. The need of a sifted, prepared, and devoted clergy. Some of the men who have flitted through Vermont ought not, I am sure, ever to have been ordained, or not until they had been better prepared and fitted for the ministry. There have been cases of incompetence, of uncontrolled temper (than which in practical experience there is hardly a more fatal fault in a minister, save perhaps carelessness about debts), cases too of sheer laziness and of want of consideration for others. By consideration I mean something more than the questionable qualification of tact.

One reason why at different times we have had more than a due number of unemployed clergymen on our roll has been that I would not, could not, recommend for work elsewhere men who had been tried out here and distinctly proved unfit. Honesty and regard for the interest of the Church must in such cases outweigh mere kindness to individual clergymen. Formal letters dismissory a clergyman is of course entitled to if he is good standing.

Looking wider afield, we ought to be ready to join with persons of all creeds and religious organizations in efforts for civil and social betterment, and to speak to any congregation of people, so long as we are given perfect freedom to declare our message (with trust in our judgment as to the manner and time), and so long as there is no action which would imply the recognition of ministerial equality between those we believe to have been regularly commissioned and others.

My own hopes of reunion, or of definite steps towards it, met with two crushing blows in Burlington. One was the deliberate admission, in spite of protest, to full membership in a Congregational Church of a person debarred from Holy Communion in our parish on account of a marriage which could not by any stretching be reconciled with New Testament (Continued on page 227) other members of the choir enthusiastically waved the small American flags they carried.

BUFFALO GIVES ROUSING

WELCOME TO NEW BISHOP

The Rev. Dr. Holmes was speaking. He was speaking for the ministers of faiths other than Bishop Brent's, and he had commented on Bishop Brent's success in the Philippines and in other communities in bringing together men of all communions in co-operative effort. He said:

"Buffalo needs men of your largeness of view and your clearness of leadership. We have become tired to death with the stressing of the things that have been keeping us apart and with men of your type we are glad now to go along together as good citizens, stressing the lines of thought and the lines of effort where we can work together. Men of many faiths and creeds are here to-night. That is significant. Significant in that it is the unity of spirit we have in Jesus Christ and our co-operative effort for His kingdom. We can all rally to help and serve a broad, constructive Christian leadership."

Turning then directly to the bishop chaplain, Dr. Holmes said after a pause:

"Bishop Brent, I was not nor were those I represent ordained under your episcopal hand, but here for myself and them, I am proud to extend to you the hand of Christian fellowship."

Smiling his keen appreciation, the soldier-bishop arose quickly and grasped the speaker's hand extended over the table. And thus they stood, in strong handclasp, while the audience burst into cheers.

John Lord O'Brian in introducing Daniel J. Kenefick read a telegram from Mayor Buck, regretting that illness in his family prevented him from attending and extending his cordial welcome.

Judge Kenefick was applauded as he faced the audience, and applause frequently interrupted his remarks of welcome. "We who are not of his communion," Mr. Kenefick said, "appreciate that this great gathering is primarily one of joy and thankfulness of his own people that their own chosen shepherd has returned to take charge of his flock; yet we would have him feel that all citizens of Buffalo, irrespective of creed, are not indifferent to so noteworthy an event as his installation. No matter how we may differ in religious tenets, I think all of us recognize the value of a powerful religious impulse in civic life."

"We recognize the spiritual, beneficent and moral influence of your new bishop. We esteem the unselfish devotion of the new bishop to his fellow man at home, in far off lands and in France during the war, and we feel privileged to pay him now our tribute of respect."

DR. MCGIFFERT EXPLAINS

TUITION CHARGE AT UNION

Dean Would Have West Point System at General Seminary

When asked by a representative of THE CHURCHMAN why Union Theological Seminary had decided to charge tuition of all students entering that institution after the first of next September, as announced in these columns last week, Dr. A. C. McGiffert, president of the seminary, said that perhaps the primary reason for making the change was that theological education might be placed on the same level of dignity with other departments of education.

"Union has been desirous of making the change for some years," said Dr. McGiffert, "but wished, if possible, to have all seminaries adopt the same custom. A meeting of ten of the leading seminaries was held about a year ago, when the matter was thoroughly discussed. The other institutions, however, felt that there were very real difficulties in the way. In spite of the fact, which we all recognize here, that our student list may be cut, we felt that we ought to make the change. While I recognize some of the difficulties which other seminaries face, I believe that the same change could be made in most if not all of them. We wished also to have the seminary, which is affiliated with Columbia, stand on the same basis as the other schools which have the same relationship to that university."

Dr. McGiffert believes that splendid things are to be achieved through the appointment of a director of student field work, who will supervise the work students are engaged in in certain churches and other institutions during their seminary course.

"Students have always done field work, but that work has never been organized as it will be under the new system," said Dr. McGiffert. "It will now be treated as a clinical department, and so organized as not to interfere with the work of the classroom."

When Dean Fosbrooke, of the General Theological Seminary was asked to express an opinion on the adoption of the tuition system at Union Seminary he said that he was very much interested in the experiment, and believed that Union had acted wisely in adopting it. He felt, however, that the problem at Union, owing partly to its close affiliation with Columbia and partly to its emphasis on post-graduate work, was somewhat different from that at the General Seminary.

"We have a good many endowments here at the seminary which were established for the purpose of aiding students who wished to take orders," said the dean. "That is one of the difficulties, even if we should think it advisable to charge tuition."

Dean Fosbrooke hopes that sometimes a system may be adopted at the General Seminary similar to that in vogue at West Point. By this method a student would be appointed to the seminary under a system of very careful selection. Not only would he receive his tuition, but all other expenses would also be provided for, including clothing and board.

"But this would mean, of course, that the student, after his graduation," continued Dean Fosbrooke, "would be at the disposal of his bishop, to be sent to any field to which the bishop wished to send him."

INTER-CHURCH SERVICES WITH PEACE INTERCESSIONS

Six Weeks' Services Held at Old St. Luke's, Rochester

ROCHESTER, NEW YORK.—The series of prayer meetings that are being held for a period of six weeks at St. Luke's Church, the Rev. Samuel Tyler, D.D., rector, under the auspices of the Rochester Ministerial Union, including all Protestant ministers of the city, is a marked success. The services are held daily from 12:30 to 12:50 P. M., under the name of Inter-church Noon Day Prayer Services. There is in use a specially prepared leaflet of prayers and a form of litany, together with a list of daily Bible readings. The services were planned as services of intercession for the Peace Conference, and the general topics running through the series are: National Repentance and Humility; Internationalism, a Call to Sacrifice; World Brotherhood and Co-operation; Faith and the New World Order and Social Justice, the Supreme Challenge of Today.

The church is in the heart of the city, and thus it is possible for many business people to drop in for the short service. It was this fact, together with Mr. Tyler's activity in inter-church matters here, that lead the Ministerial Union to ask the vestry for permission to use the church. The clergy of St. Luke's have no connection with the series, except as they are scheduled to conduct the services.

Personals

THE REV. FREDERICK BURGESS, JR., has accepted a call to the rectorship of the Church of Zion and St. Timothy, West 57th Street, New York.

Mr. Burgess is a son of the Bishop of Long Island. He has been curate at the Church of Zion and St. Timothy for several years, and for some months past minister-in-charge. He is a graduate of the General Theological Seminary, Chelsea Square, New York.

THE REV. LOUIS T. HARDIN, from the Diocese of East Carolina, has entered on his duties as rector of St. Paul's Church, Plymouth, Wisconsin.

THE REV. GEORGE J. STURGIS has entered upon his duties as vicar of Trinity Church, Waupun, Wisconsin.

THE REV. A. WORGER-SLADE is now rector of St. Mark's Church, Waupaca, Wisconsin.

CHAPLAIN OLIVER F. CRAWFORD, who has been with the 337th Infantry has now been assigned to the 85th Division, American Expeditionary Forces, as senior chaplain on the staff of Major-General Chase W. Kennedy.

THE REV. D. C. HUNTINGTON, formerly rector of St. Paul's, Grand Rapids, Michigan, has been called to the rectorship of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Barre, Vermont.

THE REV. J. ELMER MCKEE, who has been assistant rector of St. Peter's, Bennington, Vermont, has been elected to the rectorship of the parish.

THE IMPORTANT parish of Trinity, Hannibal, Missouri, has recently called to the rectorship the Rev. W. S. W. Raymond, for the past five years rector of Trinity, Hoquiam, Washington, in the Diocese of Olympia.

THE REV. FREDERICK A. COLEMAN, who has been rector of Trinity Church, South Norwalk, Connecticut, for over eight years, has resigned and accepted a call to become rector of St. Paul's Church, Newark, New Jersey. He will take up his new work on March 1.

THE REV. HERBERT B. GWYN, rector of the Church of the Holy Comforter, Kenilworth, and editor of The Diocese of Chicago, has been appointed by the War Commission civilian chaplain at Fort Sheridan, which is now a hospital for sick and wounded soldiers, many of whom have seen service overseas. Mr. Gwyn served at Fort Sheridan as volunteer chaplain during the First Officers' Training Camp, in the summer of 1917.

An Appreciation

SOME time ago The Churchman appealed to its readers for contributions for a fund with which to supply missionaries and others with subscriptions to the paper. The response, while inadequate to meet the great needs, was sufficient to supply several persons with subscriptions. Among the letters of appreciation received is the following:

Mr. E. R. Spaulding, Business Manager, The Churchman, New York City.

Dear Sir: Your letter received with much pleasure. Just the other day my wife said to me, "We have had The Churchman ever since we were married (in 1872) and now it has stopped." Then came your letter saying that some kind-hearted people wished it continued at their expense. This, of course, makes the paper still more appreciated by us. Since you have not given us the names of those who are so kindly disposed will you convey to them our thanks and appreciation of their thoughtfulness and generosity?

Checks for this fund should be addressed: Business Manager, Churchman Company, 381 Fourth Avenue, New York.

THE REV. ALFRED A. V. BINNINGTON, rector of St. Luke's, Lebanon, in the Diocese of Bethlehem, has accepted a call to the rectorship of Christ Church, Coudersport. He will begin his work there about the first of March.

THE REV. CHESTER WOOD of Lansing, Michigan, is spending the winter in Topeka, Kansas, assisting Bishop Wise.

THE ADDRESS of the Rev. J. Worrall Larmour is not Upper Falls, as is given in the church almanacs, but is Bradshaw, Baltimore County, Maryland.

THE REV. GEORGE HEATHCOTE HILLS, rector of Grace Church, Cincinnati, has returned to his parish after seven months' service overseas with the Y. M. C. A.

THE REV. GOMER D. GRIFFITHS has resigned the Church of the Atonement, Carnegie, Pennsylvania, and will hereafter serve St. Mary's Church, Charleroi, and Holy Trinity Mission, Monessen.

THE REV. JOHN C. STEPHENSON has resigned charge of St. Peter's Church, Lyndonville, Vermont, and accepted the rectorship of the Church of the Nativity, Marysville, Diocese of Lexington.

PROTESTANT CHURCHES AS UNIT IN MASSACHUSETTS

"Twenty Weeks" Used by Church Federation as Appeal

BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS.—The echoes of Bishop Lawrence's call to the Diocese of Massachusetts, to "mobilize its spiritual forces" as "a unit," roll from denomination to denomination and grow! Facts and Factors, the organ of the state Federation of Churches, after outlining the plans of its committee on evangelism, cited the "Twenty Weeks" of the Protestant Episcopal Church as an example of what is sought by state-wide concert of appeal.

This is an attempt to apply to a whole state the principle of the Indianapolis Plan, which in that city has added 35,000 members to the churches in five years. Its slogan is: Every church a recruiting station; every pastor an evangelist; and the membership trained "each one to win one." This year new features are proposed, like the distribution in every home, through the co-operation of local federations and groups of churches, of a spiritual appeal, just as Bishop Lawrence has sent a message to every member of the diocese.

To give inspiration to the movement, the committee has secured the Rev. Chas. L. Goodell, D.D., Executive Secretary of the Federal Council's commission on evangelism, to address pastoral conferences and public meetings in Boston, Worcester, and Springfield, on February 10, 11 and 12, respectively. Key-men and women of each congregation are wanted at the public meeting, and the federations or unorganized churches of every town or city in the state will be invited to send at least one representative to bring back the inspiration. The committee is greatly disappointed that Bishop Lawrence's illness prevents his addressing the Boston meeting.

ARCHDEACON OF WORCESTER ARRIVES FROM ENGLAND

Comes to America to Conduct Missions, Etc., in Several Cities

The Venerable J. H. Greig, D.D., Archdeacon of Worcester, England, whose contemplated visit to America was announced in THE CHURCHMAN last week, has arrived here for the purpose of preaching and conducting missions and retreats. He accompanied the Bishop of Worcester who represented the Church of England at the General Convention at St. Louis. His rare qualities as a spiritual leader became known to a few of the American clergy and the hope was expressed that he might come to this country again. On the signing of the armistice a definite invitation was extended to him. He promptly replied that in the light of the close relation of the two countries it would give him great happiness to accept the invitation.

He begins his work in the Diocese of Washington on Sunday, February 16, remaining there until February 22.

The rest of his itinerary is as follows: February 23-28, New York City; March 2-8, Diocese of Pennsylvania; March 9-14, Grace Church, Providence; March 16-19, Groton, Massachusetts; March 21-25, Amsterdam, New York; March 27, Springfield, Massachusetts; March 30-April 6, Fitchburg, Massachusetts; April 7-11, Cathedral, Boston; April 13-19, Trinity Church, New York.

The Rev. A. J. Gammack, Fitchburg, is acting as the secretary of the visiting preacher in arranging the program of appointments.

BISHOP BRENT SPEAKS AT TWENTIETH CENTURY CLUB

Mothers, Wives and Sweethearts Hear His First Address

By Elizabeth A. Lawrence

BUFFALO, NEW YORK.—Bishop Brent's first address in his diocese, since his arrival from overseas, was given in the Twentieth Century Club, Buffalo, before their members and the members of the Garret Club.

He spoke about three-quarters of an hour to a packed hall, standing almost perfectly still, with hardly a gesture, using the simplest English and with utter lack of self-consciousness and told us about the boys over there, as if he were seeing them, as if he were feeling their hardships, struggling with their temptations—now winning and now losing a moral battle—bearing their pain. And who doubts he is? The nearer we are to our Master the more we live vicariously in our fellow-men. And he is so deliciously human and humorous! He retorted merrily to a newspaper allusion to himself as "past middle age," and then told what those of us who are in that predicament must do for the younger generation—and he added—"I may have an old body but I have a pretty young heart."

When the bishop was invited to speak at the Twentieth Century Club he was told that his audience would be made up largely of the mothers, the wives and the sweethearts of the men whom he had been serving on the other side, and that they craved his guidance for the days just ahead. His message gave that.

Before counseling his hearers how to treat our men when they come home their chaplain general spoke of the service rendered by those who will not return; those who have received the highest decoration—the Order of the Wooden Cross. The others, no matter how brave they have been, how great their distinction, could not rank with them. Those who have been wounded, maimed, blinded, still have throbbing life, are still spared to their dear ones. Those others gave all that man—or God—could give. "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends." And he pleaded that their bodies be left resting where they fell, on the battlefields of France, their graves marked by the wooden crosses, the burying-places forming a sacred tie between America and France, as the years roll by. And if any heard him whose heart wavered as to the present, abounding life of their loved ones what a world of comfort there was in the unfaltering words of the speaker as to their immortality—not of memory but of personality—and activity in that other life, hidden from ours only by a veil!

Toward our returning soldiers we were warned not to be sentimental. The men do not want this sort of treatment and they may be a trifle blunt in parrying it, or disconcertingly humorous! Bishop Brent asked us to remember that when the men came home they would come to serve the commonwealth, even as they went forth to serve their country and their fellow-men.

Some we were told would come back better men—and some, alas! worse ones; no man would be the same as when he went over and neither would he find us the same. He may not realize how greatly he has changed and we may not realize that our world has changed, but we must all begin over again on the morrow. Paying a fine and manly tribute to those who had lived up to their own high standards one felt the big, loving humanness (which is divine!) of the charity expressed for him who had striven against temptation but had not always conquered. "How dare we judge him?" challenged the man who had lived among these brave and tried men. We were told that many a man who had sometimes given way before temptation, where it was so cruelly present, would come home to win his spurs and be an honor to his community.

Of the patience and the cheerfulness of the wounded and the dying no one can say too much. Never once had the bishop heard a moan from a conscious patient, and never a complaint from any man, and he had been where the suffering and the exposure and the conditions were almost intolerable. The invariable response to an inquiry as to a poor chap's condition was "FINE!" War no doubt is the greatest of the social evils, as we were told, but what a revealer of unexpectedly beautiful souls!

Of course the address was surcharged with spiritual significance. Otherwise it would not have been so characteristic of the man who made it. It was refreshingly simple, touchingly comforting and unforgettable.

Coming away one heard comments such as "And to think he is OUR Bishop" and from those outside our Church, "And to think he belongs to Buffalo," each spoken with a sigh of deep content.

Mr. Porkess May Leave Pittsburgh

PITTSBURGH, PENNSYLVANIA.—St. Stephen's Church, Wilkensburg, one of the leading parishes in the Diocese of Pittsburgh, has unanimously called the Rev. William Porkess, who for the last six years has been rector of Grace Church in this city. There is a strong probability that he will accept, notwithstanding the fact that there is considerable effort being manifested in his church and neighborhood to keep him in Pittsburgh.

Mr. Porkess has played a conspicuous part in the varied activities of the ministry. He is chairman of the street service work of the diocese, and also of the Diocesan Board of Religious Education. He is also a missionary of wide experience.

If Mr. Porkess accepts he will succeed the Rev. Joseph Speers who, on account of ill-health, resigned recently after completing a most efficient rectorship of thirteen years.

JOHNNIE AND TONY "DO" THE NEW YORK HIPPODROME

Alaskan Mission Boys Like the Elephants and Acrobats

Is the Alaskan Mission work worth all the effort and hardship involved in keeping it open? Compare these three letters.

Nos. 1 and 2 are from two boys who have been sent out by the Mission to Mount Hermon Academy for further instruction. Both passed through New York during the holidays and called on THE CHURCHMAN correspondent.

No. 1, from an Indian boy who passed five years at the Mission School at Nenana, traveled one year with Archdeacon Stuck, is now studying medicine, to go back and minister to his own people: "My dear Mr. M.—Back at school for once more. The terms opened on New Year's Day and our classes began early this last week. The same day we saw you, before our train left, Tony and I went to the Hippodrome, and all he could say was, Oh my, oh my!!

"With best wishes and love, J. F."

No. 2 is from an Eskimo boy, who has been educated at Point Hope by the Rev. Mr. Hoare, and is now in the States studying for the ministry, to return and minister to his own people: "My dear Mr. M.—I was certainly glad to see you during this past vacation, and it was a great change to be away from school for a while, from which it seemed that this new term is real fresh and worth attending, so it is. The real work is going to commence this coming week. I am taking up some pretty hard studies, the hardest of them all is Latin. Johnnie and I went to the Hippodrome Theatre. I tell you it was wonderful. I wish that I could describe and explain every show; I mean acting. There were several elephants playing baseball, and more than twenty actors stood right on top of one's shoulders, about six actors in one and four stood on top of those six actors who were standing on the floor and it was about six rows, piled on top of each other in the acting. Oh it was wonderful! I never saw such a crowd and autos in my life as I did in New York, especially in Fifth Avenue. The bell has rung for bed, so I must hustle up and get through. I am very glad to meet you all and I hope some day I shall be able to meet you again. Yours sincerely, T. J."

No. 3. From an Indian boy who had two years' training at Nenana.

"HOT SPRINGS, December 6, 1918—My dear G. H. M.: We got a fine time down hear. Every winter we go out hunting for some moose and trapping for fox. I wish to see you. If you come here we will all glad to see you. I am going to write a few line to you. I got no time to write you every day. We work and we got no time to write to you. We going out hunting again and haul some moose meat that we kild this foole (fall). I wish we kild some moose now. Everybody is well down here. I WISH THAT I NEVER GO TO SCHOOL NO MORE. Good bye. From your boy, Charlie Justin. Please you sent me your picther."

THE REV. W. RUSSELL BOWIE, D.D., rector of St. Paul's Church, Richmond, Virginia, and chaplain of Base Hospital No. 45, who has just returned from France, was tendered a delightful luncheon on Monday, January 27, immediately after the meeting of the Richmond Clericus. Bishop Brown presided and Dr. Bowie spoke most interestingly of his experiences in the hospital work.

OVER 4,000 LAY READERS AT WORK IN THE CHURCH

Official Figures Are Compiled by the Laymen's League

It is a matter of genuine surprise to churchmen to learn, through a list compiled by the Layreaders' League, that there are at the present time in the Church over 4,000 lay readers, two-thirds the number of clergymen. The league resulted from a movement at the last General Convention to effect some sort of organization which would bring together the lay readers for the purpose of mutual helpfulness. Mr. L. Bradford Prince, LL.D., of Santa Fe, New Mexico, was elected president, and an executive council and provincial vice-presidents were also elected.

It was obvious that the first step was to obtain a perfect list of all lay readers in active service in the Church, but this proved more difficult than would naturally be imagined. There is no regular system for the appointment and registration of lay readers, each diocese or district having its own practice on the subject, and hence unexpected difficulties and delays were encountered. At last, however, the list has been completed with so few exceptions that an estimate cannot vary over ten or twelve from the exact number. A list of the distribution by dioceses, as compiled by Mr. Prince, follows:

Alabama, 45; Alaska, 5; Albany, 28; Arizona, 25; Arkansas, 24; Asheville, 27; Atlanta, 26; Bethlehem, 17; California, 27; Central New York, 38; Chicago, 48; Colorado, 49; Connecticut, 58; Dallas, 62; Delaware, 31; Duluth, 20; East Carolina, 49; Eastern Oklahoma, 12; Easton, 1; Erie, 45; Florida, 26; Fond du Lac, 7; Georgia, 38; Harrisburg, 105; Idaho, 17; Indianapolis, 18; Iowa, 31; Kansas, 21; Kentucky, 35; Lexington, 4; Long Island, 58; Los Angeles, 24; Louisiana, 49; Maine, 10; Marquette, 28; Maryland, 67; Massachusetts, 112; Michigan, 46; Michigan City, 6; Milwaukee, 60; Minnesota, 47; Mississippi, 54; Missouri, 43; Montana, 14; Nebraska, 36; Nevada, 2; Newark, 54; New Hampshire, 45; New Jersey, 62; New Mexico, 19; New York, 89; North Carolina, 99; North Dakota, 5; North Texas, 13; Ohio, 50; Oklahoma, 11; Olympia, 21; Oregon, 20; Pennsylvania, 97; Pittsburgh, 26; Quincy, 20; Rhode Island, 54; Sacramento, 21; San Joaquin, 6; South Carolina, 51; South Dakota, 3; Southern Florida, 44; Southern Ohio, 54; Southern Virginia, 55; Spokane, 22; Springfield, 18; Tennessee, 38; Texas, 25; Utah, 5; Vermont, 24; Washington, 34; West Missouri, 16; West Texas, 12; West Virginia, 21; Western Colorado, 5; Western Massachusetts, 42; Western Michigan, 24; Western Nebraska, 6; Western New York, 90; Wyoming, 37; estimate of unreported, 71. Total, 4,160.

An announcement from the league asks the help of clergymen in securing sermons suitable for the use of lay readers.

"A never-ending question with lay readers is the finding of suitable sermons, at once edifying and interesting, for use," the announcement says. "Most of those who have served many years find increasing difficulty, and the young man scarcely knows where to look. The older sermons are apt to be too heavy and lengthy, and many of those advertised for lay reading are too much like essays and school books. In seeking to be simple, they underestimate the intelligence of the congregation. One of the first duties of the league will naturally be the publication of selected sermons adapted to the age and the people."

"To avoid delay, and prepare for this, the suggestion has come from various quarters that clergymen having discourses which they think adapted to the purpose should furnish the league with copies for use. Every clergyman has certain sermons of which he is justly proud and the extended influence of which he may be willing to promote. All such clergymen are cordially invited to send one or two of such sermons to the league, from which a selection may be made for publication. For this purpose sermons on practical subjects are preferable, not exceeding fifteen minutes in length. It is hoped that this may result in bringing together a large collection of suitable sermons before the triennial meeting of the league at the General Convention, when arrangement for publication can be made. The sermons can be sent to Eugene M. Camp, 52 East Twenty-fifth Street, New York City, or to L. B. Prince, Santa Fe, New Mexico.

DR. DEARMER SAILS AFTER STIMULATING AMERICANS

Has Accepted Important Academic Position in London

MIDDLETOWN, CONNECTICUT.—The Rev. Percy Dearmer, D.D., who has spent the last six months in this country as professor of theology at the Berkeley Divinity School, has sailed for England to take up an important academic position in London.

His last duty before leaving was the delivery of the Mary Fitch Page Lectures in the chapel of the divinity school. The general subject was the work of the Holy Spirit, and the title of the four lectures were:

I. Military Virtue. II. The Gifts of the Spirit. III. The Talents or Charismata of the Spirit. IV. The Fruits and the Unity of the Spirit. The lectures were rarely stimulating, and especially timely at this period of the world, when the imagination is so touched by the militant and virile potentialities of the Christian religion, potentialities which, the lecturer pointed out, have been lost sight of in the individualistic emphasis of the Reformation period and the succeeding dryness of the eighteenth and the sentimentality of the nineteenth century. The last lecture drew a notable and striking picture of the Happy Warrior, the true Christian, dowered with the Spirit's gifts of wisdom and fortitude, and showing the fruits of the Spirit in his fidelity, trustworthiness, benevolence, hilarity and true Christian love of charity.

During his too brief stay in this country Dr. Dearmer has been much in demand as a public speaker, and recently delivered the Bohlen Lectures in Philadelphia, besides speaking at the General Seminary in New York, the Philadelphia and Cambridge schools, at Smith and Mount Holyoke Colleges, and at various clerical meetings and parish churches.

His unexpectedly early departure has disappointed a great many people, as is shown by the overwhelming number of invitations to lecture and preach that he received too late to accept. His lectures on theology have shown his gifts as a teacher, and his vivacity, originality and unaffected friendliness have so illuminated his scholarship that he has won not only the admiration but also the genuine affection of his students. "There goes a man who has made me over," a student remarked, as Dr. Dearmer left the classroom for the last time.

The Page lectures will shortly be published in book form, and will be a distinct contribution to the neglected meagre theology of the Holy Spirit.

WHAT A PARISH CAN DO WHEN PROPERLY ORGANIZED

A Unique Set of Resolutions Which Brought Results

WACO, TEXAS.—In St. Paul's Parish, the Rev. W. P. Witsell, rector, there is now going on, and has been some time, remarkable activity, and things of unusual interest have been happening. Immediately following the wonderfully helpful observance of the Advent Call, the most largely attended congregational meeting in the history of the parish was held. In preparation for this meeting, committees on women's, girls', men's and boys' activities on the Sunday School, finances and general resolutions had been meeting and planning for two or three weeks. They all had well thought out and excellent recommendations to make, which were adopted by the congregation and have since been in the process of realization, bringing a new era into Church life. The Sunday School has been reorganized, attracted new workers and a larger attendance than in several years, in spite of the influenza.

INTERESTING RESOLUTIONS

Notable among the general resolutions passed are these two:

"That a thorough and effective system of selective service in the various branches of the congregational activities, be devised and inaugurated, under the supervision of a standing committee, described below, whereby each and every member of the congregation may be induced to assume certain specific responsibilities and duties in the service of the Church, and which they are best qualified to perform, to the end that the greatest possible efficiency and complete co-operation may be attained; the idea being to develop an efficient parish with everyone worshiping faithfully, working effectively and giving generously, and that this threefold idea be adopted by the parish as its slogan.

"That a committee of men and women of the congregation be appointed to make a thorough canvass of the parish for subscriptions to meet the budget of expenses, as adopted; that the amount of the same be distributed among the members of the parish as fairly and equitably as possible and that it is the sense of the congregation that every member with an income should be a subscriber, and that each one should meet fully, or as nearly as possible, the request of the committee as a minimum for the support of the church."

In accordance with the resolution on selective service, almost everyone solicited for service responded, with the result that there is greater and finer activity in St. Paul's than at any previous time; and in accordance with the other resolution, a financial campaign was carried on by thirty-four men and women that resulted in 250 subscribers for $9,500, as against 185 subscribers amounting to $6,200 for the previous year, an increase of over 50 per cent, and through it all a splendid spirit of whole hearted loyalty was manifested by the people generally.

The rector continues his work among the soldiers in Camp MacArthur, both visiting the men personally and preaching in the "Y" buildings, and the sociables in the parish house for the soldiers are well attended and seemingly thoroughly enjoyed. It is the purpose of the rector and the people to try to serve the men so long as any are left in our camp.

Our Weekly News Letters

NEW YORK

Lecture by Dr. Cram.—The Ways and Means Committee of the Diocesan Auxiliary to the Cathedral of St. John the Divine arranged a most interesting lecture at the residence of Mrs. Orme Wilson last Monday afternoon. The architect of the cathedral, Dr. Ralph Adams Cram, showed stereopticon illustrations and drawings of the small memorial chapels and other parts of the nave. Many people who attended the lecture heard with interest Mr. Cram's outline of his plans for the building of the nave.

Every Name Campaign at Holy Trinity, Harlem.—The possibilities of the Every Name Campaign were again demonstrated when recently at Holy Trinity, Harlem, a most successful campaign closed. The systematic gifts were increased by $6,000, church attendance has improved and there has been a general awakening throughout the parish.

Last Sunday a memorial service for one of the boys of the parish who died in France was held in the evening.

Chaplain Swan in New York.—Chaplain Swan, D. S. O., has been preaching in New York during the past weeks. On February 2 he preached at Holy Trinity, Harlem, and last Sunday at the Church of the Heavenly Rest.

Memorial to Parish Visitor.—In the Church of Zion and St. Timothy on January 12, at the morning service, there was dedicated a heavy bronze altar vase, given by the congregation in memory of Miss Hilda Pelham Marshall, who had served the church faithfully as parish visitor for fifteen years. No task was too mean and no work too great for her undertaking, and she was a constant source of inspiration and blessing to the many lives to whom she ministered.

Fifty Years in the Priesthood.—The Rev. John Floyd Steen completed half a century in the priesthood last Sunday. The week before he had completed forty-nine years as rector of Ascension Memorial Church, and the anniversary was celebrated this past week. It also is the silver jubilee of Ascension Church as an independent parish.

Mr. Steen believes that he is the senior with one exception of the pastors in this city, including priests, rabbis and Protestant clergymen. The exception is the Rev. Dr. George V. Wenner, who recently observed his golden jubilee as pastor of Christ Lutheran Church.

Mr. Steen was ordained in this city by the late Right Rev. John Johns, Bishop of Virginia, in Holy Trinity Church, which was then at Madison avenue and Forty-fourth street. He was born at East Broadway and Clinton street, this city, in 1846. His father was a master painter. He was educated in the New York public schools, the College of the City of New York, the University of Pennsylvania and the Philadelphia Divinity School. For a time he was assistant at Holy Trinity Church.

VERMONT

Annual Convention and Anniversary.—The 129th annual convention of the diocese, which was held at St. Paul's Church, Burlington, February 5 and 6, was of unusual interest because it was coincident with the twenty-fifth anniversary of Bishop Hall's Episcopate.

The opening service of the convention on February 5 was the occasion of the diocesan observance of the anniversary. The keynote of Bishop Hall's charge to the clergy was spiritual leadership.

In closing his address at the luncheon given in honor of Bishop Hall the bishop coadjutor presented to Bishop Hall a gift of $2,767.43 as a token of the esteem of the people of the diocese for their bishop.

In accepting the gift Bishop Hall said in part:

"There are two things I have tried to do since I came here. I have not tried to be popular and I have tried to be just. It has always seemed to me that justice is most important, to be just to the clergy, just to the individual men and to be just to the laity and the Church at large. I thank you for your kindness, your forbearance, and your cooperation with me during these twenty-five years, and I pledge once more all that I can do for you and for the diocese."

At the business session of the convention the bishop coadjutor read the report of the committee on clerical stipends after which a resolution was passed that "a serious effort should be made to raise all stipends that are less than $1,500." The election of deputies to the General Convention resulted as follows:

The Rev. Messrs. W. C. Bernard, F. B. Leach, E. S. Stone, A. P. Grint, Messrs. S. W. Hinds, M. D. Chittenden, M. C. Webster and H. H. Ross.

The Rev. A. E. Montgomery reported for the committee for the proper care of dependent children, introducing a resolution the purpose of which was to guard against bringing a taint upon dependent children by placing them in institutions designed only for delinquent children, and urging the passage of such state legislation as would provide for the proper care of such dependent children.

The following were elected as members of the Social Service Commission: The Rev. F. B. Leach and Miss Lena Ross for three years, and the Rev. A. E. Montgomery to fill the vacancy caused by the removal of the Rev. P. C. Manzer from the diocese.

The members of the Standing Committee were elected as follows: The Rev. A. P. Grint, Ph.D., chairman; the Rev. E. S. Stone, the Rev. Joseph Reynolds; Messrs. C. E. Parker, S. W. Hinds, M. D. Chittenden. On motion of the Rev. G. W. Davenport it was voted to instruct the deputies to the Provincial Synod to invite the synod to meet in Burlington in October, 1921.

A committee of two clergymen and three laymen was appointed to consider the subject of a central fund for payment of clerical stipends.

The convention resolved to send a memorial to the next General Convention urging the appointment of a committee to consider the problems connected with the appointment of clergymen to parochial cures, and their stipends, and to submit to that convention such suggested changes as would remedy the difficulties and anomalies under which the Church now suffers in these respects.

On the invitation of the Rev. W. C. Bernard the convention voted to hold its meeting next year at St. Michael's Church, Brattleboro.

NEVADA

Convocation Meets.—The twelfth annual convocation met in Trinity Church, Reno, January 26-28. As usual, the bishop's address told of the work of the past year and outlined plans for 1919. The apportionment for missions was overpaid about 25 per cent. The education fund has carried two young women at the university. An educational campaign in regard to divorce was urged looking to the adoption by the state of the law of uniform procedure to be put forth by the American Bar Association. The bishop will present five amendments to existing laws to the legislature now in session; change the marriage license to include statement of previous marital condition, divorce, etc., all answers to be sworn to before the clerk; another requiring the district court to revoke the license given a minister authorizing him to marry, on his removal from the state or in case he ceases to engage in ministerial work; to change the date of annual meetings in the law authorizing the incorporation of Episcopal churches in Nevada; to compel the enumeration of Indian children in the school census that they may enter the public schools; to authorize the marriage of Indians and whites as is now permitted in forty-six states of the forty-eight.

The bishop urged the clergy and fathers and mothers to present the claims of the ministry to our young men and of the need of trained workers to young women, and that the laity should take a larger part in the work of the Church. He also stated that in less than one-half of the missions and preaching stations in Nevada is there a church school. And in the 390 school districts of the state all churches combined have church schools in not more than fifty places. "Wherever the state finds enough children to have a school and engage a teacher, the Christian forces of Nevada should find a volunteer teacher and give religious instruction."

An organization was formed to be known as the "Bishop's Tithers" to be made up of those persons in the Church in Nevada who make a practice of tithing their income.

The Rev. Charles S. Mook of Carson was elected secretary and John W. Wright of Reno, treasurer. The Rev. Ross Turman and Mr. George M. Southward of Winnemucca were elected deputies to General Convention.

A committee on building was named to study all plans and specifications and to pass upon them. A committee on pro-cathedral was formed to study the whole matter. Also a committee on the jubilee celebration of the consecration of Bishop Whitaker this year.

It was decided to have a Sunday School Institute next summer of several days at some resort, probably on Lake Tahoe.

The Women's Auxiliary held its annual meeting and elected the following officers: Mrs. George A. Robison of Sparks, president; Mrs. Fred J. Seibert, Reno, secretary and treasurer; Mrs. John E. Pickard, Reno, united offering treasurer.

NEWARK

Former Rector Accepts Call to Return.—The call extended by Grace Church, Greenville, Jersey City, to the Rev. Jesse C. Joralemon to return to the rectorship after an absence of four years has been accepted and Mr. Joralemon will begin his duties there March 2, as successor to Rev. Hiram R. Bennett, now of Trinity Church, Asbury Park. The desire for their former rector's return was strongly expressed by the members of the church.

NEW JERSEY

Woman's Auxiliary Meets—The lower division, New Jersey branch of the Woman's Auxiliary held its mid-winter meeting in St. Paul's Church, Camden, the Rev. R. E. Brestell, rector, January 29. The attendance was large. Mrs. Arthur S. Phelps, president of the branch, presided. The bishop made an informal address upon cathedral plans, the approaching annual meeting of the auxiliary the day before the annual convention of the diocese, and the proposed employment of Miss Hopwood as educational secretary.

H. E. THOMPSON.

IOWA

Notes—In place of the Rev. Dr. Rudd, removed to Salina, the Rev. William C. Hengen of Ottumwa has been elected a member of the Standing Committee. The president is the Rev. John Dysart of Dubuque, and the secretary, the Rev. Webster Hakes of Muscatine.

The Rev. H. C. Boissier has resigned St. Mark's, Maquoketa, and accepted a call to St. Luke's, Cedar Falls. The Rev. J. M. Williams of Mapleton has accepted an appointment as minister in charge at Grace Church, Boone, and St. John's, Ames; the latter city is the seat of the State Agricultural College. These changes took effect February 2.

ALLEN JACOBS.

EASTON

Debt Liquidated—Church Hill Parish, the Rev. D. I. Hobbs rector, in a special offering liquidated the indebtedness of the repairs to the church amounting to about $1,200. The condition of the old church, which is one of the oldest on the Eastern Shore, made necessary some extensive repairs.

Successful Canvass—St. Paul's Parish, Centerville, the Rev. J. D. Cummins, rector, completed an every member canvass several weeks ago which exceeded in pledges the amount asked, $4,000. This parish has been the banner parish of the diocese in its missionary appropriation and the canvass showed a generous increase over the amount last year pledged for missions.

Cathedral Closed—After much effort to secure a suitable man the cathedral at Easton has decided to close until spring when further steps will be taken toward the selection of a dean.

Armistice Has Helped—The rural parishes are feeling the results of a cessation of war. During the war these parishes lost heavily in many cases by numerous removals from almost all of them without exception to the munition centres where work was plentiful. Now many of these families are returning, much to the help of the churches.

WM. F. BAYLE.

WEST VIRGINIA

Convocation Meets—The winter meeting of the Northwestern Convocation was held in Christ Church, Clarksburg, January 28-30. Dr. James H. Clarke of Sistersville preached the convocation sermon. The essayist was Frederick C. Price, Jr., of Elkins, dean of the convocation. He dealt in a masterly way with the subject, "The Church in the Reconstruction."

Council Date Changed—The date of the council has been changed to May 28 to meet in St. Matthew's Parish, Wheeling, the Rev. R. E. L. Strider, rector. At this time St. Matthew's will mark the centenary of its founding. Ascension Day, May 29, will also mark the 40th anniversary of the consecration of the late Bishop Peterkin, the first bishop of the diocese, in this church.

Mustered Out—The Rev. J. T. Carter, who waived exemption and entered the U. S. A. as a private, has been mustered out. He has temporarily taken up work as archdeacon under the direction of the bishop. He expects to assume charge of his parish, Christ Church, Clarksburg, April 1.

Dr. Brittingham Better—There is rejoicing on the part of the diocese in the improvement of Dr. Jacob Brittingham, rector of St. Luke's, Wheeling. Dr. Brittingham underwent a serious operation two months ago. Despite his age the operation was successful and he expects to assume active charge of his work in Lent. He is perhaps the most known and beloved presbyter of the diocese. He was the first candidate from West Virginia to seek ordination at the hands of the late Bishop Peterkin. He has been rector of St. Luke's thirty years.

A Reception—A reception was tendered the Rev. A. N. Slayton, the new rector of St. John's, Charleston, Jan. 23. Since his coming this old and important parish has taken on new life generally.

G. PHILIP JUNG.

PHILADELPHIA

Addresses to the Clergy—Speakers lately to the Clerical Brotherhood have been unusually interesting, and heard by larger numbers than usual. The Rev. Mr. Groton, of White Marsh, summarized his experience at Camp Hancock last year in a comparison of the relations of a bishop to his clergy with those of a colonel to his captains.

The Rev. Mr. Barton, a professor at Bryn Mawr, recently ordained deacon, read a striking paper on "The Priest and the Prophet in the Past and in the Future." He showed clearly the need of both—and the natural difference and quarrel between the two.

The Rev. Dr. Montgomery, chaplain in charge of church work at Camp Meade this summer, gave "A Field Impression of the Y. M. C. A."

On the same day the Rev. Bernard I. Bell told of his work with the men at the Great Lakes' Training Camp.

Galilee Mission Anniversary—For twenty-two years the Rev. T. T. D. Noll has carried on rescue work on Vine Street, in the old "tenderloin district." Thirty-three men have gone from the mission into the ministry. Thirty-six thousand have attended the chapel services during this last year. The anniversary was marked by special services at the mission, and at St. Paul's Church in Overbrook. Both Bishops Rhinelander and Garland spoke, also the Rev. Drs. Mockridge, Tomkins, Toop and Washburn. This work is under the auspices of the Episcopal Church. A recent motto of the work may account in part for its success: "I will do what I can, with what I have, where I am—now!"

Death of Oldest Clergyman in Diocese—On January 24 the Rev. Thomas J. Taylor passed to his rest at the age of 94 years. The burial service was held in St. Mary's Church, Burlington, New Jersey, on Wednesday, January 29.

Dr. Johnston's Tenth Anniversary—The vestry of the Church of the Saviour in West Philadelphia recently gave a reception to mark the tenth year of the Rev. Robert Johnston's rectorship.

It is interesting to note that while his present parish keeps this anniversary, a former parish, in Edinborough, Scotland, is placing a window in its church as an appreciation of his work there.

A Clerical Coincidence—The Spirit of Missions lately spoke of the labors of the Rev. Joseph W. Cook, who for thirty-four years served among the Indians in Dakota. Special notice was made of his translation of a prayer book for the Sioux.

Mr. Cook was a graduate of the Philadelphia Divinity School, and rector of St. Paul's Church, Glen Loch, in this diocese. The only other Indian prayer book was translated for the Denai Indians in Alaska by another Philadelphia Divinity School man, the present rector of St. Paul's, Glen Loch, the Rev. Jules Prevost, M.D.

Brotherhood Secretary Dead—Mr. Wm. J. McConnell was buried from St. John's Church, Cynwyd, recently. He was a secretary of the Brotherhood of St. Andrews at Paris Island, the great training station for Marines.

Mr. McConnell studied at Sewanee in 1915, but was too ill to graduate. Later he entered the seminary at Alexandria to study for the ministry. But when the war broke out he volunteered for service, as a layman, with the Brotherhood and was sent to Paris Island.

When at home he was a frequent visitor and helper at the Galilee Mission.

CHICAGO

An Institutional Mission Church—The Rev. Benjamin E. Chapman, who has been rector of St. Andrew's Church for three years, preached his farewell sermon on Sunday, February 2. Many people of means have moved away from the neighborhood, so that the church has had continually greater difficulty in maintaining itself as a parish. For this reason it has been taken over by the Diocesan Board of Missions, and will be run as an institutional mission church. The Rev. Edward A. Selcer of the city mission staff is to be in charge, and he plans to carry on active social service work with St. Andrew's as a center, aided by others of the city mission clergy, the deaconesses, and students from the Western Seminary.

Endowment Fund at St. Chrysostom's—In connection with the parish report for 1918, the rector of St. Chrysostom's Church on the north side, the Rev. Norman O. Hutton, reports that the endowment fund of the church, which was started by an offering of Liberty Bonds and Thrift Stamps on Thanksgiving Day, has reached $5,300. The money has been deposited with a trust company, and under the agreement with those who have subscribed, the income can not be used until the fund has reached $10,000.

Church Work at Great Lakes—In reporting on his work done at Great Lakes during the past year, Dean Bell says that he and the other representatives of the Church at the Naval Training Station came to know and to minister to some 4,000 of our own boys of the Episcopal Church, as well as many men of other denominations, and men who claimed no church membership at all. Over five hundred of these men came from the Diocese of Chicago. Of these, 370 were communicants before they came to Great Lakes, 110 were baptized but unconfirmed, and 17 unbaptized. Forty-nine of them were confirmed while they were at the station. The total number that had been confirmed up to the beginning of the year was 324.

Woman's Auxiliary Elects Officers—The annual business meeting of the Chicago branch of the Woman's Auxiliary was held at St. Timothy's Church on January 28. Mrs. E. J. Randall was elected president, Mrs. Greely, Mrs. Butler, and Mrs. Nathan Corwin vice-presidents, Mrs. E. P. Bailey corresponding secretary, Mrs. Hobart recording secretary, and Mrs. George Clinch treasurer. Bishop Anderson made the address on the condition of the diocesan institutions.

BOSTON

Episcopal Club Has New Officers—

At the annual meeting of the Episcopal Club, held at the Copley-Plaza, and the following officers were elected: President, John Quincy Adams, All Saints' Church, Brookline; vice-presidents, Stoughton Bell, Christ Church, Cambridge; Alexander B. Clough, St. John's Church, Jamaica Plain; secretary, Irving P. Fox, Church of Our Redeemer, Lexington; treasurer, F. Nathaniel Perkins, Trinity Church, Boston; executive committee, Joseph Grafton Minot, chairman, Church of the Advent, Boston; J. Franklin McElwain, the Cathedral Church of St. Paul; Edmund Q. Sylvester, St. Andrew's Church, Hanover; Howard Whitmore, St. Paul's Church, Newton Highlands; William N. Kenney, St. James's Church, Somerville; J. E. Grinfield Coxwell, St. James's Church, Roxbury; Albert S. Partridge, Grace Church, Newton; Albert R. Shephardson, Church of the Good Shepherd, Reading.

MAINE

A Twenty-fifth Anniversary—The twenty-fifth anniversary of the rectorship of the Rev. Robert W. Plant and the one hundredth anniversary of the laying of the cornerstone of Christ Church, Gardiner, was appropriately celebrated on Sunday and Monday, February 2 and 3.

On Sunday morning the anniversary service was held in Christ Church, where for nineteen years, 1847 to 1866, the Right Rev. George Burgess, D.D., the first Bishop of Maine had been rector. The Right Rev. Paul Jones preached from the text, "I am the Way." At an enthusiastic missionary service in the evening the Right Rev. Benjamin Brewster, D.D., in the course of his sermon pointed out how well Christ Church, Gardiner, had carried out the missionary idea under the faithful leadership of the Rev. Mr. Plant. Bishop Jones also made an address on the subject of missions.

In connection with this celebration, the diocesan branch of the Woman's Auxiliary held its quarterly meeting. Preceding the business sessions, which were held in the parish house, an historical account of Christ Church and its importance to the work of the diocese was given by Miss Marguerite Ogden, second vice-president of the Auxiliary, which admirably set the keynote and established the spirit of the meeting following. Bishop Jones also gave an address upon the work of the Church among the Mormons in Utah.

On Monday evening, in the parish house, a reception was given to Mr. and Mrs. Plant by the wardens and vestrymen of Christ Church. Under the presidency of Mr. Robert H. Gardiner, glowing tributes were made by several prominent citizens. Mrs. Laura E. Richards read a poem entitled, "The Elder Who's Good to the Poor." The Hon. Harold E. Cook presented the rector with a bountiful purse as a token of appreciation. Bishop Brewster spoke feelingly of the value of Mr. Plant's work in the diocese, and in the Church at large.

NEBRASKA

Funeral of Bishop Williams—Omaha and the Diocese of Nebraska were shocked at the news of the sudden death of the Right Rev. Arthur Llewellyn Williams, third Bishop of Nebraska, which occurred at the episcopal residence in Omaha at 12:30 Wednesday morning, January 29, as announced in THE CHURCHMAN last week. Late in the autumn he had submitted to an operation for the removal of his tonsils, and apparently had fully recovered from the sickness, and was gradually taking hold of the arduous duties of administration of his diocese. Tuesday morning he went as usual to the diocesan office and attended to the business there. In the evening he was apparently in the best of health, and had a meeting with the vestry of St. Andrew's Church, Omaha, at his residence. He retired about eleven o'clock, but within an hour he aroused his sister, Mrs. Griffith, and his daughter, Mrs. Irving Benolken, who found him in terrible distress from sudden attack on the heart. His physician responded immediately but was unable to give relief; the bishop became unconscious and did not rally, passing away at 12:30. Mrs. Williams was visiting friends at Schuyler, Nebraska, and was to have been joined by the bishop Sunday. She was hurried to her home by automobile early Wednesday morning.

The body of the bishop lay in his private chapel at the episcopal residence from Wednesday night until it was removed to Trinity Cathedral Thursday evening; there it lay in state until the hour of the funeral Friday morning, 10:30. Throughout the night the diocesan clergy kept vigil, while many came to pray and look upon his well-beloved face.

Friday morning at 7:30 the Holy Communion was celebrated at the cathedral by the Rev. W. S. Leete of Plattsmouth, assisted by Canon Collar of Omaha. At the same hour the Holy Communion was celebrated in the bishop's chapel by Canon Mulligan of Beatrice, assisted by the Rev. Carl M. Worden, secretary of the diocese. At 10:30 the funeral service was held. Canon Marsh of Blair read the sentences, and Canon Collar of Omaha the lesson. Bishop Griswold celebrated the Holy Communion, assisted by the Rev. John Williams of Omaha, and Bishop Tyler of North Dakota. The pall bearers were the Rev. Messrs. John Albert Williams, William A. Mulligan, Marcus J. Brown and Charles H. McKnight; and Messrs. Joseph Barker, John S. Hedelund, H. R. Gering and Milton Darling. The body was taken to Longmont, Colorado, for interment, accompanied by Mrs. Benolken and Mrs. Griffith, and representatives of the Standing Committee and Cathedral Chapter.

RHODE ISLAND

Woman's Auxiliary Meeting—A great number of women from the parishes of the diocese gathered at All Saints' Church, Providence, on January 30 for the annual meeting of the Rhode Island branch of the Woman's Auxiliary. The rector, the Rev. Arthur M. Aucock, D.D., presided at the morning session, when addresses were made by the Rev. Robert W. Patten, D.D., of the American Church Institute for Negroes, and by Miss Helen Littell of the Church General Hospital, Wuchang, China. At the afternoon session in the parish house, presided over by Mrs. Howard Hoppin, Mrs. Howard Hoppin was re-elected president. There was an address by Mrs. Walter Hughson, of Grace Hospital, Morganton, North Carolina.

Diocesan Altar Guild—The quarterly meeting of the Diocesan Altar Guild was held at Grace Church parish house, Providence, on January 29, in furtherance of the hope to standardize the altar throughout the diocese.

Memorial Windows—All Saints' Church, Providence, is soon to be enriched with a number of stained glass windows. The St. Andrew Chapter of the parish has given a window in memory of the soldiers and sailors of our country who have died in the war. The window, costing $1,200, will be unveiled on Easter morning. It depicts the Crucifixion, and bears the inscription, "Greater love hath no man." Three other windows have also been given. One is in memory of Louise Foster Waterman; a second is in memory of Elizabeth More Erickson, and Walter Franklin Erickson, and the third in memory of Samuel Anthony Hazard. It is planned that the entire window spaces of this stately church shall picture, in order, the leading events in the life of Christ.

Missionary Campaign—It is planned to hold a missionary campaign in the diocese next fall under the leadership of the Rev. R. W. Patten, D.D., of Atlanta, Georgia. In furtherance of this project a conference of delegates from the parishes was held in St. John's Church parish house, Providence, on January 29.

Clerical Club—President Faunce of Brown University read a deeply suggestive paper before the Clerical Club of Rhode Island at its meeting on February 3 at Grace Church parish house, Providence, on "Our Debt to Great Britain." An address was also made by Bishop Sage of Salina. The clergy were entertained at lunch by the ladies of Grace Church.

ALBANY

Holy Innocents' Anniversary—The 69th anniversary of the Church of the Holy Innocents of Albany was celebrated Sunday, February 2. The service was a memorial to William H. DeWitt, founder of the church, and whose endowment fund has aided in maintaining the parish. The Rev. C. O. S. Kearton, rector, preached the sermon. Holy Innocents' Church was erected through the gift of Mr. DeWitt in 1847. Mr. DeWitt started a campaign with the view to creating a fund for the establishment of a place of worship for members of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the northern part of Albany. In addition to assuming the entire cost of erecting the church, he gave $20,000 for its maintenance. Mr. DeWitt built the church as a memorial to his four children who died in quick succession, and from the circumstance the name "Holy Innocents" was deemed most fitting.

A Memorial Pew—In honor of the forty-eight men of St. Peter's Church in Albany who served in the war, a memorial service took place in the church on Purification Sunday at which Liberty Bonds, war savings and thrift stamps were collected to finance the endowment of pews to be set aside in memory of the men in service. It was estimated by the treasurer of the church that more than $2,500 were given at the morning service. The Rev. Charles C. Harriman, rector, decided upon this permanent memorial, the first of its kind in the city, upon the signing of the armistice. He laid the plans before the wardens and vestrymen who immediately took action on the matter and decided to make the donations strictly voluntary and in payments of bonds and other securities.

Chaplain Birdsall Returns—The Rev. Paul Birdsall, rector of Grace Episcopal Church, has returned to Albany after an absence of more than six months. Chaplain Birdsall had served in France with the Y. M. C. A. since last May, being stationed a greater part of the time in the Alsace sector. He was given a reception by the congregation. Chaplain Birdsall will report in New York soon and may be sent to one of the southern cantonments.

LOS ANGELES

Dr. Lubeck Helps California—All Saints' Church, San Diego, for two months has been enjoying the ministrations of the Rev. Dr. Lubeck, rector emeritus of Zion and St. Timothy's, New York. A reception given recently in his honor at the close of his term of service was attended by Bishop Johnson and the clergy of San Diego as well as the people of the parish.

Before Dr. Lubeck's coming the church had been closed for some months. The parish being one of strategic importance on account both of the large residence district composing it and of the nearness of the great naval training camp at Balboa Park, the bishop, in line with the policy of the War Commission to strengthen churches adjacent to military camps, has made this church the headquarters for war work. Under the energetic and able leadership of the Rev. Charles T. Murphy, Jr., civilian chaplain, the Sunday School has been reopened and built up to an enrollment of sixty pupils and twelve teachers and officers, a service men's club has been organized with numerous entertainments and an open club room, and new life has been infused into the parish. From this center Chaplain Murphy reaches not only Balboa Park but the half dozen other camps that center around San Diego. The reinforcement of his work at All Saints' by the strong preaching of Dr. Lubeck has contributed greatly to the rehabilitation of this church.

Announcements are being made in the papers of the Government's intention to make San Diego the permanent headquarters of the Southern Division of the Pacific Fleet and to establish a naval air station and various training camps. Concrete buildings are under construction and an investment of several millions of dollars is contemplated. It is to be hoped that the War Commission can continue its work at this point indefinitely.

CENTRAL NEW YORK

Miss Huntington Honored—The board of directors of the Syracuse Y. W. C. A. have decided that the dormitory section of their new building shall be known as the Arria C. Huntington Home. Miss Huntington is a daughter of the late Bishop F. D. Huntington and has been associated with philanthropic work in the city of Syracuse for many years, especially work in the interest of young women. She was active in founding The Shelter for Unprotected Girls, which has done such excellent work, and is vice-president of its official board. She has also been one of the earnest workers in establishing the Y. W. C. A. in Syracuse, and has served for many years as its vice-president.

Activity Among Laymen—With the hearty approval of both bishops, group meetings for laymen are to be held Feb. 9-16 in the important centers of the diocese, such as Utica, Watertown, Syracuse, Waterloo, Auburn, Elmira, Binghamton and Norwich, to plan intensive work along the lines of regular church attendance, faithfulness at Holy Communion, and earnest study of Christian truth. These meetings are arranged by Mr. F. H. Pyke, diocesan council member of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew. At least one layman is to be present from each neighboring parish, and the meetings will be addressed by the new general secretary of the brotherhood, Mr. G. Frank Shelby.

Receives Medal—First Sergeant William H. Ward of Co. M, 108th U. S. Infantry, who was killed at the battle of Duck Valley on September 29, 1918, has been awarded the Distinguished Service Cross by the Commander-in-Chief. Sergeant Ward was the brother of the Rev. Lewis E. Ward, rector of Emmanuel Church, Elmira, New York. When the captain of the company was wounded and the lieutenant was killed he took command of the company, and in leading the men in a charge on the Hindenburg line he was killed by a machine gun bullet. He had been seriously wounded before this, but after having his wound dressed had returned to the fight.

In making the award the commander said it was for "extraordinary bravery in the line of duty while under fire." He is buried at the little French village of St. Emptie and his soul is in the hands of his Saviour Whom he served.

Physician to Address Clergy—An interesting variation of the usual program of the Binghamton Clericus occurred on Wednesday, February 12, when Dr. Frederick W. Sears of Syracuse, representing the State Health Department, spoke on "The Government Program for a Clean Manhood." The Binghamton Clericus includes in its membership clergy from five dioceses. Each member is asked to bring a physician from his parish to this meeting.

THEODORE HAYDN.

A Warm Welcome—On Tuesday evening, January 21, the people of St. Alban's Mission, Indiana Harbor, in the parish house, gave a reception in honor of their new rector, the Rev. L. E. Morris, who is a graduate of Seabury Divinity School and has been in service with the Canadian Red Cross until recently. About 200 people were present at the reception, among whom were representative citizens of Indiana Harbor, all bespeaking success and happiness to the mission. Eight diocesan clergy welcomed the Rev. Mr. Morris to his new work. The apartment on the second floor of the parish house, which has been newly and most attractively furnished by the people of St. Alban's for their new priest, was open to the guests during the reception.

Rector Called—At Trinity Church, Logansport, the people have united all interests, have elected a strong vestry, are putting the rectory in new and fresh attire and have called the Rev. George H. Richardson, Ph.D., as rector. He will take charge of the parish toward the end of February.

Notes—St. Paul's Church, Hammond, has just celebrated its patronal festival with many evidences of its growing strength and varied activities.

During the past year Christ Church, Gary, has done most aggressive work, having raised and disbursed eight thousand dollars, thereby paying off much of its heavy indebtedness.

GRACE EVERETT.

FOND DU LAC

Annual Council—The forty-fifth annual council of the Diocese of Fond du Lac was held in St. Paul's Cathedral, Fond du Lac on Tuesday, January 28.

The bishop read his annual address at this service, telling of the work he has accomplished throughout the diocese since the last meeting of the council in June, 1918, and speaking of events of world and national importance. In commenting on the recent prohibition legislation the bishop said:

"The amendment to our national constitution prohibiting the manufacture, importation and sale of alcoholic beverages has been formally adopted and after June 30 of this year the liquor trade will come to an end. There are many arguments in favor of individual freedom in the use of stimulants to a moderate degree, but whatever sacrifices may be required of the man who enjoyed an occasional glass of beer or wine are entirely overborne by the closing of the saloons. The saloon in the economic, moral and political life of the nation has become intolerable and we can all thank God for the safeguards which this constitutional enactment throws about the weak, and the protection it will give to our boys and young men, such a multitude of whom have been ruined by the saloon in every generation. The enforcement of prohibition will present many and great problems, but law abiding citizens will, of course, stand by the law with thankful hearts."

The council noted the fact that 1920 will be the twentieth anniversary of Bishop Weller's elevation to the Episcopacy and he was asked to name a committee of seven to look after the raising of an anniversary fund. This committee will also look after the raising of a fund for completing the purchase of an Episcopal residence for Bishop Weller.

E. J. Perry was elected treasurer of the diocese; H. R. Potter treasurer of the Board of Trustees; the Rev. A. Gordon Fowkes registrar of the diocese; and the Rev. Edwin W. Todd a member of the Board of Missions in place of the Rev. G. H. S. Somerville.

The bishop entertained the delegates to the council and members of the cathedral congregation at a delightful reception at Grafton Hall in the evening. He was assisted in entertaining by the members of the faculty and the students.

Cathedral Parish Dinner—Members of the cathedral parish to the number of 150 enjoyed the annual dinner in observance of St. Paul's Day on Saturday, January 25. The Rev. A. Gordon Fowkes presided at the after-dinner program and the Rev. W. G. Studwell, of Menasha, was the speaker of the evening. There was also a program of music furnished by students of Grafton Hall.

MABEL DICKINSON.

LONG ISLAND

Thank-Offering—The rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Brooklyn, was recently handed a $100 bill by a young man of the parish, who has just been mustered out of service, to be added to his new Chancel Fund, as a thank offering to Almighty God for his safe return home. The rector's comment is: "It was a fine act, growing out of a fine heart."

Gift of a Cross—Mrs. E. E. Tucker, a parishioner of many years' standing, has presented to the Church of the Incarnation, Brooklyn, the Rev. A. W. E. Carrington, rector, an unusually handsome old Latin processional cross.

Bishop Dedicates Fancher Memorial—On Sunday, February 2, Bishop Burgess conducted the dedication services of the Mollie Fancher Memorial, held in St. Giles' Hospital for Crippled Children. Dr. B. B. Mosher paid a short tribute to Miss Fancher's memory.

Dedicate Y. W. C. A. for Colored Women—The Ashland Place Branch, Y. W. C. A., for young colored women, at 45 Ashland Place, Brooklyn, was dedicated Sunday, February 2. The building is a five-story structure, with social rooms, a library, class room, a gymnasium, a cafeteria and sleeping rooms, with accommodations for twenty-two girls.

Bishop Burgess Confirms 22—Bishop Burgess confirmed a class of twenty-two candidates at the Church of the Redeemer, Brooklyn, Sunday, February 2.

Interchurch Emergency Meeting—Bishop Stearly of Newark, presided at the Interchurch Emergency Meeting held at Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, on Sunday, February 2.

Memorial Service—A most beautiful memorial service was that held at St. Bartholomew's Church, Brooklyn, on Sunday evening, February 2, for four of the men of the parish who died on the field of honor. Gold stars were placed on the service flag by Col. L. J. Praeger, Twenty-third Regiment. Veterans of the Twenty-third Regiment, with soldiers, sailors and the Red Cross organization, were present.

The altar was covered with lilies and the church beautifully decorated with flags. Taps were sounded, after which, with the congregation kneeling, the choir sang "Father, in thy gracious keeping, leave we now, our heroes, sleeping," to the accompaniment of harp and organ.

NORTH TEXAS

New Church Property—The Rev. W. T. Allan, D.D., in charge of Ballinger and Coleman, Texas, has just secured a whole block in the heart of Coleman, with a nice residence on it, for the church and rectory of the Church of the Holy Spirit. The church is now located in the suburbs, with paved streets in only part of the suburb. Only those who have experienced Texas prairie mud know what that means. Miss Alice Clow had deeded the block to the city for a park, but later annulled that deed and deeded it to the church, to take effect at her death. It is to be a memorial to the Clow family.

Miss Clow had just refused ten thousands dollars for this property. The church will be moved on to this lot as soon as it comes into possession. The church will also retain the half of a block which Dr. Allan secured about a year ago for the rectory.

COLORADO

The Bishop's Operation—The bishop of the diocese had to undergo an operation recently at St. Luke's Hospital, Denver, which was quite a test of endurance, as none but a local anesthetic could be used. During the full hour and a half that Drs. I. B. Perkins and J. E. Kinney operated the bishop was fully conscious and suffered not a little. This sojourn in hospital cancelled, of course, the bishop's itinerary for the month.

A Beautiful New Church Consecrated—A few days before going to the hospital the bishop consecrated the beautiful Church of All Saints', Sterling, which is as neat and compact a plant as there is in the diocese. Besides the bishop there were present the Venerable Archdeacon Schofield, the Rev. C. A. Burritt, of Fort Morgan, and the Rev. Roman L. Harding, all of whom were helpful in bringing to pass this desired result, the latter, indeed, having made himself much beloved through his hospital ministrations during the recent influenza epidemic, which he fortunately escaped himself.

The Comprehensive Church—A visible parable of the comprehensiveness of the Church was seen at St. Thomas' Church dedication in the fact that an Indian clergyman, the Rev. Sherman Coolidge, read the lesson from the Hebrew prophets to an American congregation at an English service in a church of Spanish architecture.

Clerical Changes—The Rev. Alan Russell, having resigned Leadville, has charge

Demobilization of Chaplains—The chaplains, no less than the soldiers, are being warned that they must not expect a speedy demobilization. And the overworked clergy at home, who were beginning to expect their curates soon to return, are in much the same position as the manufacturers. A few chaplains who have done long service may be spared, but the Archbishop of Canterbury has written to point out that the need of ministrations in the field is in many ways greater and more anxious than before. It will be no easy task: "Much of the romance and glamor of the life is over, and for that very reason there is need for increased care, ingenuity and skill."

Relations with the Y. M. C. A.—A rather formal report has been issued by the War Advisory Committee of the Archbishop's Council on War Problems, dealing with the future relationship of the Church and the Y. M. C. A. The immediate result of the discussion which has been going on is this: There will be, at the headquarters of the Y. M. C. A. a regularly constituted advisory committee, containing representatives of the Christian denominations nominated in conference with the respective authorities. And the clergy are asked to co-operate with the Y. M. C. A. in any local schemes.

This is really one of the minor revolutions of the day, scarcely to be noticed among the bigger things. But its full effect may be far-reaching. It is not a mere question of being friendly with the Y. M. C. A.: we cannot be anything else, after the splendid record of service which the association has filled during the war. But what some of us feared was the formation of a new, popular, and very powerful sect. But if the Y. M. C. A. is going to admit official representatives from the Churches to act as "advisers," we are not likely to have it starting to hold services at ordinary church hours, and drawing people away from existing church services. And, on the other hand, the Y. M. C. A. stands to gain in numbers and influence if existing church bodies take a large share in establishing local institutes, recreation rooms, etc. One hears of the possibility of the removal of the large huts from positions where they are no longer wanted, and of setting them up in the small towns and villages. In larger centers, it is proposed to acquire large houses, with rooms for recreation, lectures, Bible classes, and there ought to be an honorable rivalry between the Church of England and Nonconformists to make the most of the new opportunities. As a means of getting to know the men and lads of one's own congregation, these new buildings will be most valuable to us, as they will be most efficiently run. The bigness of the Red Triangle will make appeal to those whom our small parochial clubs have failed to attract. At any rate, the clergy of my own district have met, and have resolved to work heartily with the Y. M. C. A.

Clerical Poverty and Bishops' Palaces—Once more we are discussing bishops' palaces, as a kind of side-issue on the clerical poverty question. The inevitable correspondent turns up with the suggestion that these buildings should be sold. He is answered by the equally inevitable retort: Cui bono? The Church would lose a set of buildings which might be put to large diocesan uses, and the poor clergy would receive a microscopic increase to their incomes. Indeed, the reply this time is very energetic: Dean Gamble of Exeter, takes the trouble to make it in some detail. He has managed to say at least one new thing: No doubt the bishop would be much more comfortable in a suburban village, and if his comfort were the main object, we might well release him from his palace. "But bishops are not intended to be comfortable."

Another novelty in the discussion, which is otherwise threadbare, is a curt letter from "A Diocesan Bishop" giving his balance-sheet for 1918. He does not give all details, but tells us what his taxes are, what his automobile and railroad expenses come to, and after getting the figures past the half-way mark, he concludes with the statement that the upkeep of the palace, office and secretarial work, public subscriptions, and hospitality, do not leave the balance on the credit side. There he leaves it, but it looks as if bishops, like many other clergy, were really underpaid at £4,000 a year. It all seems to be swallowed up in the expense of being a bishop.

Shorter Services—The newspapers have been taking some notice of the new custom at St. Peter's, Harrow, of shortening Matins very considerably. But they have "got the story wrong." The vicar writes to the Church Times to point out that there is already a weekly choral celebration of Holy Communion at St. Peter's, Matins being said at an earlier hour. But in order to get in touch with returned soldiers, the vicar has prefaced the Communion service with a very abbreviated Matins, on the lines of the soldiers' parade service, which, with a sermon, lasts three-quarters of an hour. The hope is that the men will stay on for the Communion, which has always been the practical service at St. Peter's. Evidently the vicar does not like the impression getting about that he gets through his entire Sunday morning's duties in three-quarters of an hour "shortened Matins." The Bishop of London has approved the whole arrangement, and the vicar is ready to say Matins in full at an earlier hour, if required.

SACRAMENTO

Organizing for Business—The finance committee of the diocese at a recent meeting in Sacramento elected the Rev. Barr

G. Lee secretary of the committee, and commissioned him to communicate with rectors and vestrymen in relation to keeping diocesan obligations paid. Mr. Lee is making a personal visit to several parishes to assist in gathering these obligations.

Deposition—The Rev. William Rigby, deacon, was deposed by Bishop Moreland in Trinity Pro-Cathedral January 14, in the presence of the Rev. Mark Rifenback and the Rev. B. G. Lee, after written renunciation of the ministry dated six months previously.

The Open Forum

The Free Family Pew

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

Many years ago I attended a well known church where at that time the pews were free, but also where the family pew was sacred.

The regular parishioners had assigned to them their own pews, until ten minutes before the service began, at which hour if the owners were not in them, strangers were seated there. At each pew was attached a notice reading: "This seat reserved until ten minutes before the hour of service."

The family pew to those with sentiment and family affection is sacred. Also having to pay for a seat in God's house is not Christlike teaching.

Sensitive persons wander here and there, not being able to pay pew rent—finally being weaned away altogether, or going elsewhere where seats are free to all.

Allowing ten minutes before the service begins in which to seat strangers, it can be hospitably and courteously done, and the service conducted with reverence and dignity without distraction to the worshippers.

A loyal parish will find some business-like way to support its own church if the matter is looked at in the right light and spirit.

MARY HILDRETH.

A Help to Missions

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

The Board of Missions has a splendid "Service for a Missionary Day Service" for Church Schools. They number 3,000. The Sunday Schools, however, need no fresh incentive for the work of missions, but our congregations do and, for the most part, need it badly. Why not have the Sunday Schools teach the congregation? Bring the Sunday School to morning service in a body and advertise that the Sunday School is coming to church on a certain Sunday to worship with the congregation. It will bring many of the parents to church who never before have been at service. Use the service of the Board of Missions and have a copy for everybody present. If it lacks authority to be substituted for Morning Prayer, it can be used nearly in its entirety before the Eucharist, and the teaching value is then twofold. The congregation get inspiration for missions from the children; and the children, instructed beforehand, learn to worship at the service of the Holy Communion, which, as a whole, they are strangers to. And at the end of the Epiphany season it makes an appropriate beginning for the children in their work for their lenten mite boxes for missions.

The New Lectionary

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

While thanking you for your kind remark that "compiling a lectionary is a ticklish business," and "people who attempt it deserve consideration," may I, on behalf of the commission, though, without having consulted with my fellow members, suggest just what sort of consideration they most desire and think they have a right to ask at the hands of the Church? For ourselves, nothing at all. If what we are proposing or may yet propose is not the best, let it go to the discard, no matter how many hours or years we have spent on it. But what we do ask for is the right kind of consideration given to the subject matter itself. We would like definite, constructive criticism, based not only on what individuals would like to have, as a matter of personal taste, but on an intelligent understanding of the problem and our method of solution, and with a full recognition of the self-evident truth that it is impossible to please everybody. There must be as far as possible a comprehensive plan which presents the biblical material as adapted to the church year, and which, at the same time, reconciles and includes as many different points of view as possible.

For instance, it does not help the commission to be told that "some of us do not think the new lectionary is any improvement upon the old"; or that "there is dissatisfaction with the new"; or that some one "mourns for the loss of familiar lessons"; when we are not told what the objection to the new lectionary is, or just what "familiar lessons" are desired to be retained and why. So far as I know not a single individual has expressed a desire for any particular passage of Scripture to be used on any particular day. We would welcome such suggestions and, as has been repeatedly explained, our plan is a flexible and comprehensive one which allows for many changes if people will just indicate what changes are desired.

So far as the present Prayer Book lectionary is concerned, it is demonstrably faulty and inadequate; and, anyway, the Church has asked for a revision which shall follow the church year, not only on Sundays but on week days. Moreover, almost every "familiar" Sunday selection will be found in the new lectionary put either in the same place, or on some other Sunday where it fits the church year better. In addition to that there are many splendid selections which under the old plan never got read on Sundays at all and which have commended themselves to all the commissions in this country and in England. As instances of criticisms which are helpful, because definite, I will mention two—one against the too great use of Leviticus (week days), and the other against the lessons from Maccabees on Sundays. With the former criticism I am entirely in sympathy, although the critic failed to take note of the fact that in the lessons which give the history of the exiles who returned and established anew (or for the first time, as some think) the Mosaic law, it was considered a good idea to give some idea of what that law, in its fully developed form, was, constituting the Judaism which is the background of the New Testament. As to the second criticism, directed against selections from Maccabees, all modern students of the Bible agree on the importance of the experience of the Jews between the close of the canon and the coming of our Lord. No one can understand the book of Daniel, for instance, without knowing the fundamental fact of the persecutions under Antiochus Epiphanes, as given in the lesson for Trinity of last year. The American commission and the English arrived independently at the same conclusion as to the importance of the Maccabean story. But, as illustrating how the commission has tried to reconcile different points of view, and how entirely unnecessary it is for any clergyman to upset all this work and go back bodily to the Prayer Book lectionary (which the Church, I repeat, has asked to have changed) for every single historical lesson running through two years, including the Maccabean selections, an alternative has been provided of a prophetic or didactic character so that those dear people who object to historical selections are under no compulsion ever to read a single one. And I am quite sure that if those people will get together and agree on just what alternative lessons they desire on those Sundays, the commission will put them in.

And that leads me to say that, striving honestly to get at just what lies back of criticisms and dissatisfactions which are vaguely expressed, I am convinced that many persons desire no chronological or historical treatment of the Bible at all, but only topical selections which will "give our people," as Bishop Page expresses it, "the largest degree of spiritual help." Of course, that is what we all want. Perhaps it may be of interest to state that the germ of the new lectionary was exactly that idea, in the carrying out of which there was to be no chronological treatment of the Bible or continuous readings of books at all. But then we were up against the fact not only that tradition was all against us—which was not in itself conclusive—but that many people whose views are entitled to just as much consideration as those of any others, still stand strongly for just such a treatment of the Bible. Certainly, the present Prayer Book lectionary is based largely on that idea, only it is badly carried out. But that is not all nor the most important consideration. The commission feels bound to take serious issue with those persons who depreciate the history of the religion of the Bible, both Old and New Testament, in its bearing on the spiritual life. There is not space here to argue that question, but if our critics, or some of them, will come out in the open and say that they desire to be rid of the historical treatment of the Bible, particularly of the Old Testament, then a clear issue is presented and we shall have to ask the Church to express its mind on that point through the General Convention. (I may here be permitted to refer to an article appearing in the February number of the American Church Monthly on "Why the Old Testament," vide, also Bishop Hall's, Holy Scripture in the Worship of the Church, Chapter V.) If, however, the Church is not to abandon the time-honored chronological treatment of the Old Testament—and I believe that the best minds of to-day who are students of the Old Testament and of the spiritual life agree with the traditional position of the Church—we submit that the treatment of the Old Testament in the present Prayer Book lectionary is defective; that the English lectionary, old and revised, is far better in that respect; but that even this does not do justice to the Old Testament, particularly in its relation to the church year. We are convinced, after some years of study on the subject, that the following division and assignments of the Old Testament are sound and edifying: (I) Creation to the close of wilderness wanderings, Advent to end of Easter season; (II) Entrance upon the Promised Land to end of Solomon's reign, from Whitsunday to end of Trinity season; (III) Division of kingdom to end of exile, Advent to Easter of second year; (IV) Redemption from exile through the rest of the Old Testament and to the end of the inter-biblical period, from Easter to end of Trinity season. It may here be stated that these four divisions, adopted for their relation to the church year, were arrived at independently and yet coincide with the four volumes of Professor Kent's Historical Bible. So far as the New Testament is concerned, our plan is to give the life of Christ from Christmas to Whitsunday and then the work of the Holy Spirit from Whitsunday on, filling in the Easter season with the incidents of the Great Forty Days and kindred subjects. If this plan is wrong, we respectfully ask, why is it wrong?

But that does not exhaust the plan. The above leaves one year (morning or evening) blank. That we propose to fill with topical selections from Old and New Testaments directly related to the spiritual life and keyed to the collects, epistles and gospels of each Sunday. Here could be utilized such selections as are being proposed in several church papers. It is here that I shrewdly suspect Bishop Page could help us. But I submit that criticisms should be definite; that the plan as a whole should be grasped; and that we should remember that we are churchmen, not sectarians. By that I mean that "we are members one of another" and that no individual should "think of himself more highly than he ought to think." No one should demand the setting aside of a comprehensive plan in favor of some particular lessons he wants read at any particular time, without seeing first if they cannot be got in—that or else the substitution of another plan covering the whole subject.

Finally, we would remind our readers that the plan is educational in its scope and method, and as such necessarily must run counter to many preconceived ideas. One practical suggestion I have to make is, not to determine the lectionary at this coming General Convention. Personally, I should like to see tentatively adopted a revised report of the commission made after hearing from the objectors. But the time is short. Let us hear from you brethren and let us see if we cannot get together.

The Family Pew

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

Many of the older men hate to see the abandonment of the family pew. I do not know that it makes much difference, if the people have ceased to go to church in families. It was that which saved New England in former times. That was a sacred home for the children. The family united once a week for the worship of God, and the children loved church. The young men are last to go to church, because the fathers do not take their families with them to the House of God. Free seats in church, as Dr. Stires says, is not altogether ideal. There is much that can be said for the family pew.

Adrian IV and Henry II

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

Let Churchwarden be of good heart. His point about Adrian IV. making Henry II. his mandatory with regard to Ireland is well taken. The Catholic Encyclopedia, surely no partisan of Churchwarden, or of the British, openly admits that Adrian IV. made Henry II. the liege lord of Ireland, sending him a personal letter and the official ring of investiture, even though the bull (Laudabiliter) is a forgery. Also that Adrian IV. did not give Ireland to the "Angevin King Henry II." because he was English.

Christmas Services in French Stables

In a letter dated from Paris, January 8, Bishop Perry says:
"Christmas was celebrated throughout the army, especially in hospital centers, with great success. I had succeeded in getting music and other supplies in London and had drawn heavily upon the stores in Paris, so that carols, etc., were generally distributed and used; Communion services were celebrated by our clergy wherever they were stationed, and Christmas trees and presents were provided in most of the units. At many places the spirit of the first Christmas was very beautifully suggested by the celebration of Holy Communion in a stable where the altar was placed on any available elevation. A stall served as the sacristy and the men knelt in the straw. I had two such Christmas services with the 26th and the 36th Divisions. Our Christmas cards, which I sent out for the War Commission to about 20,000 churchmen in the army, seemed to have been received just before Christmas Day. Since then in many places which I have visited, the men have taken these from their pockets to show to me with much gratitude and pleasure, often not knowing that I had sent them."

General Pershing Visits Nurses' Hut

Miss Willie R. Young, Y. W. C. A. secretary, who is now doing after-war work at a nurse's hut in France, writes of a visit which General Pershing made to the base hospital.

"The Commander-in-Chief of the A. E. F. came to see us the other afternoon and stood before our fire and talked and joked with the group as though it were his custom to drop in every afternoon. He invited us to his chateau afterwards, where we had a delightful time. He is truly one of the most simple and sincere and gracious men I have ever met, and an ideal host.

"Since the armistice has been signed we have been the channel through which nurses and doctors for the front have come on their way back to the port of embarkation. Every hour of the day or night, little groups sit around the room comparing their experiences and wondering what is going to happen to them. Streams of blue-clad figures with heavy boots and still heavier packs—always hungry and cold—have followed in. Our new fireplace has been a godsend to dozens of men and women and has called out such remarks as: 'This is the first time I have been really warm since I came to France,' or 'This is the first home-like spot we have struck in months.'

Y. W. C. A. Helps Epidemic Victims

The Young Women's Christian Association is augmenting its activities in housing girls who are engaged in government work in Washington. Hundreds of these girls were victims of the flu. They were taken to hospitals, and when the day of their discharge came there was no place for them to go, except the uncomfortable little room in a boarding house, shared, perhaps, with several other girls. The Young Women's Christian Association came to their rescue by adding a convalescents' ward to its home at Rockville, thirteen miles out from the city. Here the girl is taken and nursed back to health, the only expense being the cost of her meals. As she is paying for a room in the city, it would be too great a tax for her to pay for a room in the home, too, and this is given her. The home is located ideally for this purpose, and girls under the care given them make a quick recovery.

The association is rather proud of this: A girl working for the Government in Washington had the flu. When the time came to discharge her from the hospital, the physician advised her to go to the Georgetown Young Women's Christian Association Home, where there is a convalescents' ward for girls like her. "I am sending her to you," he told the secretary in charge, "but I tell you frankly there is no hope for her. She had a weak heart, and cannot live many weeks; but I am sure her last days will be happier with you folks around her." The girl arrived. She was given the best of nursing, she spent sunny days wrapped in blankets on a big veranda that commanded a view of the woods; she was fed on fresh milk and eggs. And in two weeks she was back at her desk completely recovered! What did it cost her at the home? The cost of her meals, and that was all. There was no charge for her room or the nursing.

PROVINCE OF SEWANE

HOLDS IMPORTANT MEETING

ATLANTA, GEORGIA.—Important progressive steps in religious education, especially in the Province of Sewanee, were reported in the meeting of the executive committee of the Provincial Board of Religious Education, held last month, and further progressive movements were undertaken. The meeting was held in the parish house of St. Philip's Cathedral, Atlanta.

The Rev. Gardiner L. Tudor, field secretary, said that the Province of Sewanee has a complete educational system of its own with all the five forces of religious education, seminary college, secondary schools, church Sunday schools and homes. It has all the elements of Christian education that are found anywhere in the whole Church.

The most important movement in the provincial field is the campaign to secure one million dollars as an endowment for the University of the South. Mr. Wicks Wamboldt, director of the campaign, addressed the meeting, telling of the plans of the campaign and stating that he had received most encouraging messages from leading men of the South and of the country endorsing the movement and promising assistance. Two other movements for endowment of Church institutions, for Porter Military Academy, Charleston, and St. Mary's School, Raleigh, have been temporarily postponed for special reasons.

The Sewanee Summer School for Workers was discussed. The director, the Rev. Mercer P. Logan, announced that the school would probably hold its sessions for two weeks next August and would offer 100 hours or more of classes for which credits would be given, in addition to other classes, lectures, conferences, and other features.

standards. The other was the exchange of Sunday morning services between Congregational and Unitarian ministers, and the general joining of the Protestant ministers of the city in a Communion service in the Unitarian church with the Unitarian minister presiding—without (so far as is known) protest or remonstrance from Methodist, Baptist or Congregational authorities or people; certainly there was no repudiation of the act. I mention these two incidents not for their local reference, for I fear they might have happened anywhere, but because they show that the differences between those who may call themselves Christians are not only about trivial matters of taste or preference, but are often concerned with great principles of Christian faith and Christian morals. There is no narrowness or bigotry in declaring that the Godhead of our Lord Jesus Christ cannot be treated as an open question or a matter of indifference.

DEMOCRACY IN THE NEAR EAST AND OTHER PHASES OF THE WAR

Democracy in the East

THE Allies and the United States have been fighting to make the world safe for democracy. By committing themselves to this aim they have tacitly taken upon themselves the responsibility of guiding the Asiatic peoples to a position which will enable them also to live under democratic government. To do this, not only the governments, but the mass of the people in the more enlightened countries must familiarize themselves with the problems that confront these backward nations. There are four books just published which should very materially assist in this task of education.

Armenia and the War (George H. Doran Co.), a strong appeal to Britain and the Peace Conference, gives the point of view of an Armenian, A. P. Hacoubian, who has for many years lived in England. Although one may not agree with the solution of the Armenian problem which Mr. Hacoubian suggests, one cannot but be enlightened by his clear statements, and impressed by his strong appeal for justice. Viscount Bryce, in his preface, says: "He speaks with intimate knowledge as well as with patriotic feeling, and states the case of his countrymen with a moderation well fitted to inspire confidence." The latter fact is especially felt in his chapter, "The gentle and clean-fighting Turk." It is a book quickly and easily read, and helpful even were one to read detached chapters only.

The Tragedy of Armenia (by Bertha S. Papazian, the Pilgrim Press), is rather a misleading title. So much has been said and written about the horrors of the Armenian situation that one's first reaction on seeing this title is a purely selfish one of avoiding any more stories of horror. As a matter of fact, this excellent book, while naturally touching on the massacres and deportations of the unfortunate Armenian race, deals chiefly with their ancient and immediate history. Even to one familiar since childhood with Asia Minor, and the sufferings of Christians under the Ottoman yoke, the account given by Mrs. Papazian of the struggles of this plucky people to uphold through centuries of persecution its standards of Christian democracy, although forsaken by the so-called Christian powers of Europe, is most enlightening and inspiring. In fact, on finishing the book, the reader longs to spread its contents among the thousands of Christians who, largely from a sense of pity, have helped these sufferers. After reading it, they would count it a privilege to have a share in building up a nation which has been so faithful to its beliefs.

The world has accepted Armenia as a static symbol of suffering. It has seen in her merely a figure with hands outstretched in useless supplication, and except for the coin which it has given her for bread, it has passed on without other thought or reaction. . . . The Armenians, though frequently overpowered were never overcome. By statecraft, and by their remarkable power of assimilating their enemies no less than by force of arms, they continued to maintain their race and its traditions against all odds.

It is largely due to this fact, that after so many thousands of years of persecution there is still an Armenian race pleading to have its cause considered at the Peace Table.

With the Peace Conference under way, with so much discussion in our papers of the Near Eastern problem, a book as sound and as full of information as The Reconstruction in Turkey (compiled for the American Committee of Armenian and Syrian Relief, and edited by Wm. H. Hall), is one that should be well known. It is a compilation of reports by men and women familiar with the problems in these lands. It does not limit itself to the statement of facts, but gives constructive ideas and actual plans. The person not already familiar with these problems, can, without reading the whole volume, obtain a clear and concise idea of the industrial, agricultural, political or financial questions. The reader already possessing a general knowledge of conditions in the Near East, will find this book a great asset as a reference book for statistics and detailed facts.

The problems of the Near East, however, are not the only ones challenging the champions of democracy. The Far East has awakened and is demanding light. Tyler Dennett in The Democratic Movement in Asia (Association Press) makes this fact very evident. As he himself says, it is very interesting that "a secular magazine (Asia), which has no relation whatever to religious propaganda, would have found the facts with reference to foreign missions worthy of so much consideration." For the theme of this book was developed in a lecture delivered before the American Asiatic Association, and the author states that the facts are "the observations of a tourist who merely took the trouble to turn aside from the usual routes of travel to make investigations at first hand." In the opening of his book he takes up the problems of democracy in Asia:

Democracy is not merely a catchword of the war; it has become the catchword of the world. The war has accentuated the ideal and accelerated its growth; but long before the war began, the ideal had thrust down its roots in many soils where republican institutions were plants of exotic growth.

Mr. Dennett shows how the world is searching for democracy, and then touches on the position the United States as a great democratic nation, holds among the Asiatic nations. Having thus given a glimpse of the attitude of these countries, he turns to the part the missionary has played in the past in the development of this democratic vision, and the part he must play in the future.

The book, full of interesting facts, is also a great tribute to the work of the missionaries. In succeeding chapters Mr. Dennett treats the work of the preacher, the doctor, the educator, the problems of the emancipation of woman, and the numerous industrial problems that European innovations bring in their train. He shows how from now on mission work, hitherto largely the pioneer, must go hand in hand with commerce and political and industrial betterment.

Without wishing in any way to displace the soldier in the affection and loyal support of all lovers of justice and right, I would place beside him the foreign missionary as equally worthy of the confidence and support of those who are truly determined to safeguard the democracy of the world. Such a statement from as fair a judge as Mr. Dennett seems to be, ought to encourage the loyal supporters of foreign missions, and remove many of the prejudices held by those unfamiliar with conditions in the non-Christian world.

The Lithuanians

THE HISTORY OF THE LITHUANIAN NATION AND ITS PRESENT NATIONAL ASPIRATIONS. By Kunigas Antanas Jusaitis. The Lithuanian Catholic Truth Society. 1918.

The Lithuanians are now seeking the re-birth of their nation. They claim the right of separation from the Poles and suggest that they be associated with the Letts. This little martyr nation has lately developed a very definite national consciousness and its leaders claim that they have perfected their cultural and political life and have inherent national aspirations perpetuated by language, literature and religion that warrant their recognition and reestablishment as a nation. Kunigas Antanas Jusaitis has briefed the case for the Lithuanian nation and expressed their national aspirations in a book published by the Lithuanian Catholic Truth Society. Their propaganda is international and has had a great amount of sympathy from Americans of that race. One striking thing about their aspirations is that they argue for national establishment on the ground of their past rather than from the forward look of men who have caught the spirit of the present worldwide outlook on democracy. They were the last nation in Europe to be Christianized and their history is typical of the small European nation's struggle for freedom to express its own national consciousness. Their case is therefore a complicated one, and must have a hearing before the final settlement of Europe is made.

Rhymes of a Padre

ROUGH RHYMES OF A PADRE. By "Woodbine Willie," M.C., C.F. George H. Doran Company. New York. 1918. 50c.

These Rhymes by the Rev. G. A. Studert-Kennedy, a padre with the British army in Flanders, may be rough (since they are mostly in the inimitable patois of Tommy Atkins), but they constitute some of the best war verse we have seen. They are not only good verse, but they are excellent theology. We hope they reflect the spiritual attitude of many Tommies, and that whether they do or not, the Tommies read them. The following quotation will give their flavor, which is quite to our taste:

And the lovin' God looks down on it all,
On the blood and the mud and the smell.
O God, if it's true, 'ow I pities you,
For we must be livin' in hell.

But why don't you bust the show to bits
And force us to do your will?
Why ever should God be suffering so
And man be sinning still?

That's what I'd do, if I was you,
And I had a lot of sons
What squabbled and fought and spoiled their 'ome

Same as us boys and the 'uns.
And yet I remember a lad o' mine,
E's fightin' now on the sea,
And 'e were a thorn in 'is mother's side,
And the plague o' my life to me.

Lord, 'ow I used to swish that lad
Till 'e fairly yelped with pain,
But fast as I thrashed one devil out
Another popped in again.
And at last, when 'e grew up a strappin' lad,
'E ups and 'e says to me,
'My will's my own, and my life's my own,
And I'm goin', dad, to sea."

February 15, 1919

Well, maybe, that's 'ow it is wi' God,
'Is sons 'ave got to be free;
Their wills are their own, and their lives are their own,
And that's 'ow it 'as to be
So the Father God goes sorrowing still
For 'is world what 'as gone to sea,
But 'E runs up a light on Calvary's 'ight
That beckons to you and me.

The Religion of the Tommy

THE RELIGION OF THE TOMMY. By H. P. Almon Abbott, M.A., D.D. The Morehouse Publishing Company. Milwaukee. 1918. $1.00.

"Tommy demands of the Church a religion marked by manliness, honesty, consistency of life, reality and simplicity, though Tommy's own religion is vague. The religion of Tommy is the religion of the average man, and the Church is suspect—" These fifteen essays and addresses by the dean of Trinity, Cleveland, take their title from the initial essay. Dr. Almon Abbott describes his visits to five camps in England and gives some impressions of the Tommy in the trenches. "The Church and the Reconstruction Period," "The Cloud of War and the Silver Lining," and "Faith and the War" are particularly replete with suggestive comment and indicate sharply that the Church is already adjusting herself to the new age, but like many other writers the author does not press upon Tommy any large requirements for readjustment. This may be because he so fully appreciates our obligations to Tommy and the fact that Tommy is himself in transition. The publisher announces the essays as "pungent." They are. They carry the atmosphere of Tommy and the war; they provoke thought.

A Torpedoed Transport

THE ODYSSEY OF A TORPEDOED TRANSPORT. By Y. Translated from the French by Grace Fallon Norton. June, 1918. Houghton Mifflin Company. $1.25.

There is something pathetic as well as fascinating and touchingly human in the intimate, friendly letters of this undiscovered Frenchman, who never expected they would be published and whose unknown grave, with that of fellow officers and crew, is somewhere in the great deep. His vessel was the victim of the sea vipers his captain had dodged for months. She went down somewhere on the north Atlantic coast of Europe, having no wireless, for which they had pleaded so often, to make one sign of her position or of her danger.

The French steamer Pamir had done a wonderful bit for so small a ship. In thirty months, (she was torpedoed about February, 1917), she had travelled a distance equal to a tour of the globe $3\frac{1}{2}$ times. She had carried nearly a hundred million tons of merchandise, an indirect tribute to the work done by the merchant marine in the early stages of the conflict. She had gone from Spain to Africa, to Greece, to Italy, to Egypt, to Archangel, to New York, to Baltimore, and to Norway—an alluring list! From every port Y wrote to his friend, an officer in the French navy, of things he saw and heard, of events, some the authorities would not acknowledge worthy of notice, to the despair of Fourgues, his beloved captain, in whom he saw so much to be admired and to give heed.

Sometimes Y was too plain spoken for the censor. As it was, when his naval friend sent the letters to the Revue de Paris, after Y was lost, they caused no little sensation among the politicians and arm chair strategists. The appearance of the letters in book form startled the French public and it became "the most important war book of 1917" winning the Prix Femina.

It is most certainly one of the war books to be read. One reading will not suffice to glean all the splendid touches of virile manhood and courage unconsciously depicted in these letters—nor yet the disclosures so naively made, undoubtedly to the disgust of the owner who, it is hinted was paid many times the worth of the hulk, the Pamir evidently was, from the very beginning of her travels. The wholesome yet undesigned unfolding of Y's own love story, his engagement, hurried marriage, the anticipated child, whom he never saw, have an added charm to the letters and better than fiction. It is a book Y might well have been proud of had he lived to see it in print. The translator did a good piece of work, though she evidently had an unusual opportunity in the well expressed language of a born letter writer, who misses nothing in the human drama played upon a stage as varied as a man dare wish to see. This Odyssey is a notable book.

Chartered by the State of New York in 1842, was preceded by a stock company of a similar name. The latter company was liquidated and part of its capital, to the extent of $100,000, was used, with consent of the stockholders, by the Atlantic Mutual Insurance Company and repaid with a bonus and interest at the expiration of two years.

During its existence the company has insured property to the value of $31,728,420,551.06. Received premiums thereon to the extent of $319,356,442.45. Paid losses during that period $157,034,362.32. Issued certificates of profits to dealers $100,230,470.00. Of which there have been redeemed $94,086,050.00. Leaving outstanding at present time $6,144,420.00. Interest paid on certificates amounts to $24,838,024.95. On December 31, 1918, the assets of the company amounted to $16,823,491.34.

The profits of the company revert to the assured and are divided annually upon the premiums terminated during the year, thereby reducing the cost of insurance.

For such dividends, certificates are issued subject to dividends of interest until ordered to be redeemed, in accordance with the charter.

very frankly states the lessons that Germany must learn from this world war.

He shows that Germany so far has learned nothing and forgotten nothing, and that the Allies have still a great deal to do if they mean to teach her a lesson.

The book is a glorification of war, peace is a dream and not even a beautiful dream; Germany must at once learn the lesson of this war so that she may at once prepare for another war.

The book shows us an utterly unrepentant Germany, still posing as the injured up-holder of morality whose righteous existence is threatened by predatory Powers.

"In the case of the Central Powers, that lofty moral strength, arising from the sense of righteous self-defence in a way which had been thrust upon them, showed its superiority to the zeal which a commercial and predatory war could kindle in our enemies."

This book ought to be widely read, though the reading of it provokes to wrath, for it shows the determination of our enemy to rule the world, and impose its standards of life upon subject powers, if not in this war, then in another and greater war for which Germany will at once prepare herself. For the Days of Peace

THE EDGE OF THE QUICKSANDS. By D. Thomas Curtin. Doran and Company. New York. 1918. $1.50.

THE IMMEDIATE CAUSES OF THE GREAT WAR. By Oliver Perry Chitwood. Thomas Crowell Company. New York. 1918.

These two books did not fall into the basement on the eleventh day of November. They are destined to remain among the few war books that will be appreciated most in the more thoughtful days of peace.

As may be surmised from the title, Mr. Curtin writes with imagination. He uses two instruments, one an historical telescope and the other a political microscope and for each he has two lenses. He has by inheritance the European point of view and by acquirement, the American point of view. He scrutinizes the differences between the civilization of the German peoples and ours and points out the dangers to which the Germans have been tending for some time and gives a detailed analysis of the quicksands that the German Empire that was, is now drowned in. Incidentally, perhaps we should say, deliberately, he mentions some dangerous deposits of quicksands in our own pathway. Mr. Curtin is very thorough going and his facts are both illuminative and valuable in showing just who we are dealing with.

Dr. Chitwood, who is professor of European History in the University of West Virginia, has revised his book, thus showing his wisdom and conscientious care to do his work with religious exactness and with full justice to the facts. In sixteen chapters filled with documentary evidence he discusses with considerable clarity the confusion of elements that may be classed as indirect causes of the war, friction between rivals, and America's entrance into the war, but the main feature of his book brings out the details of the relation of the various governments to the immediate causes of the war. Dr. Chitwood has placed teachers of history under grateful obligations for his painstaking analysis of the many official documents and gray and green and orange and red books that have been issued. An exhaustive index makes this study doubly serviceable. A. L. M.

War Time Heroes

THE POST OF HONOR. By Richard Wilson. E. P. Dutton and Company. New York. 1918. $1.25.

NAVAL HEROES OF TODAY. By Francis A. Collins. The Century Company. New York. 1918. $1.50.

That red-blooded men, deeply stirred by the call of duty in our present conflict, are closely akin, no matter from what country they come, is most obviously apparent in these two books. The first is a collection of simply told stories from English sources, the records of daring deeds done by men of the British Empire from the Channel to the Dardanelles. They all won the V. C., when answering the call to stand at some post of danger which they found, unconsciously, to be the "post of honor." The fifty tales gathered together by Mr. Collins bear testimony that the American navy is living up to the very best in our own traditions.

The period has been brief since our entrance into the Great War, but whether guarding the sea lanes or with the merchant fleet, on air scout duty or in home waters, or with the marines at Chateau Thierry, the stirring deeds, hardships and sacrifices of the naval forces will remain forever as bright a spot in our history as any. This war with Germany has produced the most thrilling of adventures for those who have to be at sea, and a brand of courage has been called for which has made the tales of fiction seem insipid and tame. Both of these collections will have a place among the records of actual achievement by which and with which our youth will hereafter be stirred to regard the hard and difficult things "posts of honor." Well illustrated and entertainingly written, either book will make good reading for boys of the adolescent age. They will serve splendidly as gifts. R. P. K.

OUT TO WIN. By Lieutenant Coningsby Dawson. John Lane Company. New York. 1918. $1.25.

Altogether as good as and a little better than Carry On is this new book of Lieutenant Dawson. Commissioned by the British Government to visit the American army in France it becomes an account of the actual carrying out of America's program there. But it is really something more than that. It is a plea for a closer friendship between England and the United States; it is a desire that the best of both countries shall be seen by each; it is an interpretation of the motives, the manner of their expression and the actual accomplishment of America's magnanimity in plunging as she did into the conflict. He reaches certain conclusions as a result of his observation of events on both sides of the Atlantic, in which he has been an active participant, and he is led to declare that nothing so expresses the cold anger of the American fighting man as his slogan "We've got four years to do this job." The businesslike relentlessness of every kind of preparation is an exact measure of the American attitude toward the war. To the British it may appear as a sport; to the Frenchman as a martyrdom, but to the American it is "a job."

No more impressive quotation could be given to show why the Allies are "out to win" than that of a remark attributed to a British officer. "The British, French and Americans are the three great promise-keeping nations. For the first time in history we're standing together. We're promise keepers banded together against the falsehood of Germany. It isn't likely that we shall start to tell lies to one another."

APPEAL

FOR THE ENDOWMENT FUND OF "OLD POHICK" THE PARISH CHURCH OF MOUNT VERNON

Again, another year has rolled around and the approach of Washington's Birthday brings no other call to the friends of Pohick Church to help the good work of completing the Endowment Fund, which should be at least $50,000.00 for establishing this historic Church on a permanent foundation. Besides special contributions from those who may be interested in what our Presiding Bishop has called a "worthy appeal," it is hoped that collections will be taken up in as many churches as possible on Sunday, the 23rd of February, the day following Washington's Birthday. This has been recommended by our Presiding Bishop and other Bishops and Clergy of our Church in previous years. We trust that as the days of war are passed, this appeal may again receive a wider hearing.

Please make cheques to the order of the Pohick Church Endowment Fund and remit to Burke and Herbert, Bankers, Alexandria, Va., or to the Rev. Saml. A. Wallis, D.D., Chairman of the Committee.

MINUTE

Minute adopted at a meeting of the Board of Managers of the Orphans' Home and Asylum of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the City of New York, held February 3rd, 1919.

In announcing the death of the REVEREND ROBERT ROANE CLAIBORNE, for the last nine years Superintendent of the Orphans' Home and Asylum, which took place on December 24, 1918, the Board of Managers desire to place on record their sense of the valuable services which Mr. Claiborne rendered to the institution both by his distinguished executive ability and by his gifts of kindly personality which caused the children to look upon him primarily as a friend. His devotion was unwearied and extended to the minutest details; the medical history of the Home during his incumbency is unmatched and its atmosphere was such as to favor the unrepressed development of each childish nature. Under Mr. Claiborne the Home justified its name and entirely lacked the institutional stamp.

The Managers greatly regret Mr. Claiborne's untimely death and desire to extend to his wife and children the heartfelt sympathy with them in their affliction, and direct that a copy of this minute be sent to Mrs. Claiborne and also that it be printed in THE CHURCHMAN.

A CHAPLAIN'S EXPERIENCES IN CUBA—III

By the Rev. E. Clowes Chorley, D.D.

ANYTHING more unlike the traditional Christmas could not well be imagined. After experiencing it I confess to a good deal of sympathy with the marine from Minnesota who, with a far away look in his eyes, said, "It isn't much like Christmas, is it, Sir?" In truth it was not. Instead of the snow the mountains and the valleys were clad in glorious green; instead of the frosty twang of the air the soft tropical breezes induced what the men down here dub "bunk-fatigue"—an afternoon sleep. But we tried our best to make it seem like Christmas. The search for evergreens in the jungle resulted only in the getting of wonderful palm branches such as they strewed in the way of the Master in the streets of Jerusalem, and our Christmas tree for the recreation hall would not have passed muster at home.

For the chaplain the octave had at least the merit of being busy and varied. I had heard much of the gorgeous ritual and stately music of the midnight Mass in the Roman Church on Christmas Eve, and as our regimental band had engaged to play at such a service, I determined to go with the men. We left camp in a huge motor truck half an hour before midnight. The streets of Santiago are full of what would be called in France shell-holes, and any

How to write, what to write, and where to sell.

Dr. Esenwein

Cultivate your mind. Develop your literary gifts. Master the art of self-expression. Make your spare time profitable. Turn your ideas into dollars.

Courses in Short-Story Writing, Versification, Journalism, Play Writing, Photoplay Writing, etc., taught personally by Dr. J. Berg Esenwein, for many years editor of Lippincott's Magazine, and a staff of literary experts. Constructive criticism. Frank, honest, helpful advice. Real teaching.

One pupil has received over $5,000 for stories and articles written mostly in spare time—"pay work," he calls it. Another pupil received over $1,000 before completing her first course. Another, a busy wife and mother, is averaging over $75 a week from photoplay writing alone.

There is no other institution or agency doing so much for writers, young or old. The universities recognize this, for over one hundred members of the English faculties of higher institutions are studying in our Literary Department. The editors recognize it, for they are constantly recommending our courses.

We publish The Writer's Library. We also publish The Writer's Monthly, especially valuable for its full reports of the literary market. Besides our teaching service, we offer a manuscript criticism service.

motor trip is an adventure. To my disappointment the venerable cathedral was shrouded in darkness and the service was held in the large open courtyard of a college. The congregation numbered about six hundred—mostly women and girls—and here and there a khaki-clad marine who in camp parlance had "all night liberty." The music, led by an un-vested choir of boys with shrill voices, was distinctly disappointing. The celebrant was the Archbishop of Cuba, whose scarlet vestments set off a crown of silver hair. The good prelate preached what seemed to be an excellent sermon accompanied by a wealth of gesture—but it was in Spanish, and the congregation was far from attentive.

Two o'clock found us back in camp, and just two hours later the guard roused me from sleep for at five I was due to preach the Christmas sermon at our chapel of Santa Maria in Santiago. That early morning service has become a sacred institution with the Jamaicans who compose our mission congregation. To one who had just attended a midnight Mass the quiet and fine restraint of our own service was singularly refreshing. We began with the strains of that old hymn of the Nativity,

"Christians, awake, salute the happy morn Whereon the Saviour of mankind was born," and then proceeded directly to the Communion Office. The tiny altar was a blaze of light and ere the sun arose on the horizon thirty of the faithful showed forth their Lord's death till He come.

A hasty cup of coffee and we were once more on our way back to the camp for our own Communion service at seven. The portable altar, provided by the War Commission, had arrived, and was used for the first time. It certainly meets a felt need and adds not a little dignity to our services. We were few in number, ten—and we knelt on a bare wooden floor; memories were poignant. Equally helpful was the later service with its Christmas hymns and real Christmas carols sung by our double quartette. That service revealed once again the pathos of life in the tropics. In Santiago, as in other towns in Cuba, there is an English speaking colony deprived from force of circumstances of the privilege of worship. Race feeling prevents their joining the Jamaicans in their services and there is no provision for the whites. Hence the undoubted fact of the tendency to drift spiritually. It is a common saying here that the English and the Americans leave their religion on the other side of the Gulf, and perhaps they are more to be pitied than blamed. Anyway, we were glad to welcome some of them to our camp service, and their appreciation of the rare privilege of making their Communion with their own kind was very marked.

I must pass over the Christmas dinner where, by the way, we had real turkeys, and say a word about the entertainment in the evening. Our camp social center is the recreation hall. Unfortunately the building is not large enough to hold the men on special occasions, and on Christmas night not only was every corner jammed but there were almost as many outside peering through the wire screens which take the place of windows. At the outset one of the marines, disguised as Father Christmas, distributed American cigarettes to the crowd. The Cuban members of the Red Cross had spent days in making candy and putting up presents for the men, and as they passed through the hall garbed in Red Cross costumes and gave out the presents they were wildly cheered. After the entertainment proper some bold spirit suggested an informal dance. Our popular colonel not only consented but he gave us till twelve o'clock for "taps," and forever won the hearts of his men by making the next day a holiday. A hasty message was sent for the regimental band and for two hours the men gave themselves up to pure enjoyment. Many of those men had not danced with a girl for many moons; it made Christmas a red-letter day.

One of my privileges in being in Cuba is the opportunity to see something of our splendid missionary work and to make the acquaintance of the splendid missionaries who are laboring under the sympathetic and inspiring leadership of Bishop Hulse. Thanks to the generosity of a Philadelphia family we have a really worthy church building, designed by Ralph Adams Cram, in Guantanamo. The missionary, the Rev. William Watson, is a man with a rare combination of gifts. A residence of thirteen years in Mexico and Cuba has given him an enviable knowledge of both the Spanish mind and speech, and he is recognized as a force to be reckoned with. In the recent epidemic of influenza which, owing to the notorious unsanitary conditions, devastated Guantanamo like a plague, Mr. Watson acted as assistant to the military and naval doctors who were called in from our camp and naval station, and himself attended over one thousand cases. It was my privilege to preach for Mr. Watson on the evening of Sunday, and it was an experience long to be remembered. Down here in the heart of eastern Cuba was a stately church furnished with fine restraint and filled with a reverent congregation composed of people whose faces varied in color from ebony to near white. But the most astonishing feature was the music. Clad in a pure white cassock and surplice Mr. Watson presided at his own American organ and directed Gregorian chants sung in a way which would do credit to the best choir in the United States, and the congregation joined in most heartily. The colored people love ritual and at Christmas and Easter they are gratified to the full. After Evening Prayer Mr. Watson donned a most gorgeous cope, bought in a Mexican pawnshop and, bearing lighted candles, we passed through the sacristy into the street and into the main entrance to the church to the triumphant strains of

"O come all ye faithful, Joyful and triumphant."

Conspicuous in the congregation were the pupils of the mission school, which is all too inadequately housed in a building

I have bought and read with great care and interest and approval Dean Hodges' HOW TO KNOW THE BIBLE. I can unhesitatingly recommend the book as a most helpful one for giving both teachers and students a summary of the entire contents of the Bible.

BOYD VINCENT, D. D., Bishop of Southern Ohio.

How to Know the Bible

By GEORGE HODGES
Dean of the Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, Mass.

More than a commentary, HOW TO KNOW THE BIBLE is a guide to intelligent reading and a stimulus to a daily study of the scripture. By its clearing up of difficult passages in the Bible it increases faith in this book of books.

In Dean Hodges' HOW TO KNOW THE BIBLE the results of scholarly research and the consensus of reverent scholarly judgment are embodied, and are set forth by it in a very helpful way.

DANIEL S. TUTTLE, D. D.,
Bishop of Missouri.

A book which can revive a general interest in the Bible is the special need of our day. Dr. George Hodges' book on "HOW TO KNOW THE BIBLE" fills that need. Everyone who reads it will yearn to place it in every home in the world.

THE writers for the Church Music number are churchmen qualified to speak upon the subject of church worship. FATHER OFFICER writes from an abundant experience. He is a technically trained musician; he has studied plainsong in Oxford; has preached at many Lenten noonday services and at Y. M. C. A. meetings in many of our cities and has held missions in parishes of every type of churchmanship. The Ven. J. H. GREIG, B.D., the Archdeacon of Worcester, England, is known to many of us as the chaplain who accompanied Dr. Yeatman-Biggs, then Bishop of Worcester and now Bishop of Coventry, to the General Convention in St. Louis in 1916. Archdeacon Greig is spending two months in the United States as the guest of the Bishops of Washington and Western Massachusetts and of Dean Rousmaniere and Dr. Manning. WILLIAM B. DAVIS, Ph.B., is instructor in church music and the use of the voice in Berkeley Divinity School. The Rev. BERNARD IDDINGS BELL, civilian chaplain at the Great Lakes Naval Training Station, is well known to CHURCHMAN readers. The Rev. CHARLES WINFRED DOUGLAS is a member of the Joint Committee on Revision of the Hymnal. He is an honorary canon of the cathedral of Fond Du Lac and is choir-master of the Community of St. Mary, Peekskill, New York. HUGH A. MAC-KINNON, who is the music reviewer of THE CHURCHMAN, is the organist of Grace Church, Utica, New York.

CHURCH MUSIC

THE CHURCHMAN presents to its readers in this issue some interesting articles dealing with the question of church music. The revised hymnal is now being introduced into the churches. It is therefore an appropriate time to re-examine the standards and purposes which dominate the musical parts of our services. There is little general agreement in our Church on the subject of church music. What people like usually controls the use. By "people" is meant in some parishes the choir-master; in others it means the choir-master and rector and music committee. Again, in other parishes the people means those whose criticism and wishes get conveyed to the rector or choir-master. In very few parishes is there any evidence that an intelligent theory of worship is in control of the music. This is entirely natural under existing circumstances, for there is no generally accepted theory of worship in the Episcopal Church. In spite of our heritage, grounded in a knowledge of human nature, we pay about as little attention to the psychology of worship as if we had never heard that psychology mattered. The dull monotony of our Lent services show how lean in imagination the Church as a whole is. Only a few churches in the land have discovered that people like to sing a litany—some of the litanies in the hymnal. In a good many parishes the congregation seldom are permitted to say even the litany provided in the Prayer Book. The operatic standard of service has carried the day in most of the churches which can afford to pay the price of that abomination. We hope that our readers will weigh what some of the writers in this number of THE CHURCHMAN have said upon the subject.

The introduction of the new hymnal at the beginning of Lent ought to encourage an emphasis this Lent upon congregational singing. If the present hymnal and the use to which the clergy put it do not encourage congregational singing, the effort of the revision committee will have borne little fruit. But no hymnal, even the best that the wit of man can devise, can make people worship God in song. Somebody who directs the services will have to make up his mind what worship is. In the Episcopal Church it has grown more and more to be defined as "listening."

THE DRAFT OF THE LEAGUE

A DRAFT of the League of Nations to be amended, accepted or rejected is now before the world. We must frankly admit discouragement, not because of any imperfection in the document which lies before us, but because as we peruse its twenty-six articles in subconscious awareness of what has made wars in the past, we realize how ambitious a dream it was to suppose that any document can make peaceful, Christian nations out of competing commercial units. Nearly every article of this magna charta can be reduced to impotency by any group of signatories when the interest of their sovereign states would seem to demand adhesion to the unwritten law of self-preservation. The battle of Christianity is not so easily won as we had thought.

We have not of late shared the roseate hopes of the League of Nations which the foreign dispatches reporting the steady progress of Mr. Wilson's triumph seemed to indicate. To anyone except the foreign correspondents and the writers of headlines in our American press, it was becoming clearer day by day that the League of Nations was losing out in Paris. It was losing out not from lack of statesmanship, but from the leanness of Christian impulse required to make any league effective. A league of nations we shall have. In aspiration it will mark a real advance over previous covenants of its kind. It will register that high and Christian devotion to peace shared by enlightened opinion throughout the world. But the draft of a league of nations which Mr. Wilson is bringing to this country for discussion and approval will not, we believe, be an effective instrument for maintaining peace. No nation, not even America, believes that it will. It cannot and ought not to supplant, as things are, treaties of alliance among European nations for the protection of their mutual interests. It cannot and ought not to prevent France from undertaking any means at her disposal for the protection of her frontiers and the guarding of her future against any menace to her national existence. While nations are permitted to make alliances among themselves, while they are permitted to arm for their own defense, no league of nations can prevent war.

In the first place the plan which Mr. Wilson reports is not a league of nations. It is precisely the sort of league which he in his Manchester speech said America would not enter. It is a European alliance which America is now bidden to join, one which is likely at any time to be checkmated in its purpose by another alliance in eastern Europe. As such, it places upon America certain responsibilities which she dare not in self-interest assume. Unless she is willing to assume such responsibilities she is guilty of impertinence and presumption in daring to suggest that others accept burdens which she evades. France in spite of her unlovely diplomatic attitude since the armistice is deserving of much sympathy. If France is to limit her sovereignty and to entrust her safety to a league of nations, Mr. Clemenceau cannot be greatly blamed for demanding a substantial guarantee against the possibility of German aggression. Mr. Wilson cannot promise that an American army will rush to the spot should German legions again cross the borders of France. He cannot promise that it would not take his successor quite as long to spring to the defense of freedom as it did the present administration. Mr. Clemenceau's irony in his recent interview did not hit wide of the mark. These are life and death matters to France. They are not life and death matters to America. We are therefore more sympathetic with the earthy statesmanship of Mr. Clemenceau than he would seem to deserve.

While the treaty of peace waits upon the League of Nations the seeds of a hundred wars are springing to life on the eastern borders of Europe. Poland, the new Slovak nation with its precarious future; the German republic, anarchic Russia—as France contemplates these storm clouds on her horizon, is it strange that she should view with impatience the postponement of peace and the reorganization of Europe? When Mr. Wilson pressed the self-determination of peoples, a league to enforce peace was burdened with an almost superhuman task. That principle has performed a grave disservice to the cause of peace; for with that heady doctrine abroad in the world, war is made the daily aspiration of various units of population combined into patchwork nationalities. Will America be willing to enter this tangled zone of enmities?

The Christian Church is in eager sympathy with the aspiration of every covenant which aims to abolish war; but the Church in its eagerness to encompass a great end must scan critically the instrumentality by which statesmen propose to further the cause of peace.

There is a broad distinction between an object to be attained and the means devised to attain it. Men of good will everywhere recognize the transcendent value of peace. A war-weary world craves it above anything else. Some kind of covenant between nations must be devised to register this craving and spiritual hope. But it does not follow that Christian people are bound to approve the plan for a league of nations which is being submitted to the Peace Conference. Criticism and consideration may demonstrate its superiority to any other plan that can at present be devised. On the other hand, seeds of mischief may be detected in it. A careful study of this document is the duty of our statesmen and the privilege of our citizens. It is not for the religious journals of the United States to discourage honest criticism and to acclaim blindly any plan devised to maintain peace. An attempt on the part of any body of citizens to coerce those with whom in this country the responsibility finally rests into an acceptance of this particular plan without due study and a careful scrutiny of its provisions, would ultimately injure the cause of peace. Whoever should try to suppress reasonable criticism of the methods devised for the furtherance of this great cause will do an ill service to his country and to the cause of peace throughout the world.

THE LOWELL CENTENARY

IT is fitting that America should celebrate the centenary of James Russell Lowell. It is gratifying that Canada and England propose to join with the country of Lowell's birth in doing honor to the poet-statesman whose name means much to the whole English-speaking world. After four years of the nightmare of war, it is refreshing to turn back to the golden age of New England and again enter into commerce with the spirits of the men who brought such distinction to American life. It is unsafe to ask what Lowell would think of his country and countrymen today. Lowell toward the end of his life shared the mood of men like Godkin and Norton. They were anxious about the future. America had always been to them a kind of pan-New England and they never quite rose or sank to the melting-pot definition of the western democracy.

It is true that Lowell accepted the missionary idea of democracy, but he did not face its implications. He felt the thrill of America's great mission to humanity; but he hoped, we suspect, that conversion to the American ideal would transform our cities and villages into a greater Cambridge. We doubt if he had the courage to release the America that he loved into the uncertain keeping of "a thing in the making." It was natural, therefore, that he should have spent the years of his life after his return from England in somewhat gloomy forebodings about his country. The nineties of the last century were truly lean and sordid years. Business honor had touched its lowest depths. The Churches were without a gospel. Patriotism was a hollow word. Steadily from the end of the Civil War, America had been sinking lower and lower into philistinism.

Those were indeed bitter days for men who had fought as Lowell fought for high definitions of national honor. It required a greater buoyancy than his to face these unlovely facts of life and say "this, too, in all its ugliness is America in the making; she will find her way out." Whitman saw it. Lowell was too much a child of New England fully to accept without despair the penalty of democracy. What would he think today? The unsightly apartment houses smothering his own beloved Elmwood would prepare him for the spiritual changes which even these few years since his death have worked. Whatever America is today, it is not precisely the America that the Puritan fathers took infinite pains to plant in an unfriendly wilderness. We know of no more striking symbol of the change in America's spiritual climate than the fact that Edgar Lee Masters is to be one of the speakers at the Lowell Centenary celebration in New York. How Lowell would have wriggled in his chair thirty years ago over Spoon River gossip! But Mr. Masters will soon be thought a little straight-laced and old-fashioned. Things, truly, are moving.

We may, perhaps, be pardoned for tying a moral up to the Lowell Centenary. For better or for worse, America's destiny was not entrusted to New England, to Virginia or to New York. Its future lies seeded in the soil of a hundred lands across the seas. Slovak and Russian, we hate to admit the risk but we must, are standing godfather to America as truly as the colonial fathers of the seventeenth century. That is what our "ideal" let us in for. We have put a good deal of oratory and verse into the sublimity of that thought. We had not always, while we sang its beauty, reckoned its price. America is likely to become a hundred things we never dreamed it could become; things that might make us shudder now, could be draw aside the curtain and take a look. But it can become something more beautiful than any dream of Lowell's, if we who have the Christian heritage are true. Never has it been clearer to thoughtful men than it is today that there is no other name under heaven that can save us than the name of Christ. All the old traditions have gone. Perhaps they were too narrow to guide the spacious thing God intended America to be. But unless the law of Christ becomes more and more the new tradition, few of us would have courage to face the future. America's destiny is in the keeping today not of those who would claim it for any dear provincial ideal. It is in the keeping of the Church of Christ. The world today is thrilled with a mighty hope; but it is also depressed with an awful fear. The selfishness of that world from which we are just emerging today was, at least, curbed and disciplined by intelligent self-interest. But pure democracy can exist without any discipline whatever. If "the will to get," self-assertive groups, struggling for the lion's share, is to dominate the new democracy, we should rather, far, live under an autocracy, for its selfishness would at least take counsel of worldly prudence. There is a democracy better than any Lowell dreamed of. It is that democracy ever in the making, whose law the citizen is sincerely willing to test by the spirit of Christ. Such a country will belong by inheritance to the children of men, for the Son of Man will be its spiritual father.

THE WEEK

Chronicle and Comment on Current Events

BISHOP TALBOT HONORED

THE Ad Interim Committee of the Conference on Organic Union met last week in Philadelphia and appointed a nominating committee to name the various working committees. Bishop Talbot was unanimously elected chairman on Plans and Scope of the Movement on Organic Union. Bishop Talbot's committee is to meet March 6.

It is significant that the representatives of seven different communions should have chosen a bishop of our Church to head the most important committee of the whole group. Again, forgetful of past snubs and ungraciousness, our sister Churches turn to the Episcopal Church for leadership. Such action is indicative of the good temper of the men who came together in December in response to the call of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church. It is also a signal honor to Bishop Talbot.

A PROFITABLE EVENING

IT would measurably assist the introduction of the new hymnal into our churches if every church club could have such an evening as that recently devoted to the hymnal by the New York Church Club. The club met in the Church Club rooms after dinner. A member of the revision committee first gave an extended history of the revision movement. He explained the method and work of the committee, why certain hymns had been dropped and others added. He showed clearly how painstaking and conscientious the committee were in the handling of their difficult task. After this preliminary narrative, which brought the audience into complete sympathy with the aims and desires of the committee, the new hymnal was brought forth and one of New York's distinguished organists, with a quartette, gave a demonstration of the changes. The new hymns were sung, some to the new, some to the old tunes. The audience was told precisely why the new tune fitted the words better than the old tune. Sometimes the audience agreed with the committee; sometimes, as shown by the vigorous hand-clapping when the old tune was sung, the audience preferred the old tune. At any rate, this method of presenting the hymnal was educative. It was a most profitable evening. Incidentally, as a by-product of the meeting, it was again demonstrated, quite without intent, that people love to sing and to hear hymns sung. We hope every church club in America will set aside during Lent an evening for the discussion of the church hymnal. Would it not be profitable also for rectors to have during Lent special song services when the new tunes may be learned and something said about the hymns recently admitted to the hymnal?

THE HERRON APPOINTMENT

MOST Americans who know anything about Mr. Herron's record will regret his appointment by the Administration to bear the credentials of the United States Government to the Russian conference at Prinkipo. Whoever made this appointment might have done better. It would have been better to have done worse as regards familiarity with Russian liberalism and have appointed a man familiar with American standards of decency. Mr. Herron may have invaluable fitness for the post but most Americans still have an abhorrence of his theories and practice in regard to the marriage relation. In dealing with Russian liberals, it may be necessary to select as mediators men who share their political ideas. It is not necessary to choose men who share their moral practices. We read that the Presbyterian Union of Newark has adopted resolutions protesting against the appointment of George D. Herron as a representative of the United States to confer with the Bolsheviks. The resolution condemns Herron as a man who has flagrantly violated the laws of God and man and they call upon President Wilson to revoke his appointment. They go into past history and assert that Mr. Herron endeavored at one time to establish a free love colony at Metuchen, New Jersey.

Time wasted! we warn the Newark protestants. Mr. Herron's appointment will not be revoked. What is the marriage vow among the makers of milleniums?

COURT-MARTIAL REFORM

IT is well that the shocking revelations of "army justice" came from a West Pointer. A civilian's testimony would have been discounted. But it is Brig.-Gen. Samuel T. Ansell who tells us that "the sentences imposed for slight offenses have shocked every sense of justice." In some American prison a boy is serving a forty years' sentence, reduced by the clemency of the colonel to ten years, for insubordination. A young soldier who without leave went home to a sick wife is serving a fifteen years' sentence. A boy who deserted from the army and remained for five months with his dying father was sentenced to death.

There is not an army in the world that is not Prussian in its spirit of discipline. Cruelty is an inevitable accompaniment of the absolutism which obtains in the army. The point for the Government to decide is whether there is to be any check put upon this absolutism. The immediate duty of those vested with the authority to act is to undertake a thorough investigation of the military prisons to ascertain how many boys are serving sentences which "shock every sense of justice." The contention of Dr. Eliot that the American army must become democratic seems wise. It has been frequently whispered that West Point is mediaeval.

SATURDAY NIGHT SERMON

BY THE REV. GEORGE THOMAS DOWLING, D.D.

Twice One Are Ten

How should one chase a thousand and two put ten thousand to flight?—Deuteronomy XXXII—30.

THAT seems strange, that twice one make ten; but it is true. When any man is engaged in a good cause, and he feels his heart buckled to the heart of another inspired with the same purpose, his strength increases five fold. Where one such may "chase a thousand," two, knit together, will chase, not one thousand but "ten thousand."

Illustrations of this multiply in the Bible and out of it. "Two are better than one; because they have a good reward for their labor. For if they fall, the one will lift up his fellow: but woe to him that is alone when he falleth; for he hath not another to help him up." This is what Jesus meant when He sent out His disciples, not one by one, but as we are told, "two by two." This was what He meant when He said, "If two of you shall agree on earth as touching anything that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven."

If you would live a Christian life the first thing for you to do, is to unite yourself to Jesus Christ; let Him be your Master; and the next thing for you to do almost equally important, is to unite yourself to Jesus Christ's friends; let them be your friends.

Frequently, that is one of the prime reasons for going to church. Our added strength comes not simply in what we receive from the chancel, but in what we receive from one another, down there in the pew. You cannot sit beside a good man, whom you know in your heart is seeking to be like Jesus Christ, without becoming better than you were. Thus there is a profound psychological reason in the exhortation of the apostle to "forsake not the assembling of yourselves together."

In my early manhood one of the most widely read volumes was Letters to the Joneses by Timothy Titcomb, the nom de plume of J. G. Holland. Many of the older readers of this sermon will doubtless recall them. "Life nearly always," he says, "follows the current of its friendships. If a man finds his most congenial companionship among those who are irreligious, either negatively or positively, he shows just what and where his heart is. Like seeks and sympathizes with like." Mr. Holland was not a "mollycoddle." He was one of our best known writers, a famous lecturer and the editor of the Springfield Republican. But he was a man who, like his Master, "knew what was in men"; and he knew that "a threefold cord is not quickly broken."

And not only do we need people, but, when their moral purpose is one, all kinds of people. The ideal church is not a "poor church" nor is it a "rich church" but the Lord's church, where "the rich and the poor meet together remembering that the Lord is the Maker of them all." In fact that should be one of its chief purposes: to enable us to forget our differences.

Society cuts itself in layers, horizontally; and up here are the "upper classes," the educated, the privileged and the refined; and down there the "submerged" or partly "submerged." But Jesus Christ is the great humanizer, and with the sword of the Spirit He comes, and cuts those layers, not horizontally but perpendicularly, that each may become a part of all and all a part of each; or, to use that wonderful figure of the apostle, we are all "one Body."; and the eye cannot say to the hand, I have no need of thee because thou art not the eye; and the hand cannot say to the foot, I have no need of thee because thou art not the hand; but we are all one body, with Jesus Christ the head, and when one member suffers all the members suffer with it. That is the Gospel teaching, and nothing else is.

And so you remember when Jesus met Saul on his way to Damascus, He did not say "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou my poor disciples down there in Damascus?" No! For when Saul trampled on the foot, the head felt it, and He cried, "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou ME?"

How absolutely little and insignificant, beside such a life, appears that of the man or woman who, bearing Christ's name, seeks to introduce into Christ's house, the petty and arbitrary distinctions which so frequently divide the children of the same Father! That which causes the name of Theodore Roosevelt to be so revered, is because, whether a man were a cow-boy or a king, he never asked, with the sinister whisper of a Junker aristocracy, "Where did you come from?" but "Where are you going?" If two are to chase ten thousand, you and the other man must be alike in character, and that character the character of Christ, whether alike in clothes or not. What does that matter?

Thus it is in God's house, we learn what is the real aristocracy, which by its very derivation means the rule of the best. Who are the best? He who hath turned the world upside down, because the world was wrong side up, has both told us and shown us. In Jesus' heraldry, he is the best, who "serveth" best. They are his own words, "I am among you as one that serveth."

It is in his house we learn that whatever a man may have, whether genius or wealth or education, or what-not, he who looks upon these things, not as his prerogative, but as his responsibility—then, in going down, to help the lowest and the weakest, he is going up, for he is treading in the footsteps of Him who is the King of all kings and the Prince of all princes.

Ah, one of the grandest episodes in the history of that strange Being who walked the earth two thousand years ago, is when, in that upper room in Jerusalem, just before He went forth to die in that supreme moment, "knowing that all power in heaven and earth was his," He—what? called down vengeance upon his enemies? no, not that; summoned ten legions of angels to do his bidding? no, not that. He took a towel and girded Himself, and stooped and washed the disciples' feet, the work of the most menial slave, and said, "He who would be greatest among you let him be servant of all." Let such be our spirit; then indeed one shall chase a thousand and two put ten thousand to flight.

A PRAYER FOR PEACE

OH God of nations, Who through Thy prophets of old hast foretold a day when the armaments of war shall be beaten into the implements of peace, hasten, we beseech Thee, the fulfilment of this Thy most sure promise. Quell the haughty cries of the nations. Scatter the peoples that delight in war, and speedily bring us out of our present confusion into the order and righteousness of Thy Kingdom, through Jesus Christ, the Prince of Peace, our Saviour. Amen.

LENT SERVICES

BY THE REV. HARVEY OFFICER, O.H.C.

THREE years ago, when I was in Denver, Dean Hart told me a story which, I am sure, he will let me repeat. Preaching one Sunday in his cathedral, he realized that among his hearers was the popular evangelist who had been conducting a series of revival meetings in Denver. After the service the evangelist spoke to the preacher in warm appreciation of his words. "It was a fine sermon," he said, "but why didn't you do something with it?" "What do you mean," asked the dean. "Why, you stirred us all by your appeal, and then gave us nothing to do."

To the evangelistic mind it seemed as if the sermon had been wasted; as if St. Peter, having finished his address on the Day of Pentecost with the passionate words which touched men's hearts, had replied to the earnest question, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" by giving out a recessional psalm and dismissing the crowd with his blessing. Of course we must discount the criticism in a measure, remembering that there is a place for the sermon of quiet instruction and edification, as well as for the address that seeks to rouse and convert. Nevertheless, as Lent approaches, we may well ask ourselves whether our plans for that season of religious renewal are such as may bring us truly nearer to God.

I am at once reminded of an experience of my own some years ago, which I have often recounted. I found myself able to attend a Lenten noonday service of the kind with which we are all familiar. It was held in a theatre. There were some rather noisy hymns, and then a clever spirited address, well delivered, snappy and pointed. After a brief prayer the crowd dispersed, discussing the preacher as they went. Presently, reaching the street, I saw a big church, which many men and women were entering, and I followed them. It was a Roman Catholic church, filled with people, not a priest anywhere to be seen, and they were kneeling in worship and prayer. A comparison of the two methods forced itself upon my mind. Surely by any true definition of religion, this latter was a higher and finer expression of it than the theatre crowd could show.

I hasten to acknowledge that I have myself used the theatre method many times. What can a man do, when a committee of earnest laymen invites him to preach for a week before the footlights? He has no religious atmosphere about him, nothing that implies worship, kneeling is impossible, and the whole suggestion is that of a crowd coming to be interested if not amused. Small wonder if the latent histrionic in a man's nature is stirred, and he tries to "put his stuff across."

If some good friends of mine, in several cities, should chance to read these words, I hope they will not think me either traitorous or unappreciative of their hard work. But I should like to ask them to do something quite different. Their object, doubtless, in all such Lenten work, is to get men in contact with God. They cannot believe that the mere gathering of a crowd is a sufficient end to their endeavours. Here, then, is the plan I would suggest:

1. Select a down-town church, or, if that is impossible, a good-sized hall, which can be used daily as a place of worship. Let it be understood that this place is to be entirely free from noise and disturbance of any kind between the hours of eleven and two each day. That means, among other things, that the organ shall not be used, either by the organist or by his pupils during these hours, but that the place shall be really what a sign outside many churches often falsely implies: "Church open for prayer and meditation."

2. Let the whole campaign consist of an effort to get people to spend fifteen minutes every day in prayer in that church, sometime during the noon-hour. No money is to be spent on preachers, and therefore a good sum could be devoted to the preparation of cards and leaflets to further and advertise the plan. A very definite promise should be asked, perhaps, in the signing of a card like the following:

I promise that I will try to spend fifteen minutes in prayer and worship in.....Church, at the noon hour, each weekday in Lent, 1919.

Signed.....

3. At definite hours, say, at 12:05, 12:20, 12:35 and 12:50, a priest or layman might lead the congregation in acts of worship. Litanies such as are found in our hymnal, numbers 524 to 530, might be used for this purpose, sung to familiar tunes, in which the people could easily join. These, however, should fill only a part of the time. Most of it should be left free for the devotions of each person.

One church in this country has already led the way in the direction which I am suggesting. Dean Rousmaniere of the Cathedral Church of St. Paul in Boston, has made of that historic place a real house of prayer. It stands in the heart of a great population and is becoming more and more a place where prayer is offered, not merely at stated times of service by the ministers of religion, but at all hours by God's people.

The dean has printed many leaflets of prayer suggestions. A careful selection of these and of other ways of prayer should be made and put into the hands of those who desire to keep Lent in this fashion.

It may be felt that preaching should have some place in this plan. To miss altogether the appeal of the spoken word would seem to many a real loss. A very brief address, based on the spiritual life, might be combined with the plan outlined above, but it should be definitely subordinate to the main purpose.

But it is not only over much preaching that keeps us from the worship of God. Just as in some churches public worship means listening to a sermon, so in others it seems to mean listening to a choir. What is really the religious value of the sacred oratorios and cantatas with which we burden our Lenten program and seek to fill our churches? As Dean Hart's critic would say, do we make any use of them? Is their artistic rendering the only motive to be considered? Once in a public address I spoke my mind fully on the subject of organs and boy-choirs with lamentable results. Here I would merely suggest that on a week-night in Lent we might dispense with them entirely and sing our hymns and litanies ourselves. The popular evangelistic use of hymn-singing, and the delight in it which even boys and girls at a summer-resort seem to take, show that it can and ought to be used as a means of grace far more than it is. Unfortunately, even in the best choirs, in churches which pride themselves on their music, the hymns are often the most neglected part of the service.

In a brief mission in a New York parish some years ago, an attempt was made to use hymn-singing as a definite part of the evening service. It failed largely because there was no real connection between the singing and the preaching. We ought to have learned the lesson long ago that was taught by the linking together of such names as Moody and Sankey, Torrey and Alexander, and, if the truth were told, Sunday and Rodeheaver. We use music of the most elaborate kind, but we have no purpose in its use and most people put up with it as one of the necessary and inexplicable elements of a church service. But if music is to be of value as an expression of our religion, or as a way of teaching us how we express what is often inarticulate, it needs to be used in a more intelligent fashion than is customary among us. For a concert is one thing, and a service intended as an approach to Almighty God is quite another.

What I have said about hymn-singing thus far comes, of course, out of Protestant experience. It seems to be true on the other side as well. One of our clergy, in a recent letter, writes me, "I wandered into the Jesuit church next door one night last Lent and found a whole congregation on their knees singing. It was the only religious service I attended that Lent, by which I do not mean that it was the only time I went to church." Of course it must be recognized, whether with sympathy or with abhorrence, according to our creed, that these people were offering their worship to our Lord present in the Blessed Sacrament. Clearly the problem is an easier one with them. Go into St. Leo's Church, on East Twenty-eighth street, at half-past five on any weekday afternoon and note the crowd of men, women, and children at their prayers. What draws them? Not preaching, for not a word of instruction or exhortation is said. Not the music, for the high, thin voices of the nuns, as they sing the hymns of benediction, hardly offer an aesthetic attraction. Back of worship lies the faith in His presence, making it worth while to go within the walls of the building that enshrines Him and offer prayer which because it centres upon Him draws all together in one common act.

This article is not written in order to plead for one way of worship more than another. But it is written to plead for worship as the thing to which preaching and music alike should lead us. We live in a time when all about us new things are being tried. Let us make this Lent a time of quiet and prayerful approach to God, wherein we shall find for ourselves true ways of worship and make them our own.

NOTES ON CONGREGATIONAL SINGING

BY WILLIAM B. DAVIS, Ph.B.

THE music of our parish churches is in a condition which demands a thorough reformation. Choirs and choirmasters, organists and composers, have been more and more using the services of the Church for the exploitation of their own fancies, thinking, no doubt, that they were doing right and were edifying the congregations. The result, however, has been well nigh fatal to the real thing in church music, congregational singing. The bad condition which church music is in at present could be remedied in a large measure by returning to a Prayer Book service. The daily offices were not compiled for elaborate musical performances. Whatever is intended to be sung is clearly intended to be sung by all, therefore the music chosen for the psalms and canticles should be within the range of the congregation. The so-called "services" have no place in the right saying of Morning or Evening Prayer. A choir has no more right to sing an "anthem setting" to the Te Deum than has it to sing the duet from Stainer's Daughter of Jairus when the minister announces hymn 432 for the hymn before the sermon. Simple chants, changed from time to time, should always be sung to the canticles, unless such simple melodies as can be sung by the whole congregation are available. The composer who can produce a Te Deum, which would correspond in the Anglican school of music to the original music of the Te Deum—simplex or authentic—in the plain chant school, would do more for the Church than were he to write the best anthem of his generation.

The music in the Communion service should for the most part be congregational. Of course, there are exceptions. The Kyrie, a fragment of a litany, which was sung from the sixth century, is the opening prayer of the congregation; it, as well as the creed, the hymn profession of faith, belong to the people. If the people can't sing the Sanctus, the whole conception of the celestial and terrestrial meeting in one burst of praise is entirely lost. The Gloria in Excelsis is the people's thanksgiving song. The Benedictus and Agnus Dei may very properly be sung by the choir as anthems, provided they are sung in a way to help the devotions of the people.

It is permitted to sing an anthem at the presentation of the alms, but it should be remembered that the point of the service where the anthem may be sung is in the middle of one act of worship, the offertory, which begins with the sentence and does not end until the Amen is said at the end of the prayer for Christ's Church. Therefore the choice of the anthem should be made with care, that nothing irrelevant to the service nor detracting from the continuity of the act should be permitted.

The choir is given a chance to sing an anthem during the receiving of the alms after Morning Prayer, and the Church provides a place for the anthem in Evening Prayer. (To tack on a so-called offertory anthem after Evening Prayer—which it is not—is very bad; the people want to sing a hymn and go home.)

Surely a choir has opportunities for its own legitimate work without taking from the people what they want and should have.

THE NEW HYMNARY

BY THE VEN. J. H. GREIG, B.D.

THERE is one thing which a living branch of the Church must never stereotype, and that is its hymn book. Even more than its Book of Common Prayer must its collection of hymns be kept plastic. For the hymns of a Church ought to be at once the expression and quickener of its spiritual experiences, and unless they can grow with its growth they very soon fall behind the Church's progress and become rather a hindrance than a help to its spiritual life.

But there are special reasons why we of the present age must keep this fact and its practical consequences in front of us. Our education is proceeding at top speed and not a single day passes without our learning something. I speak perforce from an English point of view, but differentiated as that is from the American, the inheritance we have in common is so large that mutatis mutandis—what is valid and true in regard to us is valid and true for you also. This is specially so in connection with hymns. Our great goodly heritage from the past of both literature and music is yours also. And we in England have been re-discovering both our music and our poetry, though the former is much more of a recovery than the latter. Ancient English, Welsh and Irish melodies, apt and meet for sacred song, folk-music which truly belongs to us and we to it, music simple, virile, dignified, free from sentimentality and all traces of "lush and slush," have opened to us new sources and new ideals for tunes. So that not only have we now a number of fine old tunes at our disposal, but modern writers steeping themselves in this newly recovered tradition are producing fresh tunes worthy of our ancestry.

And something of a similar kind has taken place in regard to hymns themselves. In this regard we have moved in two directions. First, we have discovered that when it comes to the expression of religious devotion, warm from the heart and illuminated by the intuition of love, so that it embodies the soul's direct experience rather than an intellectual deduction from that experience, we get very close to a true unity. Consequently it happens that in Christian hymns the finer utterances of men and women of all schools of thought, all ranks and professions, all centuries, all sections of the Catholic Church, Eastern and Western, have value for all. The Anglican and Roman hymns of Cardinal Newman, the Jesuit Faber, the Presbyterian Bonar, a journalist like Chesterton, a genius like Rudyard Kipling, a polished diplomat like Lowell, a twelfth century mystic like St. Bernard, a radical agitator like Ebenezer Elliott, all produce when at their best, the really fine hymn which expresses the devotion and aspirations of all hearts that are not yet petrified by the conviction that those who differ from them are outside the pale. We may claim this as a more or less recent discovery which has dowered us with new possessions that are still only very partially explored. Secondly, and more specifically, a profounder knowledge and taste has made us aware, as we never had been before, of how much of our poetry, our magnificent English poetry, ought to find a place in our hymn books. Hence there occurs in more recent collections such names as George Herbert, Herrick, Wordsworth, Tennyson, Whittier, Lowell and Christina Rossetti; and unless I am greatly mistaken this only marks the beginning of a truer insight into what can be done to create a close alliance between hymns and poetry, instead of the very intermittent "nodding acquaintance" between them, which is all that can be said to have existed up to now.

But this is only a small part of the overwhelming case for keeping the "canon" of our hymn books wide open. The experiences of these war years and of the years of reconstruction which await us are bringing and will bring us new hymns and will give old poems fresh meaning and make us want to sing them in church.

The long campaigns and the harvest of victory in the mission field, as we more and more make that work an integral part of the Church's normal task; the fresh visions which God is giving us of brotherhood and service as wide as the human race; all these will mean, as they have already begun to mean, more and glorious new hymns. And in another direction as we recover increasingly our great heritage in the Catholic Church; as the mystic element in religion is more and more realized, the very presence in our midst of the Lord Jesus; the meaning and splendor of the call to the crucified life; the melody of the Adorable Name; the reality and potency of the Communion of Saints and the infection of their joy and peace—all these things towards which we are reaching out glad, faithful hands, will make old hymns which we have not understood very dear and real to us and lead to the writing of new ones that shall express our experiences. For if it be true, as indeed it is, that no two travelers ever arrived at the same town, so assuredly no two souls and no two generations ever found the same Jesus. In Himself He abides unchanging, but to each of us He is the fulfilment of all our desires, so every soul and every generation that truly finds Him has its own song of praise to sing, its own record to publish abroad to men and angels.

These are some few of the abiding principles of the hymnody of a living Church; and they must mean no stereotyping, no fixed and final book. They give us also the touchstone by which to test any new hymn book or revision which may be put out from time to time.

With them in his mind the present writer has examined the new hymn book of the American Episcopal Church. In some ways he has been at a disadvantage. He had no intimate working knowledge of the book it displaces, though he has examined it closely and has made some study of hymns and hymnology. Also the present "dummy" form of the new book without any of its indices makes it rather hard to know whether a given hymn is or is not in the new collection. On the other hand, he had the great advantage and pleasure of being present at the New York Church Club and hearing Dr. Slattery's masterly exposition and then the spirited, infectious enthusiasm with which a very large number of the new tunes and hymns were rendered by Dr. Noble and a well-balanced and most musical quartette.

So judged the new book issues triumphantly from its long, but not too long, period of incubation. Of the hymns dropped nothing need be said, except that having been unsung they will also be unmourned. Of the hymns added it can be truly said that they include many very fine ones. In the "Holy Communion" section, to take one highly important division, there appears "Jesus, Greatest Saviour," "Jesus, Thou Joy of Loving Hearts" (to Monk's "St. Bernard," and a noble, plainsong melody), the Pange Lingua and the Koutakion, from the liturgy of St. James, a very great enrichment. I still think that this section of the book is far too meagre and feel sure that here specially a strong demand for more hymns will soon be felt; but already the gain is great. Space fails me to go into any detail with other sections. Notable among many gains are Ebenezer Elliott's noble "When Wilt Thou Save the People?" surely one of the greatest hymns democracy has produced, and it has inspired Dr. Somervell to write a tune worthy of it; the old Greek hymn, "Fierce Was the Wild Billow," so finely translated by Neale and for which Dr. Noble has written a tune of real distinction; the grandest of all modern hymns of praise, Mr. Riley's "Ye Watchers and Ye Holy Ones," with its surely inspired choice of an old German melody that seems as if it must have been written for it; the priceless "St. Patrick's Breastplate" and its old Irish melody, and then, as a sign of the times, there is practically an entire new section of no less than seventeen hymns, almost all of which are new, called "Brotherhood and Service." We do not imagine that all these seventeen "experiments" will survive the test and take a permanent place among our hymns, but that is not to say that it was wrong to put them in now. Also it would have been a gain in the actual using of the book if all the hymns in each section were arranged in alphabetical order. And so I could go on, and so obviously could anyone, making suggestions some of which might really be slight improvements, while others would be like substituting "six" for "half a dozen." But I do not think that any unprejudiced person who knows a little about hymns and music can doubt that the new hymnal constitutes an invaluable and unquestionable advance in a matter which touches the very springs of spiritual life, both individual and corporate. Its range is wider; its standard of poetry is higher; its music is more virile and worshipful; its conception of worship is richer; and finally it brings out of the treasure of the Kingdom things new and old.

One word more may perhaps be allowed. A new hymnal gives an opportunity, or perhaps better, imperatively calls for, congregational practices. In England we are all beginning to feel that we must break down the idea that the choir is to sing and the people to listen. We need our services to be like our government—not only for the people, but by the people. Nothing promotes this like congregational practices, and the more simply they are carried out the more effective they are. If from time to time in place of an ordinary sermon the preacher takes two or three new hymns and after telling the congregation something about the writers of the words and music expounds the place where those particular poems will fill in the scheme of the service, and then, the choir leading at first, brings on the congregation to make that new hymn its own, its very own, there results a quickening of corporate worship which is more converting and uplifting than many sermons. We gain here and now a foretaste of the great and final "song of the redeemed" and go rejoicing on our way.

LET ALL THE PEOPLE PRAISE THEE

BY THE REV. BERNARD IDDINGS BELL

"I WENT to St. Aidan's to Evening Prayer last Sunday afternoon," said my good friend, the distinguished broad churchman, the other day from his office chair, "and heard a wonderful concert. In the evening I dropped into St. Bridgit's, the Roman Church around the corner, and heard a crowd of people with no choir sing a litany of the saints. Of the two I prefer the latter, not because I have a hankering for Rome, as you well know, but because in the one case I saw a crowd of people enjoying some musical stunts, while in the other I saw some people worshipping the Lord. What a good combination the sanity of St. Aidan's and the devotion of St. Bridgit's would make!"

Of course this truly broad churchman is an eccentric. He believes churches are of more value than parish houses, and preaching more important than organization, and the reunion of religion and the pagan majority a better problem to worry about than the reunion of ecclesiastical organizations each of which severally has lost the ear of the masses of the people. In this resentment of his against choirs, and commercialized music, and concerts in place of devotions, however, he probably has the majority of all humble churchmen, high, low, and broad, as well as the great masses who mostly never go to church at all, on his side. The problem of how to get rid of those disservices which have followed the introduction of chancelled surpliced choirs into the Anglican communion is one of our most important and vexing tasks to face.

It is just possible that the worst advisers we can possibly go to in our difficulty are choirmasters and organists. Most of them have been brought up in the bad traditions from which we suffer. Few of them know anything about the psychology of devotion. They take their ideals from a few metropolitan choirs of national reputation or from English cathedral models. The priest and vestry who know that much is wrong with their music ought not to consult the ordinary music-master about it. Nor are the experts very much better. Most of them are theorists, often with theories which are right, but which cannot be put into practice because they are too radical. The advocates of plainsong, for instance, seem unable to understand that plainsong is foreign to the American ear. Although one may be inclined to agree when they say in retort that the American ear is a bad ear, the priest and vestry know that it happens to be the ear they must win if they would educate and help devotionally.

Where is one to go for advice? It might be a good idea to open the correspondence columns of THE CHURCHMAN for a symposium, carefully excluding from participation every professional musician. There are places where the rescuing of devotion from the hungry maws of the choirs has to some extent been accomplished. It would be interesting to know how it has been done.

The following suggestions are a composite of several experiments with which one priest happens to be familiar. They are the things he himself has decided to do if ever he should have with him a vestry as desirous as he is of democratizing music and spiritualizing the Church's services.

I. General Preliminaries:

1. In the pews would be placed enough hymnals with music and enough Prayer Books pointed for chanting so that everyone may have one of each.

2. The choir would be removed from the chancel, either to the back of the church in a loft or else to the side pews or the transept. Most of our chancels are cluttered up with squirming choir-boys or overly self-conscious choir maidens and it would be a relief for them and for the people to have them where they need not be observed unless one wished.

3. The share of the music performed by the choir would be strictly limited. The anthem would be prohibited instantly. The choir might be permitted to sing, at Communion service the Sanctus, Benedictus and a quiet and devotional number while the people received Communion; at Morning Prayer a Te Deum (during which the congregation should mercifully be allowed to sit down); at Evening Prayer a Magnificat, since that is the climax of the service. This ought to be the outside limit, however.

II. Hymns:

These would be the main part of the service, musically, at least in the beginning. A very small selection of hymn-tunes would be made, hardly more than one hundred tunes for the whole year. These would be sung over and over. Of course the music would be in the pews. Many different sets of words can be well sung to a few tunes. These tunes would never run in range above the treble staff and never below middle C. They would be played at reasonable tempo, and the organist would positively be forbidden to "shade" in them. Practically the same volume of tone would be used throughout, and this enough to cover up individual voices and blend them. Tunes with eccentric time would be taboo.

III. Chants:

These would be subject to the same rules as the hymns, except that they would not exceed three or four tunes a chant a year. Sentimental settings would be eliminated. For instance, in the responses at Evening Prayer, the four-part arrangement used in many places is syrupy. The plain old way of singing the people's share of these (it is the tenor part in most arrangements), ought to be the one followed. And the sickeningly sentimental slowing up and softening down on the "Take not thy Holy Spirit from us" ought to be relegated to academies for adolescent young ladies. In short for the responsive parts of all the services the plainsong is the only thing to use, for it is virile and simple.

Anglican chants are justifiable, provided they are not jerky and jumpy. The plainsong tones impress many people as "too sad." In this case they can be modernized and some of the minors eliminated. This is musical heresy, but never mind that. The psalms ought to be chanted, but the chanting must be by the people. This is why pointed Prayer Books are a necessity. Incidentally, the people never will chant while a choir is up in front doing it. They do not dare. Our congregations are so incurably modest!

IV. Lenten services, etc.

Here the choir would be completely forgotten. It takes no time at all to get a congregation to learn to sing the litany, especially if for a while the priest sings the responses with the people and two or three people are planted about who know the tones well. Extra litanies of one sort or another can be used, too, so that the words would change from time to time but the same simple music remain. In the camp we have learned the value of litanies. They make a great appeal to ordinary folks. Nothing surely could be more helpful in Lent than a congregation assembled, a clergyman quietly joining them, a litany simply sung by them all with no assistance save that of a wise organist, and then a quiet sermon, longer than is possible at the Sunday services, and a good hymn. Fifty minutes would be ample. How simple and devotional it would be.

These are some of the ideas of one priest. Most of them he has seen tried successfully in parishes widely variant in churchmanship. The others he believes will work. Why should the Episcopal Church in America hesitate to do things like these? Surely the choirmasters have not hopelessly enchained us. Wherein is the great advantage of being free from the Pope if we are bond servants to the precentor?

ALL SAINTS

ONE feast, of holy days the crest,
I, though no churchman, love to keep,
All Saints,—the unknown good that rest
In God's still memory folded deep;
The bravely dumb that did their deed,
And scorned to blot it with a name,
Men of the plain heroic breed,
That loved Heaven's silence more than fame

Such lived not in the past alone,
But thread today the unheeding street,
And stairs to Sin and Famine known
Sing with the welcome of their feet;
The den they enter grows a shrine,
The grimy sash an oriel burns,
Their cup of water warms like wine,
Their speech is filled with heavenly urns.

About their brows to me appears
An aureole traced in tenderest light,
The rainbow-gleam of smiles through tears
In dying eyes, by them made bright,
Of souls that shivered on the edge
Of that chill ford repassed no more,
And in their mercy felt the pledge
And sweetness of the farther shore.

—James Russell Lowell.

THE MUSIC OF THE NEW HYMNAL

BY THE REV. CHARLES WINFRED DOUGLAS

THE American Church, for the first time, is proposing an official musical edition of its hymnal. Its previous policy has been to leave the provision of music for the hymns entirely to private enterprise. The hymnal of 1892, now in use, has been supplied with six complete musical settings, by six different editors, besides a partial setting by still another. The growing sense that the hymnal of 1892 no longer adequately supplied our needs has led to the use in many parishes of at least two important collections published in England. Thus a high degree of variation in the music intended to be sung by our congregations has long existed.

This wide divergence of practice has both simplified the task of preparing a standard hymnal, and complicated the problem of its reception by the clergy and people. It has been invaluable in the work of preparation to have had so great a volume of tunes as are contained in the seven settings of the old hymnal thoroughly tested in practice. From among them all, the best melodies and those most perfectly fitted to the words of the various hymns have readily been made apparent, and retained in the new book; while a multitude of others have as evidently failed to reach the standards of intrinsic worth and of practical usefulness, and have been omitted. But this necessary sifting process in the music hitherto in use among us brings its difficulties in satisfying the unthinking and the hasty. Strange to say, great numbers of our clergy and people have no idea of the existence of any other musical edition of the old hymnal than the one to which they are accustomed. Such an one recently wrote in this vein: "We want a new hymnal, but we don't want any of the music in the old hymnal changed; limit your new tones to your new hymns." He failed to realize that there were seven old hymnals, not one; and that the retention of all the settings would be as practically undesirable as physically impossible. The point is curiously illustrated by three other letters, from different parts of the country, in which each writer complained that the "old tune" of a certain hymn was not set to it in the new book; but comparison of the letters showed that each writer has a different "old tune" in mind. All were contained in the new hymnal; but that particular hymn was set to a still "older tune," with which it had been associated in the minds of most Christian people in America for a century.

The use in some of our parishes of such books as Hymns Ancient and Modern and The English Hymnal has also been of much value: for it has put us into practical touch with the great movement of reform and revival in this field which has produced a wonderful wealth of new hymnals in England since the year 1900; and has supplied us with notable tunes whose excellence has already made them widely popular in America.

But in addition to the many hymn tunes thus chosen from our own older books and from familiar English publications, whose tested excellence was self-evident, much additional musical material was required, both for words newly included in our collection, and for others inadequately set. On what principle should such a task of selection be carried out?

Two mutually contradictory principles have been suggested, with both of which the editorial board found itself in complete disagreement. The first of these is that present popularity should be the sole determining factor; that is, that the hymnal should be prepared precisely along the lines of the college song book. This would be to abandon that advice of persons skilled in music which our canon law requires, and to substitute complete musical anarchism, the reduction of all to the level of the most ignorant. In the end, the noisiest local group in each parish would rule; and all the splendid unity of noble song, one of the most potent bonds of the heart, would be sacrificed for a parochial individualism that would satisfy but a small section of the individual parish.

The other suggested principle of choice was that the whole matter of music should be dealt with from the sole point of view of the professional musician, who ought to furnish his professional choir with the best and most modern music for the artistic edification of the congregation. This would be autocracy with a vengeance: but though few would be so hardy as to defend it when thus baldly stated, it is nevertheless the principle on which much of our church music is actually conducted at the present time. But the method is as subversive of true art as it is of real religion. Vocal display, or any other form of merely external beauty, has no place in the home of either. True beauty must be sincere and spring from the heart; and the right singing of hymns to God must be from both lips and heart of all His children. Too often, clergy, choirmasters, and the people have mistaken a mere musical excitement for that "quickening and raising of the affections to God" which is the normal aim of real hymnody.

The editorial board has been guided in the selection of the music by a very different principle. To be sure, a very few tunes have been admitted which had little to recommend them but their popularity; and all of the tunes have been edited with the best available musical skill, as befits that which is to be offered to Almighty God. But in choosing them, the board has been conscious of the duty of conserving, and if possible, of augmenting, that great treasure of truly devotional song, begun when the Church was young, and enriched century by century with fresh utterance from the loving hearts of men. For song is but incidentally beautiful sound; it is primarily the cry of the human heart: and the great hymn melodies of the Church are the voice of God's saints down through the ages, marvellously given to us to express our own faith and love and repentant sorrow and living hope. Those who have kept informed as to European progress, and especially as to English progress in this field during recent years, know that such an aim has characterized the preparation of the many notable collections which have enriched religious life abroad, such as the new edition of Hymns Ancient and Modern, The Oxford Hymnal, The English Hymnal, The Yattendon Hymnal, Church Hymns, The Westminster Hymnal, Songs of Syon, and the Canadian Book of Common Praise. It has considerably widened the sources from which the music of our hymns may be drawn, and given us a store of great and beloved tunes whose proved and permanent popularity withdraws all the risks of experiment. For in music it is unquestionably the best things which survive: and our American public has lately shown an extraordinary desire to know and to love these best things. Let us think of some of them which have now found their way into the hymnal.

About fifty of the older masterpieces of hymnody, which have never failed to arouse the enthusiastic love of those who sing them, are included either for the first time, or for the first time in any adequate version. Among them, the oldest are some fifteen plainsong hymns; including such famous melodies as those of "The royal banners," "Day of wrath," "Therefore we, before Him bending," "Blessed City, heavenly Salem," and others equally beloved. We have hitherto had a few tunes labeled "Ancient Plainsong" in our books, but so distorted as to give little idea of the lovely originals. Next to these in order of age are a number of mediaeval carol tunes, beautiful models of simple popular song. Then follow the Reformation chorales in their majestic vigor. Among them appear for the first time "A mighty Fortress is our God," "How bright appears the morning star," "Ah, holy Jesus, how hast Thou offended?" and others of like importance. These are probably the greatest congregational tunes ever composed. Most of them are printed with the melody on a separate staff for the use of all, and with the magnificent harmonies of Bach and Mendelssohn for the organ, or for the more skilful choirs. A few seventeenth and eighteenth century melodies of charming grace, both English and continental, bring us down to the great body of familiar music written in the last century. But there is one vein practically untapped until The English Hymnal, which has yielded new beauty from that somewhat overworked mine. I refer to the folksongs, and tunes of strongly national type. From their very nature, they are music of the people and appeal to all; as is shown by the insistent American demand for "St. Patrick's Breastplate," and by the ardor with which Billy Sunday's audiences sing that astonishing Welsh air, Ton-y-Botel; both of which, with others of like power, are in the hymnal.

All of the tunes so far enumerated have had one characteristic in common: they were primarily fine, simple, direct melodies, singable by young and old, skilled and unskilled. But about the middle of the nineteenth century, a new type of hymn tune began to be composed, of distinctly lower musical and devotional standards. It was based on the secular part-song, and often had little to distinguish it as religious music. For its full effect, it demanded a well-balanced choir of trained singers; and its very character invited the congregation to listen rather than to sing. Its type of emotional expression was sweet rather than strong, sentimental rather than sincere. Its best composers, such as Dykes and Strainer, produced much that was noble, much that was genuine, much that was eminently useful: other less desirable work has become endeared to many through long association. It has been deemed wise to retain a large part of this body of song; more than some radical reformers will approve. But in the selection of two final groups of tunes, those of recent English and American origin, an effort has been made to revert, as far as possible, to purer and earlier standards; avoiding both showy choir tunes, and the bathos of cheap and sentimental harmony. There are about thirty of these twentieth century melodies.

The new hymnal is for the use of all in the Church. It provides what is needed for the small town parish with its limited choir; for the great city church of multiplied musical resources; and for the country mission with the little-instructed amateur organist. It affords the material for exceedingly diversified musical utterance, just as it supplies the devotional needs of all the various schools of churchmanship. The large and expert choir will find in it a wealth of interesting and beautiful music; and at the same time, the great majority of the tunes are congregational in their character. There is no doubt a legitimate place for the choir tune, as there is for the anthem. The fact that both have been grievously abused must not blind us to their very real usefulness. But the editorial board has considered that the hymns are primarily intended to be sung by the entire congregation; and that the normal practice is for each member of the congregation to own and use a hymnal with music, as has long been the case with the greater Protestant bodies. We may well recall the wise words of Lowell Mason in his preface to one of the best and most remarkable hymnals yet produced in America: "Congregational singing engages all in the simultaneous exercise of the same emotions, and admits of no listeners, thus excluding that bane of all true worship, criticism." However, to obtain this inspiring unanimity of the congregation in hymn-singing, the pitch of the tunes must be limited to the range of the average voice. The proposal has been not infrequently made of lowering the pitch of familiar modern tunes for this purpose. But the whole character of many melodies depends on their pitch: change that, and the qualities that made them effective and popular have vanished. The modern tunes, therefore, have very properly been left as their composers wrote them. Nevertheless, in the choice of tunes, decided preference has been shown for those of congregational range: and many of the older tunes have been definitely transposed into lower keys. Eighty-five per cent of all the tunes are of ordinary congregational range: only fifteen per cent rise above this, as opposed to twenty-two per cent in the edition of the older book most widely in use.

The congregational character of the new hymnal is specially noticeable in the important departments of the Eucharistic hymns, the hymns for the use of children, and the many hymns for national days, which make very full provision for all patriotic occasions in church. Two features wholly new to our books are the large group of carols for the various church seasons, and a set of twenty-five tunes arranged for men's voices alone. The need of both of these enrichments has been widely felt.

Not the least important section of the book is that devoted to the canticles and occasional anthems. Chanting should be, and may be, just as much a part of congregational worship as hymn-singing. But the exceedingly corrupt and false methods of chanting common among us have prevented even our choirs from appreciating its beauty and importance. The commission has thought it desirable to put forth improved directions for chanting, and a new pointing of the canticles, which embody the results of progress in this field during the past twenty-five years. In the judgment of the editorial board, no part of the work will be of more value than this.

NEWS OF THE CHURCH

BOARD OF MISSIONS HAS AN IMPORTANT MEETING

Reports Show Deplorable Financial Condition with $266,357 Deficit

Last week one of the most forward-looking and constructive meetings in the history of the Board of Missions was held in New York. Although the treasurer's report showed a deplorable deficit of $266,357, with gifts averaging not more than 3 cents per communicant per week for missions, although the executive committee had to refuse Bishop McKim and Dr. Reifsnider's almost desperate appeal for money for running expenses for St. Paul's School, the board faced the situation squarely and laid plans looking towards greater efficiency and more concerted action in the future.

The proposed canon suggested by the General Board of Religious Education providing for the delegation of certain responsibilities to an executive committee by General Convention, definitely responsible to the Church and dealing with the work of the three central boards appointed by General Convention, met with a cordial reception; the report of the continental missionary bishops was heard and heartily approved; the proposed national organization of the Woman's Auxiliary, including the provision that women be admitted to the Board of Missions was endorsed; days of special intercession were appointed, and a campaign for missionary education outlined.

The report of the committee of twenty concerning plans for the Inter-church World Movement of North America was read in full. It seemed the unanimous opinion of the members of the board that our Church should take as large a part as possible in this movement.

The board called upon the Church to set apart certain days as periods of intercession for the welfare of its general boards and especially that they may be given wisdom to develop such new activities as will call forth increased devotion throughout the Church. The days assigned were the last Wednesday of March, April, and May.

The consideration of the principles of a canon, suggested by the General Board of Religious Education and others, to provide for an executive board of the General Convention, was taken up both by the executive committee and by the board. The board approved the principles involved in the canon, but made some suggestions as to the details. The whole matter was referred to a committee of three for consideration to report to the executive committee at each of its meetings between now and May, when at that meeting of the board it should be made the special order of the day, taking precedence over every other matter.

The executive committee of the continental domestic missionary bishops had requested a meeting with the Board of Missions to present certain matters which had been considered by the council of the bishops held in Cheyenne last October. Bishop Thomas, chairman of the council, Bishop Page and Bishop Burleson forming the executive committee, were present.

The bishops have agreed to have their budgets presented to the executive committee of the council and vised by it, in order that there may be a common budget for the work of the continental domestic missionary field. The council hoped that the Board of Missions would be able to underwrite this budget, the bishops in turn agreeing to do everything in their power to continue using all their influence and effort to secure the sums to meet this budget.

The opinion was expressed by the board that this marked one of the most important steps so far contemplated in the conduct of missionary work in this country. The chair was requested to appoint a committee of three, who with the domestic secretary, were requested to confer with the executive committee of the continental domestic missionary bishops, and to bring their report to the meeting of the board in May.

BISHOP OF VIRGINIA DIES

The Rt. Rev. Robert A. Gibson Was Consecrated in 1897

RICHMOND, VIRGINIA—The Rt. Rev. Robert A. Gibson, Bishop of Virginia, died Monday, February 17, at his home in this city. He was seventy-three years old.

Bishop Gibson was educated at the Episcopal High School, Alexandria, and was graduated at Hampden-Sidney College in 1867, and at the Theological Seminary of Virginia in 1870. His studies were interrupted by the Civil War, in which he served as a private in the Rockbridge Battery, First Virginia Regiment. He was ordained deacon in 1870, at once entering upon an extensive mission covering five counties of southern Virginia. Upon his ordination to the priesthood in the following year he became rector of St. James's Church, Richmond, where he remained for six years, then becoming rector of Trinity Church, Parkersburg, West Virginia. In 1897 he accepted a call to the rectorship of Christ Church, Cincinnati, from which parish he was called to the episcopate.

He was elected bishop coadjutor June 30, 1897, and was consecrated at Holy Trinity Church, in this city, November 3 of the same year.

PRESBYTERIANS CONDEMN APPOINTMENT OF HERRON

Ex-Congregational Minister Once Founded Free Love Colony

NEWARK, NEW JERSEY—President Wilson's appointment of George D. Herron to represent the United States at the proposed conference with the Russian Bolsheviks at Prince's Island was strongly protested against by two organizations of this city, last week. They were the Presbyterian Union of Newark and the Holy Name Society of St. Aloysius's Roman Catholic Church. At the meeting of the first named organization, when 800 persons were present, resolutions were unanimously adopted, as follows:

WHEREAS, George D. Herron has been appointed by the President of the United States to represent this country at a conference with the Russian Bolsheviks at Prince's Island; and

WHEREAS, George D. Herron, while residing in this country and holding the chair of applied Christianity in Iowa College deserted his wife and children and openly lived with another woman; and

WHEREAS, he endeavored to establish a free love colony at Metuchen, New Jersey, from which place he was driven by the force of public sentiment to take refuge in Europe;

THEREFORE, be it resolved: that a man who has so flagrantly and notoriously violated the laws of God and man is forever unfit to hold any office of public trust within the gift of the American people or its representatives.

Be it further resolved: that the Presbyterian Union of Newark hereby protests the appointment which has been made and urgently requests that it be withdrawn.

Be it further resolved: that the secretary be instructed to forward a copy of these resolutions to President Wilson at once.

At the Holy Name Society's session the belief was expressed that the appointment will be cancelled by President Wilson when he becomes informed of the Herron record.

The Rev. Dr. Charles A. Eaton of Plainfield, New Jersey, attacked the appointment when preaching in the Madison Avenue Baptist Church, this city, February 9, declaring that "when I think of George Herron as the representative of this country on a great mission I bow my head in shame."

George Davis Herron, Socialist, lecturer, author and exponent of the doctrine of free love, lived for several years in Metuchen, New Jersey. He was born fifty-seven years ago in Montezuma, Indiana, and studied at Ripon College in Wisconsin and Tabor College in Iowa, also for two years in Europe. He began his public career as a Congregational minister and held pastorates in Lake City, Minnesota, and Burlington, Iowa, before being deposed from the ministry because of his extraordinary views. His resignation as professor of applied Christianity in Grinnell College, Iowa, was required by the trustees of the college on the same grounds.

Professor Herron is alleged to have abandoned his lawful wife and four children. In 1901, in this city, he married, according to his own ideas of marriage, Miss Carrie Rand of Burlington, Iowa.

February 22, 1919

The "ceremony" was performed by the Rev. William T. Brown of the Plymouth Church, Rochester, and consisted of the mere announcement, made by the contracting parties in unison, "We intend to live together as man and wife hereafter," and an address by the clergyman, which included the following:

"Inasmuch, therefore, as George D. Herron and Carrie Rand are thus united together by the bond of reciprocal love, I announce that they are husband and wife by every law of right and truth and I bespeak for them the fervent benediction of all true souls and the abiding gladness that dwells in the heart of God forever."

When it became known that the Herrons were to make their home in Metuchen where they had purchased an estate of 235 acres, apprehension was felt lest the former clergyman should seek to establish a socialist colony there. A press report four years later stated:

"This village (Metuchen) has become the seat of a new colony, in which the tenets of free love, or 'Marriage Independent of Law' will be exemplified."

"The prime mover in the enterprise is Professor George D. Herron, an ex-Congregational preacher of Iowa, who was expelled several years ago from the denomination because of his extraordinary views."

"The wife with whom Herron is now living became such according to the Herron ceremony. In round figures, $11,000,000 is the sum that Herron has at his disposal to spread his propaganda. This vast fortune belongs to his wife, or, rather, his 'companion,' that being the title bestowed upon wives by the men of the Herron faith."

When Herron left his legal wife and their children, he went to Europe on a tour with Mrs. E. D. Rand and her daughter. Upon his return he announced to his wife that he no longer loved her, and she is alleged to have received from Mrs. Rand $60,000 upon consenting to obtain a divorce from her husband. The second Mrs. Herron died in January, 1914, in Florence, Italy, where the couple had lived since 1905. Mr. Herron is now living in Geneva, Switzerland, where he is engaged in literary work. He is the author of many books, and during his residence abroad has contributed frequently to European magazines.

After forty-three years of most faithful work as a secretary of the Woman's Auxiliary, Miss Margaret T. Emery asked that she might be allowed to retire. The board felt that it should accede to her request, which it did with much regret. It placed on record its great appreciation for the work she has done. It was Miss Emery who came to the office in 1876 to edit the Young Christian Soldier, which was the weekly missionary publication for young people at that time. She did this work until the publication of the magazine was suspended in 1912. She had also, during that time, under her supervision the boxes sent out by both the junior and senior branches of the Auxiliary.

At the meeting of the board in February, 1917, a committee was appointed to confer with a committee appointed by the Woman's Auxiliary to consider matters of organization of that body. The committee reported that it had approved the plan for the organization of the Auxiliary, giving it a constitution to be ratified by the board, recognizing the president of the Board of Missions as the ex-officio president of the Auxiliary, provided that the general secretary should be nominated by the Auxiliary and appointed by the Board of Missions for a term of office to coincide with that of the president of the board, and agreeing that there should be some unified provincial organization. It also approved the plan that the delegates of the Woman's Auxiliary at its triennial meeting should elect an executive committee to consist of sixteen members, eight to be nominated by the provinces, and eight to be nominated by the whole body of delegates, and that there should also be elected a chairman of the executive committee, this executive committee to meet at the same place as the Board of Missions, either immediately before or after. The question of women representatives to be elected to membership on the Board of Missions was approved by the board, if it is found to be the wish of the Auxiliary.

On motion of Dr. Mann the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Board of Missions that a nation-wide campaign of missionary information, education and inspiration should be begun at the first possible moment.

MANY CHURCHES HAVE PART IN CATHEDRAL SERVICE

Fourteen Denominations Represented in Inter-church Gathering

What a daily paper thinks of the Inter-church service held at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine on Sunday last is revealed in the following account which appeared Monday in the New York Times: "Church leaders of New York City look upon the service at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine yesterday afternoon as epochal."

"It marked the climax of the Inter-church Emergency Campaign, a movement in which fourteen Protestant denominations are joining to raise $10,000,000."

"The service at the cathedral was a sequel to a special afternoon meeting held in the early fall on behalf of the General Wartime Commission of the Churches."

"On that occasion Bishop David H. Greer, of the Protestant Episcopal Diocese of New York, invited to the pulpit of the cathedral the Rev. Dr. Frank Mason North, a Methodist, and the Rev. Dr. William Adams Brown, of the Union Theological Seminary, a Presbyterian."

"In introducing the two speakers Bishop Greer said, 'We welcome them as brothers.'"

"In the procession representatives of many Protestant denominations were seen, all gowned and hooded, and accorded honors rarely extended to any but Episcopalians."

"Yesterday Dr. Brown was again a speaker and with him was Bishop McDowell, of the Methodist Church."

"The meeting of the early fall was shown yesterday to have been but a preliminary. Yesterday found the fellowship theory working out in practice. The fourteen denominations not only had the essence of faith in common, but also had the essentials of their works. They had pooled their interests and were unitedly raising an emergency fund."

"Many comments were heard after the cathedral service. Clergymen who were present said they had witnessed a great stride toward church unity. They said also that Bishop Greer had lived to see his ideal realized—the cathedral had actually become the community center of a united Protestantism."

"William Jennings Bryan was also a speaker at this service."

ENGLISH CHURCH LEADERS DISCUSS OUR PROHIBITION

Church Times Calls It Result of "Efficient Fanatical Opinion"

By James Cairns

LONDON.—What exactly are we to say to your latest constitutional amendment? Of course there is no doubt as to what, on the one hand, the United Kingdom Alliance, which has always worked for prohibition of alcoholic liquor, will say; nor, on the other hand, what the average working man here will say. But the Church? It must say something, and its leaders, unless we are to include Bishop Welldon, Dean of Durham, are as yet silent.

The dean writes as usual to the Times. He contrasts America's bold handling of the problem with Britain's "playing too long and feebly with it." Britain is now being tempted to surrender or compromise the beneficent results achieved by the Central Control Board for Liquor Control. He cannot tell whether prohibition is possible in England, but he applauds America for its achievement, which is "the free choice of a free people."

The Church Times, which has a leader entitled "Bone Dry," thinks the dean over-enthusiastic, and remarks that it is not as yet the free choice of a free people, but the work of the political machines, put in motion by "ardent and efficient organizations of fanatical opinion." It sympathizes also with Cardinal Gibbons in his complaint that the enforcement of the law will make the celebration of the Sacrament of the altar impossible. Nor does the writer of the leading article contemplate with satisfaction the interference with personal liberty which the enforcement of the law will involve. It might have good results where the people are willing, but it will be another matter if it is enforced on a people determined to resist the law. Meanwhile we are reminded that the Supreme Court may have something to say as to the interpretation of the amendment.

It happens that the news of this new departure in America coincides with a change in the policy of the Church of England Temperance Society. Prebendary Willson, of Hereford, is urging a widening of the base, so that the society will in future stand for not only temperance, but also for housing, hygiene, and kindred matters of social reform. The Guardian hails the reconstruction with enthusiasm; as might indeed have been expected, for it has frequently criticized the society for professing to have a "general section" of non-abstainers, while for practical purposes it was a total abstinence society. On the American venture, the Guardian declares that the American soldier is not enamored of being made a teetotaler without his opinion being asked. I must admit that I have found a feeling of this kind among some Americans here.

Bishop Colmore in Hospital

The Rt. Rev. C. B. Colmore, D.D., Bishop of Porto Rico, has just arrived in New York en route from the Virgin Islands to his own diocese. He has spent some time in the Virgin Islands making arrangements for the handing over of the ecclesiastical jurisdiction from the English to the American Church. Bishop Colmore, on his arrival in New York, was so worn out by the many months of unremitting work that lie behind him, that he found it necessary to go to St. Luke's Hospital for a short time to recuperate his strength.

AMERICANS MUST LOVE THE GERMANS, SAYS BP. BRENT

"Let Us Demand for Our Enemies a Square Deal"

BUFFALO, NEW YORK—In his sermon at Trinity Church here Bishop Brent made a striking plea for a square deal for the Germans:

"I stand before you to-day," said the bishop, "to appeal for love—I do not hesitate to say it—for the German people from the American people."

It was shown that the Holy Alliance failed because it lacked love and had in it what was unholy—revenge against France—and for that reason England refused to join it, though at that time she was no close friend to France. "Let this stand as a warning," continued the preacher. "Let us demand for our enemies what our great ex-President would ask and has asked for all men—a square deal."

Christ was a Jew, a despised outcast, hated by many, ignored by the great, and his loving heart went out to all just as though they were his own flesh and blood. And in this day above all times, we should pray for our enemies; if we are followers of Christ we must do it.

"We must avoid doing this with maudlin sentimentality—there are in every community those who confuse love and amiability—but I run all risks when I say that we must love and appreciate the great characteristics that the Germans possess, and love them into righteousness. We cannot do it solely by discipline. We must do it by the melting process of heat and love."

In the afternoon at the Majestic Theatre the same afternoon, Bishop Brent was the chief speaker at the closing session of the Social Welfare Conference. On the platform beside the president of the conference was Rabbi Kopald, who offered the invocation.

The bishop spoke of the privileged class as not only that with material wealth but that with leisure and opportunity for development, and plead for an equal opportunity for every boy and girl to develop the gifts with which God had endowed them.

Bishop Brent sailed on Sunday morning last for France after spending a few days in New York.

The bishop made a deep impression by two addresses he gave in Rochester, where he spoke before the Chamber of Commerce and to a very large gathering at Christ Church. Before coming to New York he made a trip to his boyhood home at New Castle, Ontario.

COLORED CHAPLAIN HOME AFTER YEAR IN FRANCE

The only colored clergyman of the Episcopal Church who has done war work in France, the Rev. David LeRoy Ferguson, returned home last week after a year's service. Mr. Ferguson is rector of the Church of Our Merciful Saviour, Louisville, Kentucky. In speaking of his conception of the work of the colored troops he said:

"The colored soldiers over there rendered a great service to their country. Many were decorated and received the Croix de Guerre for heroic deeds on the firing line. Another fact deserving notice was the large industrial army of colored stevedores who unloaded the ships and sent supplies and ammunition to the boys at the front. The experience gained by the colored soldiers from the army discipline and training will help towards better citizenship when they return home.

"I had the pleasure of meeting in camps over there five young men who were baptized and confirmed in my church at Louisville."

OUR BACCHANALIANISM NOT WANTED IN CHINA

Peking "Leader" Asks Why We Should Dump Brewers on Orient

The following editorial appeared in The Peking Leader, December 18, under the caption, "Why Must the United States Brewers Come to China?—A Good Case for America to Act."

Last Friday we published the following wireless message from San Francisco:

There will be a general exodus of brewers from the United States to China, according to statement made by Rudolph Samet, president of the California State Brewers' Association. He said: "We are looking to China as the best place to locate. I am going to China in a few days to arrange for the construction of a two-million-dollar plant for one brewery. Other brewers are making similar arrangements."

We admire the self-complacent confidence of these brewers, but why on earth must they come to China? We have had enough of the Indian opium; we are still wallowing in the dust of the foreign cigarettes; and now we are promised a veritable deluge of intoxicants.

China welcomes all forms of profitable but healthy trade and manufactures, but we certainly have no desire to drive out the opium fiend and then usher in the drunken sot. What do the brewers think China is? A happy hunting ground for all money-makers and health-destroyers? Apparently they think the Chinese are too sober, despite their own production of wines and spirits, and so must educate them to the delights of Western Bacchanalianism. Why don't Westerners come to teach us better manners than indulging in opium, cigarettes, intoxicants, etc.? Western civilization must be poor indeed if it has nothing better to teach us than these unedifying habits!

In view of the fact that Article II of the 1880 commercial treaty between the United States and this country commits both countries to prevent the importation of opium by each others nationals into each others territories, we hope the United States Government will put an immediate ban on such pernicious activities in this country.

Services in the Orient

The following announcement has been issued by Mr. John W. Wood:

Every year sees an increasing number of tourists going to the Orient. Church people visiting Japan will be glad to know that they will find English services as follows:

In Tokyo: Holy Trinity Cathedral, Tsukiji: Holy Communion, 8 A. M.; Morning Prayer and Sermon, 11 A. M.; Evening Prayer, 6 P. M.

In Kyoto: St. Mary's Church, Okazaki, near Miyako: Holy Communion, 8 A. M.; Evening Prayer and Sermon, 4 P. M.

C. P. C. Meeting

The regular monthly meeting of the Church Periodical Club will be held on Monday, February 24, at 11 o'clock, in the Parish House of the Church of the Heavenly Rest, 3 East Forty-fifth Street, New York. The speaker will be Rt. Rev. Nathaniel S. Thomas, Bishop of Wyoming.

ORGAN HIGH EXPLOSIVE, SAID DR. PERCY DEARMER

Connecticut Church Music Society Organized at Berkeley

MIDDLETOWN, CONNECTICUT.—A meeting of great interest to church musicians was that recently held at the Berkeley Divinity School, when a good number of organists and choirmasters of the diocese assembled for the organization of the Connecticut Church Music Society. The day was spent in conference on different aspects of music in the Church, and the speakers were Dr. Percy Dearmer, lecturer at Berkeley, Dr. Horatio Parker of the Yale School of Music, and Wallace Goodrich, dean of the Boston Conservatory of Music.

Dr. Dearmer, speaking on "Church Music From the Parson's Point of View," said, in part:

"Art consists in doing things well, but most choirs prefer to do pretentious things badly, not recognizing that all art is limited by the materials at hand. The true artist accepts his limitations and prefers practical simplicity to efforts after unattainable elaboration. One of the limitations of church music is that it should give the people what they like, music in their own vernacular. Folk songs are an important basis of good church music, as they have the vernacular as background. 'Old Hundred' is an example of a tune with this merit.

"The organ is a great temptation to the choirmaster, and should be regarded as a sort of dangerous high explosive and used accordingly.

"English and American church music offers nothing that any continental musician pays any attention to. Continental music is brought to England, but no English church music finds its way across the channel.

"A great field for musical achievement has been offered by the cathedral foundations, but musical England has been unaffected by its offerings. A movement of reform has been well begun in England, however, with the establishment of two plain-song societies, a committee under the direction of the Bishop of Oxford, and the recent report of the archbishops, appointing a commission to examine the state of church music.

"The work of a church music society should be to make research for the best music, to publish 'white lists' of good music available and to publish music not attainable through the regular channels."

Dr. Horatio Parker, who presided, led the discussion which followed. "A hymn tune," he said, "is the lowest form of musical life. Bach used hymn tunes, but never made any. The congregation should be given music that it needs."

In the afternoon, Dean Goodrich spoke upon the use of the organ, and feared the effect of the moving picture palace on church music. When a church organist is playing in a picture theatre during the week he is likely to carry the spirit of the theatre into the Sunday service.

The following were elected officers of the society: Patrons, the Rt. Rev. Chauncey B. Brewster, the Rt. Rev. E. C. Acheson, Dean Ladd of the Berkeley Divinity School, Dr. Percy Dearmer, and Dean Wallace Goodrich; honorary president, Dr. Horatio Parker; president, C. C. Brainard of Hartford; vice-president, Alvin Bruel of Bridgeport; secretary, W. R. Cowles of New Haven; treasurer, Mrs. E. C. Acheson of Middletown; executive committee, the officers, and Mrs. W. P. Ladd and H. J. Reed.

PARISH INCOME INCREASED 150% THROUGH CANVASS

Amazing Result Brought About by Mr. Clark and Senator Lusk

CORTLAND, NEW YORK.—Quite a remarkable Every Member Canvass was held in Grace Church, Cortland, New York, the Rev. Arthur H. Beaty, rector, on February 2, 1919. This is an old conservative parish that had gone on year after year in old fashioned ways and seemed quite satisfied to continue doing so. The Rev. Franklin J. Clark, secretary of the forward movement of the Board of Missions, came at the request of the rector, Sunday, January 19, and preached in the morning and held a conference with the congregation in the parish house at the close of the evening service. Mr. Clark aroused so much enthusiasm that a men's dinner was agitated and was held in the parish house Friday, January 31.

The guild prepared for sixty-five and one hundred and twenty-five came out to the dinner. The Rev. Mr. Clark was the principal speaker at the dinner. Other speakers were Mr. Paul Paine, librarian of the Syracuse Public Library; the Rev. O. D. Smith of All Saints' Church, Syracuse; and Senator Lusk of Cortland.

At the suggestion of Senator Lusk, the rector's salary was to be made $2,000 instead of $1,200 if they raised the money. So thirty-six men made up eighteen teams and received Holy Communion in a body Sunday morning and after lunch went out, to report later at the evening service.

When the men went out there were 120 pledges with a parish income of $2,000 and almost nothing for missions. When the men returned there were two hundred and seventy-five pledges, with many more to be seen and an income of $4,500, also $650 pledged for missions—a total of $5,150.

So the result of the canvass is that the church's income increased 150 per cent—from $2,000 to $5,150, and is more than double what it ever has been in the history of the parish.

The apportionment for missions is oversubscribed. The rector's salary has been raised from $1200 to $2000. A men's discussion group on missions has been formed and will meet every Sunday. A men's club of one hundred men is being organized and will do a big work in the Church and city. At least fifty men, who never before took any interest in the Church are showing an interest and taking part in the work.

The parish work has been lifted up and put upon a strong basis, with the men of the church believing that the work of the church is a man's job.

The credit for the aroused interest and enthusiasm and for the splendid showing made by the parish must be given principally to the Rev. Mr. Clark, ably seconded by Senator Lusk of Cortland.

MRS. CLINTON R. WOODRUFF DIES AFTER BRIEF ILLNESS

Was a Churchwoman Active in Many Helpful Organizations

PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA.—Funeral services for Mrs. Anna F. Woodruff, wife of Clinton Rogers Woodruff, who died suddenly last week at the Presbyterian Hospital of an attack of meningitis, were held at St. Clement's Church.

Mrs. Woodruff was a member of the Acorn and Sedgely Clubs, and at the time of her death was the president of the Eighth Ward School Board, of which she had been a member for fifteen years. One of the founders of the Cushman Club for Actresses, she had held the office of treasurer for many years. She was also treasurer of the Independence Square unit of the Red Cross and an active member of the St. Martin's House Auxiliary. Mrs. Woodruff was also actively identified with the several Liberty Loan drives and with various movements for the relief of the oppressed peoples of Europe and Asia. She was a member of the Serbian and Armenian committees, and with her husband was deeply interested in the Lithuanian people. Her memberships in clubs like the Play and Players were numerous and represented her interest in Philadelphia and its activities.

MEMORIAL TO ROOSEVELT

Trinity Hall Recreation Center Is Opened at Washington

WASHINGTON, D. C.—A recreation house for sailors, soldiers, and marines, dedicated as a memorial to Theodore Roosevelt, was opened last week at Trinity Parish Hall. Invitations to the opening exercises were issued in the name of the Bishop of Washington, chairman of the Social Service Conference, and the Navy League. Recreation rooms, a library, and a dormitory are available for the use of any sailor, soldier, or marine visiting the capital.

It is probable that Trinity Parish Hall will be maintained as a permanent recreation center.

EX-PRESIDENT TAFT HAS DEFENSE FOR THE Y. M. C. A.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—In his address at the opening of the new Y. M. C. A. building on Lincoln's Birthday, Mr. William H. Taft made special reference to the criticism heaped upon the Y. M. C. A., and said the criticism was due to the fact that when a terrific strain is relieved there must be some one or something made the victim of a "grouch," and in the case of the war it was the Y. M. C. A. Mr. Taft reminded his audience that while the "Y" was divinely inspired it is still a human organization.

The building when finally completed will cost $1,000,000.

Inter-Church World Movement

The general committee which was appointed to launch the Inter-Church World Movement of North America met at Wallace Lodge February 5 and 6. The committee perfected the following permanent organization:

Cyrus H. McCormick, chairman; F. W. Ayer, Fred B. Smith, vice-chairmen; William B. Millar, recording secretary.

An executive committee was organized with Dr. John R. Mott as chairman, and Dr. S. Earl Taylor was elected as chief executive officer, with the title of general secretary.

Mr. Wood Is in China

Mr. John W. Wood has spent the last few weeks in the Philippine Islands and is now in Hankow, China. From March 2 to March 27 he will be in the District of Anking, and from March 27 to April 27 in Shanghai. After visiting Shanghai Mr. Wood hopes at the end of April to make a hurried trip to Peking and down through Korea to Japan. He will then go to Kyoto where in company with Bishop Tucker, who has just returned from Siberia, he will visit our mission stations in that district.

EIGHT DIOCESES PLANNED FOR STATE OF NEW YORK

Matter Will Probably Be Brought Before Next General Convention

ALBANY, NEW YORK.—The decision of the conference between the bishops and committees of the several dioceses of the state at Albany recently is that New York State should be redivided to form eight dioceses. Their conclusions have been forwarded to the proper authorities and will be brought before the spring conventions of the several dioceses. Special committees will deal with the difficult legal questions that naturally arise, and with the division of existing endowment funds. It is hoped that the matter may be brought before the General Convention in Detroit this year.

The proposed division unites the northern counties of Albany and Central New York to form a new diocese; combines some of the western counties of Albany with some of the eastern counties of Central New York to form another new diocese; and divides Western New York into two dioceses, including in one of these one county now in Central New York. In arranging the boundaries existing systems of communication were a chief consideration.

The report of the committee recommends redistribution as follows: The Diocese of New York to remain unchanged; the Diocese of Long Island to remain unchanged; the Diocese of Albany to include these counties: Columbia, Rensselaer, Washington, Greene, Albany, Schenectady, Saratoga, Warren, Clinton, and Essex, excepting the towns of Saint Armand and North Elba; the Diocese of Utica to include these counties: Oneida, Herkimer, Hamilton, Fulton, Montgomery, Schoharie, Otsego, and Delaware, excepting the parish of Christ Church, Deposit; the Diocese of Syracuse to include these counties: Oswego, Onondaga, Madison, Cortland, Chenango, Broome, Tioga, Chemung, Tompkins, and Cayuga, also the parish of Christ Church, Deposit; the Diocese of Rochester to include these counties: Monroe, Wayne, Livingston, Ontario, Yates, Steuben, Seneca and Schuyler; the Diocese of Buffalo to include these counties: Niagara, Erie, Orleans, Genesee, Wyoming, Chautauqua, Cattaraugus, and Allegany; the Diocese of Watertown to include these counties: Lewis, Jefferson, St. Lawrence and Franklin, together with the towns of Saint Armand and North Elba in Essex County.

It has been estimated by the committee that the proposed new Diocese of Albany would have 92 parishes and missions with 17,000 communicants; Utica, 79 parishes and missions with 11,000 communicants; Syracuse, 91 parishes and missions with 15,000 communicants; Rochester, 77 parishes and missions with 14,000 communicants; Buffalo, 96 parishes and missions with 20,000 communicants; Watertown, 56 parishes and missions with 6,000 communicants.

The last division in the dioceses of the state was made in 1869 when Central New York was set off from Western New York. The new diocese reported to the first convention: 100 parishes and missions and 8,093 communicants. Each new diocese proposed has greater communicant strength save the Diocese of Watertown, which includes a sparsely settled portion of the state in which means of communication are few. There seems little doubt however that this region is likely steadily to increase in population.

RUSSIAN BABUSHKA SPEAKS AT ASCENSION OPEN FORUM

Madame Breshkovsky Deplores Lack of Education and Appeals for Funds

By a Member of the Staff

"Dear friends, dear American people, I am happy ———."

It was Catherine Breshkovsky speaking, and she stood on the rostrum at the Open Forum of the Church of the Ascension in New York. Out on Fifth Avenue the crowd surged up to the church door while the police tried to keep order. Through the courtesy of the rector, I had slipped in by way of the rectory and stood talking with Madame until a path was cleared for her through the crowded aisles and she could make her way into the church. She pushed ahead so fast that I heard one of her companions murmur "One never can keep up with Babushka!"

Every pew was packed; the aisles were a solid mass of humanity; people sat on the chancel steps, in the pulpit. I saw a learned divine from Union Seminary sitting on the sanctuary step. The choir in red vestments led the singing of the hymns of brotherhood from The Book of Common Worship. A Russian sang native music. Babushka went into the rostrum.

"I am happy," she said, "to be in such a beautiful church where people are good to each other and where they are friends. I have never been in an Episcopal church before, but I feel as I do in my own church. I am happy, but there is much mischief in the world, much misfortune all over the world, and it is especially bad in Russia. But I am not afraid that we shall never get out of this evil, for God gave us reason and if we find out the root of the evil and if we become conscious of our faults, we can make things better."

"Russia is a very rich country," she continued, "yet she is poor and unhappy. Our people are religious, good hearted, strong, yet unhappy."

She then described the dense ignorance of the people, speaking with feeling of how easily they had been misled by the traitors and criminals who had come "to spoil the revolution and to make out of beauty days of disorder and misfortune." Madame Breshkovsky deplored the failure on the part of the educated to share their superior knowledge with the less privileged. She said that in the years since the first revolution there had been a growing tendency to hold the students back from any contact with the peasants and the working men, and she blamed upon this selfishness of the intelligentsia much of the misfortune of today. She deplored the class jealousy, saying, "There can never be peace and brotherhood with jealousy. We Christians talk but we do not act."

The Little Grandmother closed by pleading for contributions for her fund to feed, clothe, educate and train for self-support the four million Russian children made orphans by the war. "After years of struggle and civil war nobody has confidence in anybody," she said. "I want you to show tokens of friendship, palpable tokens, this will help more than anything else. . . . If you do not help, there will be struggle, bloodshed and moans for a long time."

After her address, she answered a few of the many questions put to her, but the greater part she refused to answer because they led her into the deep waters of politics. She said, in answer to one question, that she had seen the documents proving that Trotsky and Lenine had taken German money and that it was common knowledge in Russia that they had done so; and in answer to, "Are the Bolsheviks traitors?" she said, "Are those who sell their country traitors?" Then someone proposed that they raise a sum of money for Babushka. Pledges were made, and then a woman's voice called out, "Dr. Grant, let's pass the hat." "It is easy to see where you come from," Dr. Grant replied. "You are in an Episcopal church where they pass plates, not hats—but if anyone will trust his hat, go to it."

And go to it they did. Two or three men began it, and then another woman called out, "May I take off my hat in church?" The audience, without waiting for the rector, gave her permission, and the collection progressed with great enthusiasm. When she left Madame Breshkovsky took with her a generous gift for her fund.

Our Weekly News Letters

MONTANA

Lieut. Evans Home.—Lieut. John Crippen Evans, candidate for holy orders and missionary in the Bitter Root valley with residence at Hamilton, having spent some four months in the artillery-officers training school at Camp Zachary Taylor, and having secured his commission, has returned and resumed his missionary work. He was able to cross the continental divide in his missionary Ford January 21—a very unusual thing.

Notes.—The Rev. T. W. Bennett, who for several years has been doing rural missionary work in the Madison Valley, with residence at Jeffers, took up his duties as rector of St. James' Church, Dillon, on the third Sunday in January.

The Rev. H. S. Gately of the Church of the Holy Spirit, Missoula, absent on a leave, is taking duty on the troop ships with returning soldiers, under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A.

Several of the clergy of the diocese have been laid up with the influenza, one or two being still afflicted with it. Services have been resumed in practically all of the churches in the diocese.

Bishop Faber Ill.—Bishop Faber has been in St. Peter's Hospital, Helena, for a few days, having had a slight operation from which he is speedily recovering and hopes soon to be at his work again.

S. D. HOOKER.

WESTERN COLORADO

Bishop Touret's Recovery.—Churchmen in Western Colorado are glad of reports of the success of the operation recently sustained by Bishop Touret. It was undergone by him at Rochester, Minnesota, and was performed by Dr. Mayo. The whole Church will rejoice to think of their missionary bishop for this important and difficult field being restored to his place of great usefulness in the Church.

Promise of Parochial Independence at Grand Junction.—So great has been the advance of the work in St. Matthew's Church, Grand Junction, in the year of residence of the Rev. Philip A. Easley that it is very certain that the parish will become independently self-supporting before long. At the men's dinner held at LaCourt Hotel the evening of January 10, an enthusiasm was developed which would do credit to any parish in the whole Church. There were 35 representative men present of all lines of business and professional life. On the Sunday following, an every member canvass was held which showed most enviable results. A feature of the dinner was that after the formal speaking of the evening several of those present rose to the impromptu request of the missionary and in short pithy speeches gave their reasons for their interest. It was indeed an "experience meeting" of great spontaneity and sincerity.

KANSAS

Bishop Starts New Movement.—At the annual meeting of the Men's Club of Grace Cathedral Bishop Wise planted the seed of what promises to become a city-wide movement with the solving of the vital problems that are clamoring for immediate attention as its sole purpose. In his address Bishop Wise not only urged his audience, made up of prominent Topeka business men, to follow out the examples of practical Christianity, but outlined the plan by which he declared every force within the city can be brought into action to help solve these vital problems.

John N. Guild, secretary of the Kansas City, Missouri, Chamber of Commerce, delivered an inspiring address on the practical working methods of commercial, civic and industrial organizations, and pointed out how such an organization as that outlined may be formed. By the fusion of all organizations in Topeka into one big body of men and women, intent upon meeting the readjustment problems face to face, the social, civic and industrial problems can be ironed out satisfactory to every person concerned, he said. With the Chamber of Commerce taking the initiative in bringing about a complete understanding between capital and labor, as well as between all other forces that are today working at odds, the strife that is now looming up on the horizon can be settled amicably.

Ordination.—The Rev. Geo. R. Hiatt was advanced to the priesthood by Bishop Wise, January 22, at the Church of the Good Shepherd, Topeka, Kansas. Dean Kaye presented the candidate and read the Litany. The Rev. Chester Wood preached the sermon. Mr. Hiatt was made deacon last June, and since then has been a member of the associate mission at Topeka, holding week day services at Christ Hospital and Sundays at the Church of the Good Shepherd and at Wamego. CHESTER WOOD.

LONG ISLAND

Memorial Service for Col. Roosevelt.—A union memorial service was held at Trinity Church, Northport, in honor of the late Theodore Roosevelt. Dean Treder, of the Cathedral of the Incarnation at Garden City, delivered the address.

The Rev. G. C. Groves, rector of St. Stephen's Church, Port Washington, officiated at a service in which the church was crowded to the doors, many people coming from the neighboring villages. At Huntington over 1,000 friends and neighbors of Colonel Roosevelt paid homage to his memory, at the Palace Theatre. Forty-six different organizations were represented on the platform, and the Rev. C. E. Cragg of St. John's Church was one of the speakers. At Forest Hills an enormous meeting was held, the speaker being Mr.

February 22, 1919

L. F. Abbott, a companion on the Roosevelt tour of the world, and now engaged in writing, "Impressions of Theodore Roosevelt." Here it was that Colonel Roosevelt delivered his world-famous speech on "Fifty-fifty Americanism."

Special services were also held at St. John's, Far Rockaway, for Colonel Roosevelt, and four young men of the parish, who have made the supreme sacrifice.

At St. George's Church, Long Island City, the rector, the Rev. H. Lonsdale, spoke on the life and character of the former President. In many other Long Island churches, these services were held.

Roosevelt Memorial Services in Brooklyn Churches.—In the Church of the Holy Trinity, Dr. Henry Washburn was the speaker; at the Church of the Messiah a service was held under the auspices of Troop 108 of Boy Scouts of America, and appropriate services were held at St. John's, St. Luke's, the Church of the Nativity and Christ Church, Bedford Avenue.

At the Church of the Incarnation, Dr. Bacchus, rector emeritus, in a few words summed up all that could be said, when comparing Colonel Roosevelt to St. Paul, in his sense of responsibility to God he quoted, "With me it is a very small thing, that I should be judged of you or of man's judgment: He that judgeth me is the Lord."

CHICAGO

Deanery Meets.—On Monday, February 10, the Northwestern Deanery held its winter meeting at the Church of the Atonement. The speaker in the morning was Stuart P. Walsh of the Boy Scouts of America, who gave a very interesting talk on scout work in the city, and spoke of the financial campaign which the Scouts expect to make in the near future. In the afternoon the Rev. W. B. Stoskopt discussed the question of "Methods of Administering the Holy Communion by Intinction." Dr. McLauchlan, Dr. Stewart, Dean DeWitt and others spoke from the floor.

Memorial Service at St. Ann's Church.—On Sunday, February 9, memorial services were held at St. Ann's Church, for Lorne Gustafson, who was killed in action in France. Mr. Gustafson was for seven years president of the acolytes guild at St. Ann's. The preacher was the Rev. F. E. Bernard, now at Freeport, Illinois, who was rector of St. Ann's Church up until last year. The present rector, the Rev. Thomas M. Baxter, was the celebrant.

CHARLES L. STREET.

ALBANY

A Quiet Day.—A quiet day for the clergy of the capitol district was held on Wednesday, February 12, at St. Paul's Church, Albany. It began with a celebration of Holy Communion at 8 a. m. and three addresses were made during the day by the conductor, the Rev. P. Gavan Duffy, S.D.C., of New York. The general subject was, "Religious Reconstruction—Essentials After the War."

MINNEAPOLIS

Fathers and Sons Dinners.—In connection with almost every church in Minneapolis fathers and sons dinners were held during the week of February 9-15. The greater number of these dinners were held on Lincoln's Birthday, and in every instance the attendance was very large. At several of the gatherings speakers attending the congress of the League to Enforce Peace made the chief addresses. Among these was the Hon. Henry Morgenthau, who spoke at the Hennepin Avenue Methodist Church. The interest in these annual gatherings is shown by the fact that all the daily papers reported the programs and addresses on their front pages.

Roosevelt Memorial Services.—On Sunday afternoon several of the churches in the diocese held special services in memory of the late Theodore Roosevelt. At Christ Church, Red Wing, such a service was combined with a Boy Scout service conducted by the Rev. Walter S. Howard of St. Paul. At the service held in St. Luke's, Minneapolis, the address was given by the Rev. Richard S. Read of Holy Trinity Church, Minneapolis. At his morning service Dr. Freeman of St. Mark's took for his theme, "Theodore Roosevelt, Exemplar."

CALIFORNIA

Convention Is Held.—The sixty-ninth annual convention of the diocese was held in Grace Cathedral, San Francisco, on February 4, 5 and 6 and at the same time the fourteenth annual meeting of the house of churchwomen was held in Cathedral Hall.

The convention week began with a dinner for the house of churchwomen at the Bellevue Hotel and the clerical seminar dinner in Grace Cathedral Parish House participated in by fifty of the clergy, on Monday evening. At both, the addresses were on timely topics bearing upon the new post-war problems.

Under the title, "The House of Churchwomen Progressive," Bishop Nichols sketched the history of that valuable adjunct of diocesan life and activity and said:

"This year our house of churchwomen holds its fourteenth meeting, and the outstanding fact of all its record is that it has had an attendance of delegates that has tested the capacity of every one of its meeting places, and an interest in its proceedings and a place and influence in our convention week that have in some respects re-infused the whole week with new life and zest, to say nothing of many lines of promotion of the diocese in general."

On the second day the following were elected: To fill vacancies on Board of Directors of the Corporation: the Ven. J. A. Emery, Mr. George B. Scott, Mr. J. K. Armsby; on Board of Christian Education: the Rev. David Evans, the Rev. W. H. Cambridge, Prof. R. S. Minor; for the Social Service Commission: the Rev. J. H. Oehlhoff, the Rev. Lloyd B. Thomas, Mr. Fred T. Foster; for representatives on provincial boards: missions, the Rev. W. R. H. Hodgkin; Social Service, the Rev. Geo. H. B. Wright; Religious Education, Rev. H. H. Powell, D.D.; Standing Committee; the Rev. Messrs. W. H. Cambridge, John A. Emery, J. Wilmer Gresham, Edward L. Parsons, D.D., Messrs. J. P. Langhorne, L. F. Monteagle, G. A. Pope, H. C. Wyckoff; Board of Church Extension: the Rev. Messrs. Alex. Allen, W. R. H. Hodgkin, H. E. Montgomery, H. St. George Buttrum, Messrs. E. D. Beylard, A. J. Dibblee, B. A. McAllister, Vincent Neale; deputies to General Convention: the Rev. Messrs. Alex. Allen, J. Wilmer Gresham, Edward L. Parsons, H. H. Powell, Messrs. Wm. H. Crocker, Frederic M. Lee, Louis F. Monteagle, H. C. Wyckoff.

The bishop appointed Mr. James P. Langhorne chancellor of the diocese and the Rev. W. A. Brewer registrar.

NEW YORK

Dr. Slattery Discusses the New Hymnal.

A meeting on the new hymnal was held at the Church Club on Monday, February 10, which filled the club rooms to overflowing and kept the company of clergy and laity gathered there in absorbed interest until the end of a long evening. The president of the club, Mr. H. L. Hobart, turned the meeting over to Dr. Slattery and Dr. Noble, organist of St. Thomas's Church, both members of the commission on revision of the hymnal.

In answer to questions frequently asked as to whether the new hymnal was authorized and approved for the use of the Church from the time of its publication, there could be no question that the answer was an emphatic yes. The resolution of General Convention in 1916 made it quite clear that the new hymnal then presented by the commission to the convention was authorized and that the commission had full authority in presenting the book to the Church to make such changes in details as it felt necessary and to provide musical editions of the book. These changes have been confined to the omission of one or two new hymns which upon second thought the commission believed to be not quite up to the standard and the addition of a few patriotic hymns which had been found useful throughout the country during the war. The processional, "St. Patrick's Breastplate," was also added. These changes the commission believes will properly be included in the word "details," since they felt quite sure that these changes would meet with universal approval. The Church Pension Fund is trustee of the musical hymnal; it has undertaken the publication of the book to help the Church rather than to help itself.

Archdeacon Grieg of Worcester, just arrived in this country, was welcomed by the club and closed the evening by an address in which he commended the new hymnal warmly.

Washington Service for Sons of Revolution.—The twenty-ninth annual service of the Sons of the Revolution commemorative of the birth of George Washington was held last Sunday afternoon at St. Bartholomew's Church. Not only did the Sons of the Revolution attend in a body, marching to their seats after the clergy and choir, but other patriotic societies also attended and sat in special pews reserved for them. The service was very beautiful. Dean Robbins preached, making many references to the League of Nations and the new hope that it gave to the world.

Rector of Zion and St. Timothy Instituted.—On Sunday morning Bishop Greer instituted the Rev. Frederick Burgess, Jr., as rector of the Church of Zion and St. Timothy. It will be recalled that Dr. Lubeck resigned the rectorship last spring. Mr. Burgess is the son of the Bishop of Long Island, and has served as assistant in the parish for a number of years. He has been very warmly welcomed by his parishioners and the service on Sunday was a time of great rejoicing. Bishop Burgess was the preacher. "Zion and St. Timothy's Church is now one hundred years old," said one of the vestrymen in commenting on the event, "and I predict a renewal of youth under the new rector."

Chaplain Herbert Shipman Coming Home.—The Rev. Herbert Shipman, D.D., rector of the Church of the Heavenly Rest and senior chaplain of the First Army, is soon to return to this country.

Girls' Friendly Rally.—The missionary rally of the Girls' Friendly Society was held in All Angels' Church on the evening of January 19. Associates and members gathered in the parish house and from there marched into the church. Deaconess Kent of St. Paul's, Hankow, addressed the meeting.

BALTIMORE

Lenten Services.—For some years past noonday services have been held at two of the downtown churches of Baltimore, St. Paul's and the Church of the Messiah. These have been largely attended by busy people and by some who were not busy and should have been at their parish churches. The services and addresses have been of a high order and have proved attractive. They will be no less so this year. The programs, which have just been issued, show that the high standard set in former years will be maintained. At old St. Paul's some of the best speakers amongst the local clergy will be heard, together with the Rev. George Craig Stewart of Evanston, Illinois, Drs. Roland Cotton Smith, H. Percy Silver, and William E. Gardner of New York, the Rev. Robert Johnston of Philadelphia, and Bishops Harding of Washington and Fiske of Central New York. At the Church of the Messiah, where the services are in charge of the Churchman's Club, the list of speakers includes Bishops Murray of Maryland, Mikell of Atlanta, Darst of Wilmington, McCormick of Western Michigan and Du Moulin of Ohio, and also Dr. Van Allen of Boston, and Dr. Atwater of Akron, Ohio.

Council of Churches.—A Council of Churches has just been organized in Baltimore to serve as a sort of religious clearing-house, to avoid duplication of effort, and to secure concerted action by all religious bodies so far as may be possible without sacrifice of principle. Fifteen denominations of Christians have united in this organization, and many charitable and philanthropic societies will be correlated with it. An attempt will be made to raise $10,000 a year for the first two years to meet the expenses which will need to be incurred. For the present the administration will be in the hands of a committee of three and the headquarters will be at the Y. M. C. A. building.

ARIZONA

Convocation Date Changes.—The date of the meeting of convocation has been changed from January 21 to April 29. It will be held in Grace Church, Tucson.

Bishop's Car Breaks Down.—In a recent trip to Globe, over the 120-mile Apache Trail, from Phoenix, the car in which the bishop was riding broke down near the Roosevelt Dam. A delay of several hours before another car could arrive from Globe, 40 miles away, caused the bishop to reach his destination late in the evening. The next day he preached at a victory service on "The Responsibilities of Peace and War," and celebrated the Holy Communion. In spite of the discouragements caused by the influenza the vicar, the Rev. F. J. Bloy, has done excellent work during the five months he has been in Globe.

A Parish at Work.—Christ Church, Jerome, has been conspicuous in its social and patriotic work. The vicar, the Rev. H. C. Smith, is often called on to preside at public meetings and to make speeches, as well as to do all kinds of practical work. The warden also, Mr. W. H. Archdeacon, is most active in public matters, especially in the Red Cross. He has also been chairman of the Four-Minute Speakers. The Jerome Associated Charities had its inception in a vestry meeting of the church, and has become a full-fledged organization, with representation on its governing body from various interests in the community. It did most effective work during the recent epidemic, the vicar acting as special representative in dealing with many cases.

NEWARK

Large Attendances at Archdeaconry Meetings.—The winter archdeaconry meetings of Newark at Grace Church, Orange, on February 3, and of Paterson, at Holy Communion Church, February 4, were very well attended. Forty of the clergy were present at the first named, the subjects being "Prayer and Teaching Our People How to Pray," and "How to Induce Our People to Read More Substantial Books About Religion, Church and the Bible." The session was addressed by the Rev. James T. Lodge of Montclair, the Rev. Dr. Frank B. Reazor of West Orange; the Rev. Robert W. Trenbath of Upper Montclair; and the Rev. Charles T. Walkley of Orange.

At the Paterson meeting the subjects of the afternoon address and evening conference were "Practical Steps Towards Greater Christian Unity" and "Support of the Clergy," respectively. James R. Strong of Short Hills, president of the diocesan Church Club, spoke on the work of the club in raising money with which to supplement the meager salaries of clergymen.

Church Commemorates Sixty-Eighth Anniversary.—Christ Church, Newark, commemorated on February 2 the sixty-eighth anniversary of its founding. The Rev. Howard W. Gernand of Millburn, formerly rector of the church, preached the sermon and celebrated the Holy Communion. The evening sermon was by the Rev. Louis W. Pitt, deacon in charge of the parish. Under the leadership of Mr. Pitt a plan for making the church a center for community work has been launched, with emphasis placed upon Americanization work among foreign-born peoples.

Large Need Met by Parish House at Bergenfield.—The large parish house which was built for the mission church at Bergenfield, particularly for the work among the soldiers at Camp Merritt close at hand, is now most useful as great companies of soldiers are brought to Camp Merritt before being sent to places where they are discharged, and they are allowed more liberty than when embarking for France. The church and parish house beside it are rendering very large service under the Rev. Edgar L. Cook and those associated with him. The opportunity for such service seems likely to continue for sometime.

Seven Deacons Ready for Ordination.—During the last week in January seven deacons were examined for priest's orders by as many examining chaplains, and the following week they were recommended by seven members of the Standing Committee to the bishop for Ordination.

GRACE MCKINNEY.

COLORADO

Diocesan Council Meets.—For the first time in its history the council met this year in February. And the change of date seemed to be the cause of renewed interest and increased attendance. The next meeting is to be in Pueblo and thereafter alternately only in Denver. The most interesting part of the council was the reading of reports, not, as usual, a dry schedule of figures but an extemporaneous ten-minute explanation of each particular report.

Amongst new legislation the council provided that any parish or mission failing to contribute to the Clergy Pension Fund should be disfranchised and lose its vote in the council. Also recommendation was made that the diocese should be made co-terminous with the state and thus absorb western Colorado and further that it was useless to make suggestions about restricting provinces till the provincial system was given some real powers and responsibilities.

The following elections took place: the Rev. Messrs. Foster, Walters and Taft and Messrs. Rattle, Fairbanks and Hudston to the Standing Committee; the Rev. Messrs. Ingley, Shutt, Schofield and Bonell, with Messrs. Ponsford, Pershing, Cuthbertson and Clatworthy to the General Convention. Charles H. Hanington was elected one of the diocesan trustees in place of E. A. Peters, deceased. Messrs. Hudston, Ponsford and Shutt were reelected.

Canon Douglas spoke in defense of the new hymnal and the Rev. C. C. Rollit on behalf of the Board of Missions. Bishop Johnson made a notable address recommending certain special offerings to the churches, suggesting Wednesday evenings in Lent for Lenten observances all through the diocese, extolling the thirty able managers of the Convalescent Home, and explaining lucidly the system which places every church institution under control of the diocesan trustees acting in conjunction with its own board and finally calling for minutes in memory of the late Bishop C. S. Olmsted, Bishop Williams of Nebraska and Messrs. E. A. Peters and Joseph Thatcher, all closely and importantly connected with the Diocese of Colorado and all deeply lamented.

SOUTHERN VIRGINIA

Noonday Services.—The rector of Christ Church, Roanoke, with a body of men from his congregation have worked up a plan for Lenten services to be held in one of the downtown theaters. The hour for the services will be 1:15 to 1:45 p. m. Prominent clergy of the Church and also of the other communions have been engaged to speak at these services. This is the first attempt to hold noon-Lenten services, and it is anticipated that they will be met with a hearty and enthusiastic response.

Chapel of the Good Shepherd (Colored), Lynchburg.—The Chapel of the Good Shepherd, built about ten years ago, has been greatly encumbered by debt. At a meeting held a short time ago, at which were representatives of the three parishes of Lynchburg, the whole matter of the debt was discussed and in a short time the greater portion of it was pledged to be paid at an early date. With the liquidation of this debt this splendid piece of church property will start on a career of untrammelled usefulness.

RHODE ISLAND

Social Problems.—Under the auspices of the First Baptist Church and Grace Episcopal Church, Providence, a series of Sunday afternoon gatherings at five o'clock was inaugurated on Feb. 2. Social problems of modern life are to be discussed by expert leaders, with the aim of gaining knowledge of the constructive activities of the city and state. The meetings are held in the vestry room of the First Baptist Church.

Roosevelt Memorial Services.—Roosevelt Memorial Services were held in almost all our churches throughout the diocese on Feb. 9. At St. John's Church, Providence, the rector, the Rev. John F. Scott, preached on "Liberty—One of Roosevelt's Ideals." At St. Stephen's Church, Providence, an elaborate musical service was held, with the Rev. W. F. B. Jackson as the preacher. A community service was held at Christ Church, Westerly, and the address was made by Mr. John R. Rathorn, editor of the Providence Journal.

JOSEPH M. HOBBS.

February 22, 1919

PHILADELPHIA

Roosevelt Memorial Services.—The churches of the city very generally observed Sunday the ninth, with addresses and sermons praising Mr. Roosevelt. In many instances his favorite hymns were sung: the music at the afternoon service at St. Luke and the Epiphany was specially noteworthy.

Mr. Pepper was one of the speakers at the great mass meeting at the opera house, in the afternoon. At the Church of St. Jude and the Nativity Mr. Gifford Pinchot made an address at the evening service.

Bishop Remington.—On Sunday Bishop Remington of South Dakota preached at St. Matthew's Church. On Monday he addressed the Clerical Brotherhood, making a special plea for the warm welcome, by the Church, of the men he has been working with overseas. The plan to send some of the chaplains through the churches at home, to make congregations realize what these men have been through, was earnestly urged.

The Inter-Church Federation.—The annual meeting of the Inter-Church Federation was held in St. Stephen's Church on Thursday evening, February 13. Dr. Carl Grammer, the rector, is president of this body. Special interest attaches to this meeting, in that the Rev. Dr. Delk, a Lutheran clergyman, has been held for libel in the charges he has made concerning the city police. The federation supports him fully. Dr. Grammer has also arraigned the police. He was made aware of the inadequate protection they afford, recently, when all the linen was stolen in broad day from his clothes line, and carried down one of the main streets of the city in a great sheet. The thief stopped with cleanliness, and did not attempt to take the next thing from the minister.

Musical Services.—The local chapter of the Guild of American Organists gave its first public service of the season at St. Mark's Church on February 13. The combined choirs of St. Mark's, St. Clement's and St. Peter's churches sang. A special "Requiem" composed in memory of F. Avery Jones, a former organist at St. Mark's, was rendered.

Forum at Holy Apostle's.—Mr. Robert Driggs spoke on "The Responsibility of Victory" on Sunday evening in the Newton Memorial Building of Holy Apostles' Parish. This was the first of a series of Sunday evening forum meetings to be held for the hundreds of enlisted men who attend the Ship and Tent Club which the Rev. Dr. Toop has organized, and which has grown to be a real power for good among the men. Young women of the parish serve refreshments during the social hour. The singing is led by the parish choir.

Lincoln's Birthday Service.—At Holy Trinity Church there was a special service of praise and thanksgiving on February 12. The choirs of Holy Trinity Lutheran Church of Morristown, joined in the service with Grace Church and Holy Trinity choirs.

Apportionments.—The Rev. Elliot White of St. Mark's Church read a most striking paper on the muddled method of church finance before the Clerical Brotherhood on Monday the tenth. He showed that there were seven treasurers for eight separate funds, and that the budget has never been accurately prepared for the year's work. He made an earnest plea for fuller deliberation, and for a simpler system.

Another Chaplaincy.—The Rev. H. A. F. Hoyt of St. John's Church, Cynwyd, has recently been made chaplain of the Order of Foreign Wars. Mr. Hoyt has seen much service as a chaplain in the national guard, and was given the rank of Major and assigned to help in recruiting last year.

IRVING A. MCGREW.

WEST MISSOURI

Ordination.—On the Feast of the Conversion of St. Paul, Mr. William Turton Travis was ordered deacon in Christ Church, St. Joseph, Missouri. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Benjamin Washburn, rector of St. Paul's Church, Kansas City. Mr. Travis was presented by the Rev. C. Hely-Molony, rector of Christ Church. The Rev. E. J. Craft, president of the Standing Committee of the diocese and rector of St. George's, Kansas City, was epistler and the Gospel was read by the newly ordered deacon. The bishop of the diocese ordained the candidate.

MEXICO

Archdeacon Mellen Resigns.—The Rev. A. H. Mellen, after five years of faithful service, has resigned as treasurer and archdeacon of the district. Mr. George Miller has kindly consented to assume the duties of treasurer, and the Rev. Samuel Salinas, of Nopala, state of Hidalgo, has been appointed by Bishop Aves as archdeacon. Mr. Mellen has accepted the agency of the American Bible Society for the Republic of Mexico and will continue to reside in Mexico City.

The Hooker School.—The Mary Josephine Hooker School, our church school for girls, began its scholastic year the third of February, as all schools in this country have their long vacation in the winter.

This school is admirably situated in Tacuba, a suburb of Mexico City. Our property consists of six and one-half acres, almost all of which is under cultivation. The corn, beans, and alfalfa raised on "our farm" each year are quite a help in the maintenance of the school. Our cow is also a great help, as milk here is very expensive and of poor quality. The pupils come in a great measure from our small missions and many of them are of pure Indian parentage, a few could not speak Spanish when they entered the school, having always used the native Indian dialect. They are a busy set of girls, for besides the regular school work they do their own laundry and all the house work. But they are very happy, for to them the Hooker School is a real home; one place where they are sure to get enough to eat and a comfortable bed on which to sleep.

F. F. MCKNIGHT.

MISSOURI

Death of Loyal Layman.—Word has been received of the death at Bartlesville, Oklahoma, February 4, of Walter T. Aylesbury. He will be sincerely mourned by a large company of business associates in St. Louis and by many who have been associated with him in the work of the Church. For many years he held a responsible position with the Terminal Railway Association. He was connected with the work and worship of the Church of the Ascension, St. Louis, some time as one of the wardens, and for a term of years as a vestryman. The burial was in St. Joseph, Missouri, where his former home had been.

In the Sign Language.—A recent issue of The Deaf Mutes' Journal, New York, reports how Lieutenant John Keble Cloud of the American Red Cross Ambulance Corps, recently returned from service along the French and Italian battlefronts, told his story before a crowded house in St. Louis in connection with the work of St. Thomas' mission, of which Lieutenant Cloud's father is the deaf mute pastor. Interest in the lecture was greatly enhanced by reason of the fact that the lieutenant gave it in the sign language, of which he has an excellent command. A large display of relics from the battle fields also greatly added to the interest.

Community Reception to Bishop Fiske.—At the Home Defense Rooms in Oriskany Falls, Bishop Fiske, who was on a visitation to the local parish, was the guest of honor of the village. Every creed was represented at this gathering and words of welcome were spoken by the pastors of the Methodist and Congregational churches. Large numbers availed themselves of the opportunity to meet the bishop. Bishop Fiske spoke upon "Religion After the War, or Church Reconstruction." His talk was pointed by many stories of the things heard and seen in camps and cantonments. He made it clear that there is an appalling ignorance among men everywhere concerning religious things. He urged that men put their religion at work and be more regular in attendance at church.

Church Unity Discussed.—Before the Utica Clerical Union meeting on February 10 the Rev. Robert J. Parker of Clinton presented, "Some Considerations on Church Unity." The writer stated that every churchman desired unity with earnestness. "A few years ago," he said, "the nation stood for peace at any price: we are in danger in the Church today of standing for unity at any price, and the wickedness of one is as great as the other. Oneness must come among Christians if it is to come among nations, and there should be two peace tables."

Army Chaplain Returns.—The Rev. Charles H. L. Ford has returned from Camp Eustis, Virginia, where he was chaplain of the 4th Anti-Aircraft Battalion, and preached last Sunday in Grace Church, Cortland, of which he was formerly rector.

Roosevelt Services.—The Church and its clergy played an important part in the two Roosevelt memorial services in Louisville, Sunday afternoon, February 9. Although the city's principal service was held at the First Christian Church, Bishop Woodcock presided and Dean McCreedy of Christ Church Cathedral, Louisville, read the lesson. The bishop who introduced both of the speakers of the occasion, paid tribute to Roosevelt as a loyal churchman and told how the first Sunday he had returned to Oyster Bay from the hospital last December he walked three miles to service in little Christ Episcopal Church in the village. The bishop also praised the former president for his thoughtfulness to his fellow parishioners, telling how when he was President he sent his yacht, the Mayflower, to Oyster Bay to give the Woman's Auxiliary of Christ Church a day's excursion up the sound, during the hot weather.

Military Memorial Service.—At Camp Zachary Taylor's military memorial service which was attended by nearly 5,000 soldiers the large choir of Calvary Church, Louisville, gave an elaborate musical program assisted by the Louisville male chorus. The Rev. Harris Mallinchrodt, rector of Calvary, pronounced both the invocation and benediction. He was formerly chaplain of the 138th Field Artillery and saw service with the Kentucky National Guard organization in France. PAUL J. BRINDEL.

Prominent Churchman Dead.—Mr. Aaron Waltz died January 30, in Miami, Florida and was buried February 5 in Hartford City, Indiana. Mr. Waltz was one of the men who helped to found St. Luke's Mission, Hartford City. As an earnest and sincere churchman, his interest not only encompassed the work of Hartford City but extended to the Church at large. He was often a delegate to the diocesan council and generously shared in all responsibilities possible. GRACE EVERETT.

BETHLEHEM

Ordination.—On Tuesday, February 11, in St. Stephen's Church, Wilkes-Barre, the Rev. James Lawrence Ware was advanced to the priesthood by Bishop Talbot. The candidate was presented by his father, the Rev. James P. Ware, rector of St. James' Church, Drifton. The Litany was said by the Rev. Ralph A. Weatherly, and the sermon was preached by the bishop of the diocese. Mr. Ware will continue as curate to the Rev. Frank William Sterrett, rector of St. Stephen's Church, Wilkes-Barre.

Annual Convention Meets.—The ninth annual diocesan convention was held at St. Mark's Church, Seattle, on February 4. Bishop Keator preached a powerful sermon on "The Duty of the Church in the Present Crisis." The way in which the Church is to meet the present crisis is by faithful use of present advantages: (1) By due realization of what the Church really is; that is, God's appointed means for bringing His Kingdom to the place where He would have it. (2) By the more faithful proclamation of the message committed to the Church. The faith of the Gospel in all its simplicity and power. Too often the Church has been using its creeds as offensive weapons, whereas they are necessary as a defensive armament, and are to be used as shields and bucklers, not as swords and spears. (3) By the Church's recovering her lost unity. True it is that unity of spirit is there all the while, but we have departed too far from it in quibbling about our various "isms." (4) By a return to the one charter of the Church and a more faithful performance of that commission given to her. The attendance in the convention and in the house of churchwomen was very satisfactory. Both houses sat together for the consideration of the report on the state of the Church.

On the evening of Tuesday the diocesan men's dinner was held in the parish house of St. Mark's, at which more than 100 men sat down. The subject proposed for discussion was the establishment of a Layman's League for the diocese, to bind together the laity for more active Church work. Live and ringing talks were made, and enthusiasm ran high.

The convention gave unanimous consent to the cathedral project proposed by St. Mark's Parish, Seattle, in which the vestry have offered to the diocese through the Standing Committee as the head church of the diocese the costly new St. Mark's now projected, at a cost of $500,000. The new Standing Committee of the diocese is as follows: The Rev. Sidney H. Morgan, president, the Rev. Dr. F. T. Webb, the Rev. Charles Y. Grimes, the Rev. C. S. Morrison; Lay: Messrs. Bernard Pelly, E. G. Anderson, J. B. Kinne, and George Hastings. For deputies to the General Convention were selected the Rev. Messrs. Bliss, Morgan, Morrison, and Hart; and as lay deputies, Messrs. N. B. Coffman, E. G. Anderson, George H. Plummer, and H. D. Wilson. The Rev. Rodney J. Arney was re-elected secretary of the diocese for the twentieth time, and Mr. N. B. Coffman was re-elected treasurer.

BOSTON

Patriotic Services.—Following the suggestion of the bishop in the Twenty Weeks Campaign most of the churches in Boston held special patriotic services last Sunday. Dr. Mann at Trinity Church delivered a Lincoln-Roosevelt eulogy.

With Lincoln, the preacher said, the one great purpose was to preserve the Union; and at the tragic close of his life there was widespread grief such as the American people had never shown before and perhaps will never show again. Lincoln entered office to face a life and death struggle.

Roosevelt, the speaker said, has left behind no such classic as the Gettysburg address, but he will always be thought of as one who worked hard in the Presidency because he loved the job, but also as the man who in the moment of great peril stood ready to give all that he had—and who entered into the grief of the people by giving his son.

Italian Bazaar.—An Italian bazaar will be held at Trinity Parish House on Wednesday, February 19, for the purpose of raising funds for new choir stalls at the Chapel of St. Francis, the headquarters of our work among the Italians of Boston.

Corporate Communion for Laymen.—The annual corporate Communion for the laymen of the diocese will be celebrated as usual on Washington's Birthday at 8:00 a. m., at St. Paul's Cathedral. Breakfast will be served in the cathedral rooms directly after the service. After breakfast the address will be by Bishop Davies of Western Massachusetts, who has just returned from France. The bishop's subject will be "Parish Responsibility."

The Cathedral Naval Service Club.—Mr. L. G. Smith writes as follows of this club: "In Queenstown, Liverpool, London, Brest, Paris, and in other cities of Europe where naval men gather, as well as in Norfolk, San Francisco, or Chicago, we are told that one frequently hears the remark: 'When you are in Boston, don't fail to visit 45 Bromfield Street.' In a letter recently received from an English mother, the writer tells one of our hostesses how she appreciates the kindness shown to her son, an English sailor, when he was a friendless stranger in Boston, last summer. More than a thousand men of our own navy, as well as many from the French navy and the English navy have enjoyed the good cheer at the club during this Christmas celebration. They have enjoyed the atmosphere produced by the evergreen decorations and the home suggestions of the tree, the singing of Christmas songs and the carols by the Radcliffe students."

The Chelsea School.—The Chelsea Community School of Religious Education finished last Monday its first term. The director, the Rev. George A. Barrow, Ph.D., rector of St. Luke's Parish, Chelsea, has been asked by the Committee on Education to give the next term two courses of lectures on the present condition of the less well known countries of the world, and the political and religious problems of those countries. The course will survey the condition in the near and the far east, and include lectures on South America and the Philippines.

In spite of the prevalence of influenza both among the faculty and students, the school has proved effective, and is planning for an enlarged curriculum and student body next year.

The Massachusetts Clerical Association.—The Massachusetts Clerical Association held its luncheon at the City Club where the Rev. Dr. D. D. Addison presided. The address was delivered by the Rev. Dr. Edward Cummings of Boston on "The League of Nations."

Prayers Old and New.—Dean Rousmaniere has compiled a fifteen-page pamphlet of prayers old and new. This valuable collection is complementary to the bishop's second booklet of prayers and readings. Copies of "Prayers Old and New" may be obtained at the Old Corner Book Store or the cathedral office for five cents a copy.

A Mission for Missions.—The Rev. Dr. Robert Patton was recently granted the opportunity to demonstrate the value of his plan for arousing interest in missions, in the old and important New England Parish of All Saints', Worcester. His success was remarkable. He aroused the parish to a new sense of its obligation to the Church as a whole and to its great world task.

All Saints' had been well prepared and organized for the mission by the rector, the Rev. Dr. Lewis G. Morris. On the Sunday afternoon following the mission an every member canvass of the parish was made under the direction of the rector. About one hundred people took part in the canvass and made about 900 calls. As a result, the number of contributors to parish support was increased from 465 to 907. The budget for parochial expenses which was prudently estimated at $20,500 was oversubscribed by about $200. The diocesan and general apportionments for missions of $4,000 was overpledged by $2,600.

In addition to all this, the rector asked the parish to guarantee the salary of a priest, $2,000 per annum, for three years, to be a member of the parish staff and do work in China. A few men of the parish at once assumed the responsibility for the salary of this special representative in the foreign field. New life has been aroused in the parish and the interest in missions has been greatly increased.

The "Mission for Missions" has put the parish on a firm foundation for the current year and has made the "free pew" venture financially safe.

Notes.—The Rev. Dr. Jacob Brittingham was recently presented with a purse of $1,000. This was presented mostly from members of other churches. Upon the advice of his physicians he has gone away to recuperate from his recent operation. Until the first of March he may be addressed—The Marlborough-Blenheim, Atlantic City, N. J.

The Rev. Dr. G. Philip Jung, rector of St. Matthias', Grafton, was one of the principal speakers at a banquet held in that city on the 13th in honor of the Four Minute Men of Taylor County.

Movement for Free Pews Spreads.—The movement for freeing all the seats in the churches is spreading in the diocese. The latest to come in line is Christ Church, Savannah, the largest and oldest parish in the diocese. By unanimous vote at the annual parish meeting the parishioners recommended the vestry that all pews should be free at the end of the current year.

Brotherly Charity.—A beautiful lesson of brotherly charity was seen in one of our cemeteries. A husband and wife who died of influenza were buried at the same time, the one being Roman Catholic, the other Anglican. The two priests stood side by side each blessing the grave for his own spiritual child and responding to the prayers offered by his brother. We have read of such things on the battlefields of France and rejoice to find the same charity near home.

Council Postponed.—On account of the great prevalence of influenza in the city of New Orleans and throughout the state, the diocesan council which was to have met on January 22, has been indefinitely postponed. Many of those who would have attended were found to be ill and other conditions made the meetings unadvisable. The Church Club dinner and the meetings of the Woman's Auxiliary have also been postponed. Health conditions, however, seem to be improving, and all these meetings will probably soon be held.

Churches Co-operate.—Recently at a luncheon in New Orleans, there gathered representative clergymen and laymen of the Protestant churches to discuss the proposed regional conference of Protestant churchmen to be held in the city February 14. Mr. Raymond F. Brown of New York, representative of the Interchurch World Movement of North America was present and declared that "the problem of the Church today is to make the boys who are coming back from Europe think of it in terms which attract them." "By means of co-operation," he said, "obtained through these conferences we have been able to arrange a practical down-to-the-ground working program for the survey of war conditions, one which will appeal to the practical as well as to the spiritual side of the men." Mr. Orloff Lake of Trinity Church made an address in which he heartily endorsed the movement. He was unanimously elected chairman of a committee to plan the proposed conference. Among those present were the Rev. A. R. Berkley, rector of St. Paul's Church and the Rev. Dr. W. B. Capers, rector-in-charge of Trinity Church.

St. Luke's, Altoona.—Certain indebtedness amounting to a little over $6,000 has been an annoyance to St. Luke's, Altoona, for some time. A parish meeting was called for the purpose on February 6, and the bishop of the diocese was present. There were also present of the clergy the rector of the parish and the Rev. M. De P. Maynard of St. John's, Bellefonte. The meeting was held in the new parish house which is a factor in the community, in the way of providing a place of clean recreation and entertainment for the local population as well as for returning soldiers. A delightful supper was served by the young women of the parish. The amount necessary for the accomplishment of the purpose for which the meeting was called, $6,730, was raised.

Another Change at Westminster Abbey.

—I referred recently to the numerous changes which had taken place in the personnel of Westminster Chapter. It seems as if the formula of the King's advisers were this: "When in doubt, try Westminster." They have just taken Canon Gamble to fill the deanery of Exeter, and now they have taken the senior member of the chapter Dr. Pearce, who is a comparatively young man of fifty-three, and has served only seven years at the abbey, to fill the See of Worcester, left vacant by the appointment of Dr. Yeatman-Biggs as Bishop of Coventry. This is a great pity, from the abbey point of view. One would not like the staff of our historic sanctuary to regard themselves as on probation for bigger things, like the assistant curates of an important parish. Nor would one like to see Westminster reserved entirely for dignitaries who have practically done their chief work elsewhere, like Bishop Boyd Carpenter, whose death has brought Dr. Barnes to Westminster. It is to be hoped that he and Canon de Candole, together with the new canon who must now be appointed, will settle down at Westminster as their life's work. It is also to be hoped that the new canon will be of a good working age, and perhaps it would only be fair if the Government were to nominate one of the "Gore school." The Liberal Evangelicals have been getting most of the recent chances.

The Chaplain's "Khaki Halo."—It is rather refreshing to find that some of our returning chaplains are asking that we should not make too much fuss about them. One who writes to the Challenge is very severe on the attitude of a brother-chaplain, who declared that after the war he would not shake hands with any priest of military age who had not been to the front. Whereas the truth is that many a priest has chosen infinitely the harder part in staying at home, patiently carrying on, overworked, under disheartening conditions. I am not claiming this candid chaplain in my own defense: the stern facts of anno domini—the last Act of Parliament would just have caught me by a matter of a few months, had the clergy not been exempted—have prevented THE CHURCHMAN from having to seek another correspondent. And even when we were morally bound to submit ourselves for non-combatant service to the decision of our bishop, the latter did not even give me the chance of a "halo." But one cannot help sympathizing with the younger men, who are in danger of losing their chances of promotion because of the popular sentiment in favor of the ex-chaplain. Now the candid correspondent of the Challenge frankly says that in his experience he had less work to do than he had had for years, and was actually in less danger, as he had come from a district where raids were frequent. Even his spiritual opportunities among soldiers were greater at home than abroad. Others would of course tell a different tale, but this experience should not be ignored. Another point is excellently brought out by the Bishop of Hereford in his Diocesan Messenger. After having expressed full appreciation of the work of the chaplains, Dr. Hensley Henson suggests that there was nothing in their experiences which qualifies them in any extraordinary degree for the task (which some of them seem inclined to take up) of dictating the policy of the Church of England. These experiences "have always been too remote from normal conditions to be practically illuminating when these have to be reckoned with."

Convocation Reopens.—The opening of the Convocation of Canterbury has attracted a little more attention than usual. It is an interesting test of at least one thing: how far our dignitaries have kept up their Latin. It must also have been an interesting task for the choristers of St. Paul's to sing the Psalms from the Vulgate version. And of course the bishops' convocation robes do give that note of color which is generally absent from our ecclesiastical functions. A bishop can generally be found who is capable of intoning the Latin Litany, and the Church has never yet failed to possess a dignitary who can preach a really good sermon in the classic tongue. In this case it was Dr. Armitage Robinson, Dean of Wells, who since he retired from the deanery of Westminster has had ample time to pursue his scholarly studies, which benefit us all. The dean was kind enough to articulate his sermon very slowly, so that his hearers could catch the drift of it. The Lamb of God taketh away the sin of the world. "God so loved the world . . ." and yet we are told that we are to "love not the world." If we love the world which lieth in wickedness, the love of the Father is not in us. But God beholds another world, which he is saving by love. The sin of the world seems to have increased, but what it really has done is to manifest itself more clearly. "And now the saner world is federated against a mad world: the sin is being taken away. Today, the world itself, coming forth from great tribulation, has conceived a new hope."

Annual Dinner.—The annual dinner of the Harrisburg archdeaconry of Williamsport took place in Christ Church Parish House on Monday evening, February 3. About one hundred and fifty men and fifty women sat at the tables. Addresses were made by the Rev. Charles P. Tinker, D. D., on "Duty to the City," by Dr. Sturgis on "Duty to the World," and by the Bishop of Harrisburg on "Duty to the Region."

Church Made Over.—The little church in Barnesville, Georgia, has been renovated and made more churchly, mainly through the generosity of the women of Christ Church, Macon, who has added to a beautiful carved altar previously given, a velvet carpet for the chancel and aisles, a fine brass cross, alms basin, dossal, kneeling benches, hymn board, and book marks. There are almost no church people in Barnesville, but it is a flourishing town and the seat of the Gordon Institute, a military school for boys, with between five and six hundred in attendance.

Every time the little mission is opened the boys come in large numbers. The service seems to fascinate them. Many have never heard it before.

Our Church has a home in very few of the small towns of Georgia, and the ignorance in regard to it, is not only lamentable but unbelievable.

Tunes for Saints' Days

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

I have not examined the tunes in the new hymnal so cannot say whether or not the provision I have in mind has been made. There are hymns for special occasions which are not used in most of our churches more than once every five years. Most of our churches have service on Sunday only. Take the Feast of the Transfiguration or the Purification of St. Mary the Virgin, for example: We find that they coincide with Sunday only once every six years. While it may be proper to have a tune for the hymns on these special occasions which belong to them alone, it would be highly desirable to have an alternate tune that is popularly familiar so that the churches without the highly trained choirs can render appropriate hymns for the season. Not only should these tunes be simple, but they should also be familiar. Otherwise these appropriate hymns will never be sung by many scores of our churches and the corresponding number of church people will lose the benefit of the lessons the proper hymns teach.

Not Settled by Urbane Laughter

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

I thank you for sending me the entertaining review of The Profits of Religion by the Very Rev. George Hodges, D.D. I will endeavor to comment on the review, meeting halfway its spirit of urbanity.

Dean Hodges takes a book which contains three hundred and fifteen pages, and anywhere from one to a dozen facts upon a page, and he discovers two wrong facts in the book. What are they? First, a secretary, copying a name, turned Professor F. G. Peabody of the Plummer chair at Harvard, into "Professor F. G. Plummer." Second, the writer says that he carried one-half a bishop's "train" when he was a boy. Dean Hodges finds it funny that I should have "manufactured a bishop's train out of the whole cloth." I can only state that I was one of two little boys who walked behind the bishop, holding up some portion of his costume, the technical name of which I cannot produce.

The writer is working to build up the Socialist movement, a demand for the Kingdom of Heaven on earth, where Jesus, the carpenter's son, desired to see it established. If Dean Hodges were to write a book presenting several thousand facts tending to prove that the Socialist movement had fallen from its duty as a herald of social justice, I would not feel that I had answered his book by picking out two errors of such weight and importance. Dean Hodges disposes of the matter by telling the story of a school-boy having an interview with a master: "I was sorry at first, but he rubbed it in so hard that I didn't care what he said." And that is all right as a joke; but does it really cover the attitude of the Church? Are the representatives of God on earth to be thought of as naughty schoolboys, and is their attitude toward criticism merely one of schoolboy petulance?

Or will they take refuge, as does the editor of THE CHURCHMAN, in the fact that The Profits of Religion is a book "which most of us shall never see"? I would warn you not to be too sure on this point. The same mail which brought your review to my desk brought a letter from a clergyman in Louisville, Kentucky: "I had occasion to make a speech about your Profits of Religion to our People's Church, and am reporting herewith the sale of two hundred and forty volumes, our protest and our appreciation of your masterly pen in the service of real religion."

My fundamental criticism of Dean Hodges' review would be that from it the reader would get the impression that I had dished up a mass of uncomplimentary facts about the Church—"it plays with tragic facts," says the dean—but that I have no principle, no philosophy, no reasoned thesis to prove. But the fact is that I have a definite point of view, my book has a definite structure. It is indicated in the first sentence of the offertory: "This book is a study of Supernaturalism from a new point of view—as a Source of Income and a Shield to Privilege." At the beginning of "the Church of the Slayers" occurs one sentence: "The thesis of this book is the effect of fixed dogma in producing mental paralysis, and the use of this mental paralysis by Economic Exploitation."

Moreover, the book is not merely an indictment. It has a constructive program, about which the dean's review says not a word. I wonder if you will do me the justice to quote one of the last paragraphs of The Profits of Religion, and let your readers judge whether or not they constitute "light-minded treatment." The paragraph reads:

You will have read this book to ill purpose if you draw the conclusion that there is anything in it to spare you the duty of getting yourself moral standards and holding yourself to them. On the contrary, because your task is the highest and hardest that man has yet undertaken—for this reason you will need standards the most exacting ever formulated. . . . Out of the pit of ignorance and despair we emerge into the sunlight of knowledge, to take control of a world, and to make it over, not according to the will of any gods, but according to the law in our own hearts. For that task we have need of all the resources of our being; of courage and high devotion, of faith in ourselves and our comrades, of clean, straight thinking, of discipline both of body and mind. We go to this task with a knowledge as old as the first moral impulse of mankind—the knowledge that our actions determine the future of life, not merely for ourselves, but for all the race. For this is one of the laws of the ancient Hebrews which modern science has not repealed, but, on the contrary, has reinforced with a thousand confirmations—that the sins of the fathers are visited upon the children unto the third and fourth generations.

Also I wonder if your space will permit you to quote a letter which I received the other day from an Episcopal clergyman, who did not find The Profits of Religion a book to be dismissed with urbane laughter. This clergyman, you will note, does not permit me to quote his name; but he is a real clergyman, and if you have any doubts on the subject, I will find some way to satisfy you. I am sure you will not miss the desperately tragic note of this letter, which is typical of scores which the book has brought me. I assure you, sir, the hearts of many hundreds of your clergy are deeply troubled by these questions. They see the thunder-clouds of social revolution gathering on the horizon, and they know that they have their share of guilt in our present unchristian and predatory social system. They know, as you must know in your inmost heart, that the subject is not one to be settled by urbane laughter.

Preaching Religion

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

May I make a suggestion to the ministers through the columns of THE CHURCHMAN? Namely, that they stop preaching politics and solving, according to their own ideas in the pulpit, the problems of the reconstruction period and go back to preaching the fundamentals of Christianity. I believe the problems would better solve themselves if we were taught more and more the doctrines of Jesus Christ and each made to realize his separate responsibility in trying to live up to Christ's teachings.

I have heard often different persons say that they are tired of going to church to have politics preached to them. Then, too, the problems of the present are questions on which the laity have very strong opinions of their own, and it is very hard to be told from the pulpit that all your ideas are wrong on questions which you have thought over and in which you have as much right to form your opinion as have the clergy.

There is a glorious message they can always give us and one we should never tire of hearing, and that is the weapon God has given us through His Holy Church with which to fight the greatest of all wars against sin, the world, the flesh and the devil.

Danger!

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

In your issue of February 1, under the heading "The Poor Old Constitution," you quote from Edgar Lee Masters, who draws attention to the fact that the Constitution is liable to amendment, or even alteration, on a vote which may be a majority vote of all the people, or a majority vote of all the states, and yet not of the people; and that the majority vote may deny to the people rights that the Constitution has guaranteed as natural rights.

It is even worse than Mr. Masters has stated. I hope I will not be understood to speak for or against prohibition in using this illustration.

Twice in the past few years the question of prohibition was before the people of this district. On both occasions the question was thrashed out before the voters, public meetings were held and speeches made pro and con.

By decided majorities the people voted against prohibition. Yet the representative from this district voted in his place in the state legislature for prohibition and the people feel they have been wronged, for this vote was the deciding vote, as the voting ran so close.

Mr. James M. Beck, whose judgment is acknowledged at home and abroad, a few days ago stated before the American Defence League and the American Rights Union, that the prohibition amendment "constituted one of the deadliest assaults ever made on the Constitution of the United States." And added: "If I had a message to deliver tonight, I would make it this: America, wake up and defend the institutions of your country as defined and expressed in the Constitution." California may or may not be different from other tates in the Union, but our experience tends to show how the wind blows.

We had a masking ordinance in many cities and towns, the people, or a large number of them protested, yet had to submit. One person wrote me from San Francisco: "Not one per cent of the people believe in the efficacy of the mask as a preventive against influenza."

Public meetings were held, protests made, but for weeks no relief.

At the capital city the chief of police ordered his men to arrest the legislators if they did not wear masks, "Constitution or no Constitution." Of course he had to withdraw his order. In one city, in two months the fines for evading the masks amounted to $6,504.15, a majority of the fines being five dollars. From another city a person wrote me: "A golden harvest reaped from mask sales at 500 per cent. Plus fines, proved a splendid investment to varied interests, 'Let us do wrong that good may be done,' is the cry of the beneficiaries." To quote from another letter: "It is the duty of every right-minded person to combat this law with all the power God has given us."

Fancy an order to wear a mask on the street, and in the church, etc., and no reason assigned, and the people told no reason need be given under the law.

Men are complaining, discontent is in the air, and it is no security to say that here is submission. How long will they submit? They have submitted to wear a mask, to the loss of wine, then comes talk of prohibiting tobacco, coffee, tea, cards. They have closed our churches, for a while, may they not close them forever?

Campaign Going Forward

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

In the article sent you a few days ago, giving an account of the meeting of the Board of Religious Education of the Province of Sewanee, there was included an incorrect statement. As the publication of this statement may do harm, I request that it be corrected.

The statement, "the movement to secure endowment for Porter Military Academy, Charleston, and St. Mary's School, Raleigh, had been temporarily postponed for special reasons," should read:

"The movement to secure an endowment for St. Mary's School, Raleigh, is progressing. The Rev. F. M. Osborne, who is conducting the campaign has recovered from a serious illness, and is preparing to continue the drive with new energy."

GARDINER L. TUCKER.

Rejected in the Draft

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

On returning from France my attention was called to an article in the January 25th issue of THE CHURCHMAN on "The Church and Public Health."

The writer states that 40 per cent. of the men between the ages of twenty-one and thirty summoned in the first national draft were found to be unfit for service and rejected by reason of venereal disease. I do not know where these figures were obtained, but the only statement on the subject that may be regarded as authoritative is the report of the Provost Marshal General to the Secretary of War on the first draft under the selective-service act, 1917, published at Washington by the government printing office. On page 44, table 12, gives the total number of men rejected by local boards for physical disqualifications as 39.11 per cent. of those examined. This means, of course, rejected for all physical causes. Add to this (page 46) an additional 4 per cent. rejected by camp surgeons on further examinations and we have a total of 33.11 per cent.

What proportion of these are for venereal diseases? The only information I can obtain on this subject is given in paragraph 7, page 46, of the report, which can be summarized as follows: "Of the various grounds for rejection, which were the most common? It must be left to the future to study accurately the valuable mass of data now latent in the records. Time has sufficed only to examine a small group of the records of rejections; 10,000 men were represented, spread over eight camps. The specific source of defect showing the largest percentage was eyes; and the next largest, teeth; rejection for genito-urinary diseases (venereal) 4.27 per cent." It must be remembered that this table is based on those rejected. The statistics which the author gives is based on those examined. Now, if only 4.27 per cent. of a representative body of rejections is for venereal diseases, what percentage of those examined can fairly be estimated to suffer from the same cause? Obviously, a much smaller number.

The discrepancy between the report of the Provost Marshal and the figures given in THE CHURCHMAN is so great as to require some explanation.

(We have referred Mr. McGann's letter to Mr. Crouch, who was the author of the article to which Mr. McGann refers. Mr. Crouch says: "I much regret that I have not been able to track down my original authority for the statement, and it is possible that I may have misread a rate of 40 per 100 to mean 40 per cent., in which case I can only offer my apologies."—EDITOR.)

A Church Service Flag

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

The Church is justly proud of her war service flags. They adorn our chancels and remind us of the spirit of loyalty and obedience and sacrifice which is latent in the Church and which awaits only a manifestly worthy cause to make itself evident. Why let this outward symbol of devotion lapse with the close of the war? Why not have a church service flag designed on the model of the war service flag, a small cross taking the place of the star, and each cross representing and commemorating one person who, during the past year, has gone out from the parish into any form of life-work in connection with the Church—whether in holy orders, or as deaconess, postulant, teacher or physician in the mission field, or as a permanent worker in any other form of Christian service? A cross of distinctive character might be placed on the flag, to represent a worker in the mission field, not connected with the parish, but wholly supported by it as its representative in the field.

This suggestion occurred to me more than a year ago, and shortly afterwards a churchwoman wrote me offering independently the same suggestion. I urged her to make her idea public, but apparently she has not acted on my plea. If there appears to be a general demand for such a flag, it might prove possible for the Board of Missions to have a design prepared and to furnish the flags at moderate cost.

Backing Up the League

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

It is a great comfort and satisfaction to know from THE CHURCHMAN that anyone in our Church is "backing the League." I should never have suspected it otherwise, judging from the apathy and opposition it has met with hereabouts! May I call to your attention and commendation the fact that we have also in New Jersey a branch of The Woman's Peace Party? Very small and struggling to be sure, but nevertheless as the "platform" (adopted even before the war) will show you, devoted to the Christian ideal of internationalism and conciliation. Besides our home study and informal summer meetings at the houses of members, we have regular monthly meetings in Newark at the Y. W. C. A. building, to which the public is cordially invited, to hear addresses by able men and women on the League of Nations, in its various aspects. Yesterday Mr. Recht of the League of Free Nations Association, gave a most absorbingly interesting talk on the nationality and aspirations of all the more turbulent people in Central Europe. Alas! I have sent cards of invitation to many of our clergy and churchwomen without result. My father, the Rev. Dr. Vibbert, was so thoroughly in sympathy with our projects that I feel as if it were my duty now to try to arouse other church-people to their national responsibilities. The Fellowship of Reconciliation is one of the most active organizations supporting the League at present.

Music and Poetry

A Musical Genealogy

THE LURE OF MUSIC. By Olin Downes. Harper & Bros., New York and London. 1918.

The layman who would have a cursory glance at the music and the musicians of the past century will find in this book what he desires. It is not intended, however, to be read as a music student's text-book. Mr. Downes has made use of many Columbia records to aid him in his biographical sketches; and has indicated each selection with its proper number after each description. At the end of the table of contents this statement occurs: "Composers representative of Germany have been omitted from this volume."

Thus Schubert, Mendelssohn, Schumann, Wagner, Brahms and Strauss are passed by without comment. Incidentally, is this not a sweeping denunciation of Germany's position in the world of today? Practically, however, is it not somewhat childish an omission, particularly when we cannot escape the fact of Schubert's exalted position as a song writer, Mendelssohn's part in the development of English oratorio, Schumann's recognized greatness in the use of melody and rhythm, or the obvious influence of Wagner on the opera of the present day? If we accept the fact that music is universal we cannot reasonably condemn these men for having been Germans (not Huns) however much we may lament their unfortunate situation. Why was not also some mention made of d'Indy, the leader of the modern French school of composers?

But even with these omissions, it is interesting to note how Mr. Downes has been able to present such a copious amount of material from other countries as to make an apparently, if not an actually, unbroken line of musical genealogy all the way from Rossini to the author of "A Perfect Day." H. A. M.

School Music

THE MELODIC METHOD IN SCHOOL MUSIC. By David C. Taylor. The Macmillan Co., New York. 1918. $1.00.

No grade teacher or musical supervisor can afford to miss this volume, which seems to be the latest word on the teaching of music in the schools. Starting with the assumption that inherent beauty of melodic outline is the first essential for one's musical comprehension, Mr. Taylor pleads for the recognition of the emotional element in the child's nature, and condemns most severely the pedagogic use of dry, ugly exercises devoid of pleasing melody for the purpose of sight reading. He urges the natural rather than the scientific method of vocal training, on the ground that the former gets quicker and equally effective results. His claim that the three elements of musical study—appreciation, vocal training and sight reading—should be developed together, with no undue emphasis on each, seems almost revolutionary, but nevertheless plausible and none the less refreshing. H. A. M.

The Oliver Ditson Co.

NOTES ON MUSIC IN OLD BOSTON. By William Arms Fisher. The Oliver Ditson Co., Boston. 1918. $1.25.

Ostensibly a description of musical development from 1630, this book should have as a more fitting title: A History of the Oliver Ditson Co., with Sidelights on Early Boston Music. In some parts Mr. Fisher goes into such details as only those familiar with the stately city can fully appreciate. We might observe, too, that only the first section of the volume contains matter of general interest, the remainder being devoted more and more exclusively to localized features connected with the aforesaid musical house. On due reflection we cannot but feel that the effect of the whole book is necessarily cheapened by too much of this ultra-local color. Either the author should have followed more broadly the subject which the title suggests, or he should have changed the title itself to avoid possible misunderstanding. H. A. M.

Composers of Today

CONTEMPORARY COMPOSERS. By Daniel Gregory Mason. The Macmillan Company, New York. 1918. $2.00.

To be able to talk to one's readers as if one were talking with them, and not at them, is a mark of the true essayist. Another is the ability, subtly manipulated, to convince the reader of one's sincerity. These two golden possessions: intimacy of style and conviction of expression, Mr. Mason should be proud to acknowledge as his own. Not that he is an open book that all who run may read. Hardly so, for to him a Brahms Symphony is even as "Tipperary" to Thomas, Richard and Henry. But given the man who attends philharmonies or pops for the pure enjoyment of it, and lo! Mr. Mason's criticisms have the essence of pure spring water: clear, cold; transparent, yet drawn from profound depths. We cannot but feel that his conclusions are the result of careful siftings, weighings on minute scales, microscopic searchings, painstaking analyses; and in the end, how clearly is the wheat separated from the chaff! Thus Strauss is found in his later works to "concern himself more with concrete appearances than with essential emotional truth"; and d'Indy has "had a firm enough hold upon musical tradition and a broad enough command of new methods and idioms to write music at once thoroughly 'modern' and thoroughly sane." We find that as the trend of music has been determined not by the masses but by those in the minority who have understood art in its highest sense, even so will America outgrow its rag-time tendencies and develop something worth while in time, despite the dictates of the proletariat. H. A. M.

Hymn Collections

HYMNS FOR SPECIAL OCCASIONS. By C. Sherman Baker. The H. W. Gray Co., New York. 1916. 50c.

Most of the fifteen hymns in this collection are musically very crude. Their inferiority lies mainly in indefinite and ambiguous chord progressions, faulty notation and lack of good melody.

THE CHRISTMAS SONG BOOK. Compiled by Adolf T. Hanser. The Dahlke Publishing Co., Buffalo. 1918.

The spirit of Christmas is embodied in this very comprehensive pamphlet of forty-four "of the best Christmas songs." Hymns and carols, ancient and modern, as well as a few children's songs, are included. Very few of the well-known tunes are omitted; and what is quite unusual in a collection of this kind, few, if any, of the existing number approach the mediocre in character. H. A. M.

The Serbian Liturgy

OFFICE OF THE HOLY COMMUNION. Set to music adapted from the Serbian liturgy. Compiled by Sebastian Dabovich. The H. W. Gray Co., New York. 1918. 50c.

Appreciation of Greek Church music comes late for "Westerners" and is obtained quickest by faithful study and saturation with old modes and ancient cadences. We believe that atmosphere has much to do with it. To listen to the above sung in the Cathedral of St. Nicholas by the cathedral choir would work marvels for the choirmaster who wishes to impart the spirit of music to his own singers. In addition to the regular offices in the Holy Communion, there are included in the Serbian collection five anthems which are a part of the ritual of the Eastern Church. H. A. M.

A Tune for the Battle Hymn

BATTLE HYMN OF THE REPUBLIC. By Katharine Eleanor Abbey. The H. W. Gray Co., New York. 1918.

To Edwin Austin Abbey, Lieutenant 4th Canadian Mounted Rifles, killed in action, Vimy Ridge, April 10, 1917, and to all his comrades of the Allies who fight "to make men free," this new setting to the "Battle Hymn" is dedicated. Stilted in melody and somewhat halting in rhythm, it has a bass almost good enough to counteract the resulting squareness of form. H. A. M.

Anthems

I WILL LIFT UP MINE EYES UNTO THE HILLS. By George A. Burdett. The Oliver Ditson Co. Boston. 1916. 12c.

A smoothly-flowing anthem, especially good because of its lack of any element destructive of the devotional mood.

TE DEUM IN F MINOR. By Alfred Wooler. The Oliver Ditson Co. Boston. 16c.

Those who long for the quartette days of Dudley Buck will be satisfied with this setting of the Te Deum, which is of that period and of no other.

RISE CROWNED WITH LIGHT. By C. B. Rutenber. The Oliver Ditson Co. 12c.

A fairly effective anthem starting with a melody for solo tenor of the sort that appeals to the average church attendant.

O HOW AMIABLE ARE THY DWELLINGS. By John E. West. The Oliver Ditson Co. Boston. 1907. 5c.

MY SONG SHALL BE OF MERCY. By John E. West. The Oliver Ditson Co. Boston. 1916. 16c.

The former is one of Mr. West's earlier and simpler compositions, an old friend which in its later years does not take on senility. The other anthem reflects some of the composer's uses of imitation in a musicianly and devotional manner: ten octavo pages in length, with chorus throughout.

SING O DAUGHTER OF ZION. By Fredrick Stevenson. The Oliver Ditson Co. Boston. 16c.

This composition is of a flamboyant nature, with enough filigree in the accompaniment to detract from the general effect.

THE EARTH IS THE LORD'S. By E. S. Hosmer. The Oliver Ditson Co. Boston. 12c.

The off-hand manner in which these words are treated, as well as a lack of churchliness in the tone of the whole anthem, defeats its own purpose.

MOTHER. By E. S. Hosmer. The Oliver Ditson Co. Boston. 12c.

A simple part-song for Mother's Day more suitable for home than for church use.

O BE JOYFUL IN THE LORD. By Philip James. The Oliver Ditson Co. Boston. 1914. 12c.

Mr. James treats the Jubilate in his own characteristic way. It is to be wondered perhaps, whether in his liking for surprising chords and (in this case) misplaced accent he has not been too subjective in his treatment of the morning canticle; in fact, little reminiscent of the concert hall. Music for the Congregation

WORSHIP AND MUSIC. By George Gardner, M.A., Mus. Bac. The Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, London. The Macmillan Co. New York. 1918. $1.00.

It is a sad truth that the average organist works only from his own vantage point: the organ bench. He fails to see, yes, does not try to see, the effect which the chancel music produces upon the pew occupant. In other words, he does not get the proper perspective of his own work, and cannot see the wood for the trees. Such a volume as the above is invaluable to the organist or the clergyman who yearns to put the soul of religion into the congregation; for their hearts unconsciously grope after the infinite as the most natural act in the world. With this viewpoint always in mind the author lays bare some serious defects not only in the actual music used in the performance of the different offices, but also in the very treatment and rendition of that music. One must bear in mind that he writes of the average English parish, whose service differs from ours in some minor points. One may also be disposed to take exception to some of the things he says about Stainer, Dykes, Barnby and Monk. But he "makes allowance for one's doubting, too," and there is a flavor of sincerity and common sense about his statements which appeal strongly to one's own reason. Let us have more such books and take them to heart. H. A. M.

A Song

HOW TO SING A SONG. By Yvette Guilbert. The Macmillan Company, New York. 1918. $2.00.

Yvette Guilbert—struggling over frontiers and phrases—has Englished her ideas in order that a song (which Octave Mirbeau once described as "a discouraging inanity") may become a worth while thing of art and human emotion.

Primarily addressed to singers, the book is equally applicable to readers and to all desirous of making the best use of their voices. A careful perusal of it would undoubtedly enhance the interest and effectiveness of the speech of ordinary people and clergymen.

The quoted admonition of Gounod (originally a theological student): "Madame, for God's sake do not take singing lessons"—is enlightening.

Chapters on "How to Create Atmosphere," "How to Penetrate and Amplify Text," and particularly on "The Coloring of Words," contain invaluable suggestions for improving the apparent ignorance on these points, everywhere so lamentably in evidence.

The preface (written in the manner of Proverbs) is pregnant with axiomatic truths. "There is a time when it seems you have nothing more to say," applies to most of us. A. L.-B.

Ezra Pound

LUSTRA. By Ezra Pound. Alfred A. Knopf, New York. 1917. $1.50.

The contents of this volume suggest those of a waste-paper basket rather than a collection of verse. Despite the vivid and beautiful line here and there in the verbiage, it is difficult to accept the author as a poet of any rating, much less at his own. A contempt for grammar and a predilection for slang are poor substitutes for conventional forms and metres. The blatant lines printed on the first page are a sufficient index of the whole:

Will the people accept them?
(i. e., these songs).

As a timorous wench from a centaur (or a centurion),

Already they flee, howling in terror.

We confess that not being able to penetrate the intricacies of the punctuation and the mysteries of the juxtaposition of words that have no relation to each other in the above, we can extract meaning from nothing more than the first line. Therefore we acknowledge ourselves of the "virgin stupidity" of those who decline to accept them, and consign the volume which Mr. Pound composed from his waste basket to our own. L. G.

A Second Edition

CHRIST IN THE POETRY OF TODAY. An Anthology from American Poets. Compiled by Martha Foote Crow, The Woman's Press, New York. 1918. $2.00.

All who discovered this storehouse of poetry relating to our Lord when it was first put forth by the Woman's Press a year ago, will be glad to see it in its revised edition, amplified by the addition of a section entitled "Christ and the World at War." Those who have not already explored its treasures will want to take the opportunity the new edition offers to obtain this very beautiful collection of American Christian verse. J. H.

Chamber Music

CHAMBER MUSIC. By James Joyce. The Cornhill Co., Boston. 1918. $1.00.

This is not a treatise on string quartets, but a thin volume of thirty-six short poems. They are deeply sensuous, appealing now to the eye:

The ways of all the woodland
Gleam with a soft and golden fire—and now to the ear:

All day I hear the noise of waters
Making moan.

One or two remind us of Horace; for example, the one beginning:

He who hath glory lost, nor hath Found any soul to follow his—

We think that the poet has shown himself a musician in everything except black and white notation. He surely has made use of lyric connotation to a marked extent. H. A. M.

Miss Lowell's Poetry

CAN GRANDE'S CASTLE. By Amy Lowell, The Macmillan Co., New York, 1918. $1.50.

It is difficult for the amateur to accept the theory that "polyphonic prose," which purports to be a scientific refinement upon "free verse," is in reality a new literary form, and the productions of the majority of new poets do not diminish our skepticism. Indeed, the usual effect upon our sensibilities of new poetry is that of an exhibition of cubist and futurist artists—a mental and moral indigestion. This is not the case with the new poetry or the "polyphonic prose" of Miss Amy Lowell. Miss Lowell convinces us that she has mastered the secret of a new form of poetic composition, which, though we do not profess to share the secret, has given us exquisite pleasure, and has stirred our admiration as has no other verse, free or bound, in recent years. And the present volume seems to us quite the best thing that Miss Lowell has done. The four compositions in Can Grande's Castle were suggested by the war through which the world has recently passed, although but one of them has direct bearing upon the war. Quite aside from the new and unusual rhythm that Miss Lowell chiefly uses, there is in these poems a wealth of color, a clearness and vividness of imagery, the feeling of passion, movement and life, the splendid pageantry of history, that

The Collected Works of Masefield

THE POEMS AND PLAYS OF JOHN MASEFIELD. In two volumes. The Macmillan Company, New York. 1918. $5.00.

It is a deep satisfaction to have the poems of a master gathered up from the little volumes in which from time to time they have appeared and printed in a single set wherein one is sure to find all the store of his treasure. The Macmillan Company have done a most creditable piece of work in their edition of the poems and plays of John Masefield—printed on delightful paper in good type, bound in the blue of the deep places of the sea and stamped in gold with a ship under full sail. The frontispiece shows us the Masefield we have heard lecturing in this country, the strong, sensitive face with the wistful eyes and the sad mouth. The Salt Water Ballads of his youth, the exquisite poems from The Story of a Round House, and the longer poems which first marked Masefield as the great English poet of our time occupy the first volume; the plays, the second.

What is new is the preface, with its history of the writing of the poems and of the poet's awakening as he read Chaucer one Sunday afternoon in 1896 from a volume picked up in a little bookshop in Yonkers, New York. Since the war began the poet has written no verse, although he has shown himself a master of prose. But he writes:

Perhaps when the war is over and the mess of war is cleaned up and the world is at some sort of peace, there may be leisure and feeling for verse-making. One may go back to that life in the mind, in which the eyes of the mind see butterflies and petals of blossoms blowing from the unseen world of beauty into this world. In that life, if it comes again, one may not be too old to look towards that world of beauty and to see and tell of it. M. J. H.

next door to the church. In that institution Miss Ashhurst, whose name is a household word in Guantanamo, aided by two teachers from the United States, has gathered children who are receiving a splendid secular and religious education. The house cannot contain those who desire to belong to the school and those godly women are dreaming of the erection of a school building which will cost $25,000, and which would be the best investment the Church could make in Cuba.

In this foreign land there are ten square miles of territory over which flies the Stars and Stripes. It is the section around Guantanamo Bay, where we have established an important naval base which, in the near future, will shelter a fleet of submarines and destroyers. Not far from the naval station proper we have stationed a regiment of United States marines 1,100 strong, and across the bay there are 300 more marines. For all these men divine service is being held on Sundays by the chaplain of the naval station, but he is under orders to return to the States and then nearly three thousand soldiers and sailors will be left without religious ministrations. Under like circumstances Mr. Watson did what he could for the men, but Guantanamo City is twenty-five miles away from the naval base and involves not only an hour's journey by rail, but also an hour's trip across the bay, which at times can be rough enough to make the trip not without an element of danger. In my brief visit to these points I saw enough to convince me that the Church has a great opportunity to minister to these men whose need is all the greater because they are cut off from almost all associations with civil life. It is only another illustration of the fact that though the war is over there is yet ample work for the War Commission and pressing need for the generous gifts of our people to make that work possible.

Personals

DURING THE VACANCY in the rectorship of St. Stephen's Church, Providence, Rhode Island, the Rev. W. F. B. Jackson is assisting in the care of the parish.

THE REV. JAMES B. HALSEY on account of continued illness, has resigned as rector of St. Timothy's Parish, Roxborough, Philadelphia, and his resignation has been accepted by the vestry. The Rev. Frederic B. Halsey, who, during his father's illness has been acting as priest-in-charge of the parish, will continue to do so until the election of a rector.

THE REV. BERTON S. LEVERING, formerly rector of St. Peter's Church, Delaware, Ohio, and chaplain in the U. S. Army, became the rector of St. Luke's Church, Ypsilanti, Michigan, February 1, 1919. Address, 46 South Summit Street.

THE REV. C. W. HAKES of Theresa, New York, who has been severely ill since about Christmas is thought to be improving. Dr. Hakes first suffered with influenza which was closely followed by typhoid fever and his condition has been critical for many weeks. Both Dr. and Mrs. Hakes worked through the influenza epidemic in Watertown in October, having charge of an emergency hospital there.

THE VERY REV. DR. WM. A. BARR, dean of Christ Church Cathedral, New Orleans, has, on account of continued illness, been granted a leave of absence for one year.

HOW TO SPELL

AND PRONOUNCE
25,000 WORDS
FREQUENTLY MISPELLED
AND MISPRONOUNCED

Nothing conveys the impression of slipshod mental processes so much as the misspelling and mispronouncing of words. No one can afford to allow these errors to creep in and ruin the effect of what he has to say. Every one who wants to be sure of the spelling and pronunciation of the words he uses, will welcome this unique and practical new hook—

A Desk Book of 25,000 Words
Frequently Mispronounced

By FRANK H. VIZETELLY, Litt.D., LL.D. This volume contains, in instantly accessible, alphabetical form, a selection of the words about whose spelling or pronunciation you are ever likely to be in doubt. Whenever you meet a tricky spelling or doubtful pronunciation, this hook will set you right. Or, if you will glance through the volume for five minutes a day, you will become a "good speller" in a surprisingly short time. This hook is very different from an ordinary dictionary—it specializes in spelling and pronouncing the everyday English words that all of us use; foreign terms, and proper names of all kinds. It must prove of immense value to the average "poor speller," and "mispronouncer"; every speaker, letter-writer, salesman, conversationalist, and everyone else who aims to speak and write with accurate English.

"So far as my experience goes, it is quite the best book of its kind."—Brander Matthews, Litt.D., LL.D.

WRITTEN ON THE GRAVE OF AN OFFICER OF MARINES

Bois de Belcau, June 21, 1918

By the Rev. John Stuart Banks, Chaplain

THE sun shone through the branches—
The laughing sun of June.
The rose glowed by the pathway,
To be trodden down so soon.

The moonlight cold and dimly
Poured through the open wood,
Tree-trunks all scarred and broken,
Where the spreading branches stood.

"I see a cross on the hillock,"
An angel in passing said,
"The ground all bare and broken,
Where the little pathway led.

"I see a spirit fleeting,
Westward o'er the lea;
Away to the land of the sunset,
To the land beyond the sea.

"I see a woman praying,
Down upon bended knee;
'God, give me back my husband,
But, let the world be free!'

"There's but one Cross," said the angel,
"Though in heart or earth so brown,
If you bear it as they bore it,
It shall become your crown."

The sun shines through the tree-trunks,
Where the many crosses stand,
And around the kneeling women,
In that distant new-born land.

How to Know the Bible

HOW TO KNOW THE BIBLE. By George Hodges. The Bobbs-Merrill Company, Indianapolis. 1918. $1.50.

Most ministers know the truth and value of biblical criticism. Some know more than others. Some know by first-hand study of the sources, others at second-hand, glad to believe what they are told, because they believe it to be true and know it to be helpful to mind and heart. There is little direct teaching of it from the pulpit or in Bible classes, especially in our Church. So that the laity get what little misinformation they have third-hand as it filters to them through magazine articles and the reports of silly sermons in the newspapers. Most of the people who continue to read the Bible shut their eyes to the newer truth and read on as they were taught, while the present generation hardly reads it at all. They know just enough to disturb the old and to find no certainty or comfort in the new. And this notwithstanding the fact that in the last twenty-five years many books have been written to explain what the higher criticism is and does.

But this book of Dean Hodges has a unique value. His opening words were perfectly true when he wrote them. He says: "The Bible is in everybody's house and is the most generally read and studied of all books, but it is still in need of simple explanation." But when he finished the book he gave the lie to this statement, because he has now furnished us with that "simple explanation."

Here we have no study of the details or even the spirit of modern criticism, no history of its approaches to the problems, of its hesitations and theories and mistakes, but an application to the whole Bible of the most assured results of that criticism and a study of the whole book in the light of it. What great scholars have found out comes to us through the mind of a cautious and naturally conservative man, brought up in the old ways of thinking, who has worked his way through the old, like Professor Clarke, into the appreciation of the new, only unlike Professor Clarke, he tells us not how it has affected himself, but how it has affected the Bible. We are given the positive results. There is not a negation in the book. There is a reverence and an appreciation and a vividness which makes the Bible more interesting than ever. Coming to us through the mind of a man who is the embodiment of common sense and who has a wonderful faculty of making what he tells clear and interesting, these results of a study, largely looked upon as dry and scholastic show the Bible once more to be the Book of Life.

The first chapter tells us briefly of the outward making of the book. Then there is a chapter touching upon the controversies between the early chapters in Genesis and the discoveries of science, and between the crude morality of the times of the Judges and the imprecatory psalms as compared with the morality of the Sermon on the Mount. Of the first the author says: "The accounts which it contains of the making of the world are true in the sense of being the records of what the Hebrews thought about these matters several thousand years ago." And of the second, "We are to say with all frankness that this and that may have been very well when it was said and done long ago before Christ, but that we know better now." In Chapter IV he makes "The Pentateuchal Alphabet" the confusing letters, J. D. P. H. & R., not only clear but interesting. Then he proceeds to tell the Bible story, with many quotations, in historical order. This is no dull resumé or commentary. But just enough is given us to whet the appetite for more and to give a framework within which the more may find its place. And passage after passage is illuminated with little touches like the one about the sun standing still upon Gibeon. There has been much discussion as to whether this really happened. The dean only says: "For in poetry all things are possible," and then quotes as a parallel passage the equally impossible miracle mentioned in Psalm CXIV which has never caused any difficulty. "When Israel came out of Egypt, The house of Jacob from a people of strange language, The mountains skipped like rams, And the little hills like young sheep." The two histories are woven together and yet we are made clearly to distinguish the characteristics of Samuel and Kings from Chronicles and Ezra. Then he takes up the prophets and then the poets and then the wise men and in "Between The Testaments," there is an interesting study of the Apocrypha. When he comes to treat the New Testament the very titles of the chapters are illuminating: "The Recollections of St. Peter," "The Records of St. Matthew," "The Writings of St. Luke."

As regards such still-vexed questions as the Pauline authorship of the pastoral epistles and the Johannine problems, the author is not dogmatic but leaves these matters open. He says truly, "The test of the value of a book is the book." This test the Bible as a whole stands. It is shown to us once more in all its beauty. It seems more beautiful than ever. And although it should stand in its own perfection and command our love and reverence, the more we know of it the more we love and reverence it. And this knowledge our author helps us to get.

CHARLES MORRIS ADDISON.

Fair Play for the Workers

FAIR PLAY FOR THE WORKERS. By Percy Stickney Grant. Moffat Yard & Company, New York. 1918. $1.60.

When Dr. Grant writes a book on the industrial situation, it is an event of cardinal importance for he is in the skirmish line of the industrial conflict, and the vast majority of us have to take over tomorrow the ground he seized yesterday. With Syndicalism in power in Russia, and the shop steward movement a living issue in Great Britain and a labor party really launched in the United States, the labor situation has entered into a new phase which requires just such an interpretation as this. Dr. Grant's approach to the labor question is from the historical viewpoint, an approach which will be of help especially to conservative minds. He is primarily a student, not a propagandist; he gathers his facts first and then attempts to interpret them. His one aim is to get men to discuss the labor question on its merits—that is, without animosity. And he rightfully adds, "Upon the extension of this spirit, in my opinion, depends the future peace and safety of our country." I can imagine no better book to put into the hands of our vestrymen and lay people generally who have an open mind on the labor question and a desire to learn.

In all our churches the older men are followers of the "Manchester School" of

NEW BOOKS THE GOSPEL IN THE LIGHT OF THE GREAT WAR

BY OZORA S. DAVIS
President of the Chicago Theological Seminary

A BOOK FOR EVERY MINISTER

Fresh—Vigorous—Stimulating

Inspired by the times but good for all times.

Rich in sermonic material; suggestive outlines and appropriate illustrations. Shows how to apply the Old Gospel to the New Era.

Opens new lines of thought in connection with familiar texts and topics.

To define the great subjects that have been thrust forward during the last five years, to show how the vital documents of the new literature bear upon them, and chiefly to bring the Bible into use as a source of text and subject and illustration is the purpose of this volume.

THE NEW ORTHODOXY

By EDWARD SCRIBNEW AMES

Associate Professor of Philosophy,
The University of Chicago

One of our best selling books dealing with the modern interpretation of religion. It discusses the new orthodoxy in its various phases: its attitudes, its dramatic personae, its growing bible, its changing goal, its new drama. This book seeks to present in simple terms a view of religion consistent with the mental habits of those trained in the sciences, in the professions, and in the expert direction of practical affairs.

A SURVEY OF RELIGIOUS EDUCATION IN THE LOCAL CHURCH

By WILLIAM C. BOWER

Professor of Religious Education
Transylvania College

This book aims to help groups of students in religious education, churches that have awakened to their educational responsibility, and administrators and teachers, to make a careful survey of the work of religious education in the local church. It is invaluable for pastors, superintendents and directors of religious education who wish to know how the work of religious education is being done.

THE CHURCH SCHOOL OF CITIZENSHIP

By ALLAN HOREN

Associate Professor of Homiletics and Pastoral Duties, The University of Chicago

The Author points out the need of a church school of citizenship, suggests certain forms of civic training suitable for small children, and indicates what the church school may do in teaching civics to boys and girls of the early teens and later adolescent age.

There are six illuminating chapters, each culminating in practical suggestions for investigations, experiments, and discussions suitable respectively for children, youth, and adults.

The Function of Death in Human Experience

By GEORGE BURMAN FOSTER

Late Professor of the Philosophy of Religion
The University of Chicago

Professor George Burman Foster was widely known as a theologian both through his books and his addresses. Among the last-mentioned is the famous address on "The Function of Death in Human Experience" which appeared in the University of Chicago Sermons issued by the University of Chicago Press. It has now been re-issued as a pamphlet by the same press.

It is one of the most philosophical, as well as one of the most soothing and beautiful, presentations of the great facts of death and life.

3. The Experiment of Faith

BY BISHOP CHARLES FISKE

"To the average man the book appeals. 'I am just an average man myself,' says the author. Bishop Fiske is singularly happy in leading one to a fuller faith. It is quite as much for the spiritually moribund within the church as for those of strong religious feeling."—The Churchman.

political economy, the central doctrine of which is laissez faire. In addition to the go-as-you-please economic theory many of them hold to the Jeffersonian political principle that the best government is the one that governs least. This combination of theories has made many of our leading men peculiarly immune to the infection of new ideas born of a new industrial situation. "In my youth," exclaimed one of the ablest legal minds, a man of distinction in Church and State, "I gave myself after careful study to the principles of the Manchester School, and at my time of life (sixty-two), I do not propose to abandon them."

But theories do give way before facts even in the most tenacious minds. The outstanding fact in the industrial life since 1848 is the labor movement. Dr. Grant begins his book with an historical sketch of this movement. In his chapter on the Law and the Worker, he tells things which the average good citizen simply does not believe can exist; in Russia, yes, but not in the United States in the year of grace 1918. Dr. Grant is no agitator; he neither justifies the disturbers of the peace nor denounces the guardians of the peace. He points out the dangerous gap in our methods of government, and he relates the methods of conciliation in operation in other countries. He believes that a work-

Extract from the Introduction

"The theme in this book is God is trying to fulfil Himself, to express Himself in me, and the more I grow the more He sees of the travail of His soul and is satisfied. The book provides us with a noble thought, so also it does with a searching Lenten question—am I growing. This is the real test of character. I think that this book will be a help to all of us to try and answer that searching question this Lent. I feel certain that, if we take in and live out the teaching of this book, both as individuals and corporately as a diocese, we shall grow with 'the increase of God.'"

THE AMERICAN STANDARD BIBLE

Authorized by the American Committee

THE BIBLE IN THE LANGUAGE OF TO-DAY

THE SAME OLD BIBLE

The American Standard is The Same Old Bible that we have always used, but it gives the exact meaning of the inspired writers, in the Language Taught in our Schools, and used in common by the plain reader.

THE AUTHORIZED STANDARD VERSION

The American Standard is used by all the Colleges, Theological Seminaries and Bible Training Schools in the United States, and has become with them, as with the editors of all Sunday School periodicals, The Authorized Standard Version.

It is used exclusively by the great religious denominations in their Sunday School periodicals, because they realize that it brings a plain reader more closely into contact with the exact thought of the sacred writers than any other version now current in Christendom.

FOLK-LORE IN THE OLD TESTAMENT

Studies in Comparative Religion, Legend, and Law
By SIR JAMES GEORGE FRAZER

Hon. D.C.L., Oxford; Hon. LL.D., Glasgow; Hon. Litt.D., Durham; Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge.

A monumental work embodying the result of many years of research and bringing together a vast amount of highly interesting and valuable information. These important studies throw a flood of light on many familiar episodes and references in the Old Testament and bring out the full significance of the Biblical traditions, showing how they contain genuine historical records of the infancy of the race. The author's object is to elucidate, not to demolish by sceptical criticism. Beginning with The Creation, Sir James covers The Early Ages of the World, Patriarchal Age, The Times of the Judges and the Kings. Part IV of Volume III deals with the Law and its place in Jewish history.

In three Svo. volumes, 1620 pages and index, $15.00 (The Set).

I have bought and read with great care and interest and approval Dean Hodges' HOW TO KNOW THE BIBLE. I can unhesitatingly recommend the book as a most helpful one for giving both teachers and students a summary of the entire contents of the Bible.

How to Know the Bible

By GEORGE HODGES

Dean of the Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, Mass.

More than a commentary, HOW TO KNOW THE BIBLE is a guide to intelligent reading and a stimulus to a daily study of the scripture. By its clearing up of difficult passages in the Bible it increases faith in this book of books.

In Dean Hodges' HOW TO KNOW THE BIBLE the results of scholarly research and the consensus of reverent scholarly judgment are embodied, and are set forth by it in a very helpful way.

DANIEL S. TUTTLE, D. D.,
Bishop of Missouri.

A book which can revive a general interest in the Bible is the special need of our day. Dr. George Hodges' book on "HOW TO KNOW THE BIBLE" fills that need. Everyone who reads it will yearn to place it in every home in the world.

RUSSELL H. CONWELL, D. D.,

Manual for Confirmation and Holy Communion

The Bishop of Spokane has, out of his long experience as a Parish Priest, given us one of the best booklets on Confirmation and Holy Communion. His teaching as to the purpose and meaning of Confirmation is clearly stated and practical. The Obligations of Church Membership are well stated. The treatment of the Communion Service is most helpful, and the few prayers added at the close of the manual are brief and to the point, having the directness of collects; and they breathe the spirit of true devotion.

Prayers compiled and adapted from Ancient and Modern Sources.

written by a professor far removed from the electric atmosphere of the industrial conflict. It comes from the pen of a student, but a student who is looking into the eyes of men week by week. Dr. Grant is himself a bridge across the social gulf that separates capital from labor, rich from poor, tenement from mansion, East side from West side.

Better than any man in the Church perhaps he knows the hearts and minds of men in the ranks of toilers and employers. He is a lover of justice and fair play, has faith in the power of discussion, and believes we can, if we will, think out rather than fight out the solution of the problem of industrial democracy.

Our Contributors

WE have arranged for our readers a Quinquagesima Book Number with the hope that our readers may find here some practical guidance for their lenten reading. Our book reviewers in this number are well known to CHURCHMAN readers. Dean Hodges, Dr. Mercer, Professor Easton, Dr. Charles Morris Addison, the Rev. R. P. Kreidler, the Rev. Latta Griswold, the Rev. Donald N. Alexander, the Rev. J. Wilson Sutton, the Rev. J. Howard Melish, Professor Leicester Lewis, and Dr. Drown. Dr. Stefansson contributes for this number "The Blessings of Civilization," an article previously published by him in The Alaskan Churchman. Dr. Stefansson's name is known to the world not only as the famous Arctic explorer, but as the author of My Life With the Eskimo and many scientific articles in journals of anthropology, folk-lore, philology and geography. Dr. Stefansson is adequately qualified to write upon the problem with which this interesting article deals. The Rev. Samuel M. Dorrance will contribute during Lent meditations upon the Seven Words. Mr. Dorrance is an army chaplain at Jefferson Barracks, Missouri. We are indebted to Dr. McComb's admirable compilation, Prayers for Today, and to A Chain of Prayers Across the Ages, compiled and arranged by Selina Fitzherbert Fox, for the prayers and meditation published this week in our page of prayers. "The League of Nations" is the substance of a sermon preached by the Archdeacon of Worcester at the New York Cathedral.

THERE is a paramount obligation resting upon the Christian world at this hour. It is the obligation of a wise and just peace in Europe—peace at once and a peace which will endure. The problem of war, this war from which we are trying to emerge, and war as a method of settling wrongs, is before the conscience of the world. What we think and say and do about this problem involves the happiness and safety of the generations that are to come after us.

It will be a shame irreparable if all intellectual and moral forces of Christendom do not bend towards the highest solution of this problem. The question is bigger in its scope than merely what kind of league of nations we shall have. No league of nations can right the wrong and undo the harm of an evil peace treaty. If we write future wars into the document which will be known to history as the Treaty of Paris, no league of nations can compel the peoples wronged by folly or malicious intent in that treaty to keep the peace.

A just treaty will include the constitution of a league of nations, but merely writing a league of nations into a peace document will not make that treaty just. There is danger at present of our forgetting this essential truth. If the league of nations were tied up with some of the terms of peace now championed in Paris, both the treaty and the league would be impotent to maintain peace even for a generation.

Let the prayers of the whole world unite! Let the accumulated loathing and detestation of war, the moral indignation of mankind over the crime of 1914 be focussed into one mighty appeal to the statesmen of the world that they find a way out. May the peace treaty of 1919 by its wisdom, its justice and its humanity register unequivocally a Christian loathing of militarism, our resolution to exterminate the war makers, and to bind into fellowship the diverse peoples whom God has made of one blood to dwell on the face of the whole earth.

A LENT OF BIBLE READING

IN leaflets and programs of lenten services there is evidence that prayer and the reading and study of the Bible are to be the dominant emphases of the coming lenten season. A fortnight ago our correspondent wrote about the awakening of Massachusetts under the discipline of the Twenty Weeks' Campaign. The Diocese of Connecticut is to have an Every Member Lent. Bishop Brewster has sent to his people a booklet of instructions containing suggested Bible readings and prayers for each week in Lent. The book is admirably compiled, and with its inspiring quotations from great spiritual leaders it strikes a high note of devotion. The Diocese of Southern Ohio has issued a booklet for the guidance of its people during Lent. "The Bible," so the message runs, "is the record of the deepest religious experience of the human race. Relate your life to it." Daily Bible readings are arranged on a topical basis in relation to the subjects contained in the collect, epistle and gospel for the Sundays in Lent. The readings for each week are on the subjects for the following Sunday. "They prepare the heart and mind," so the leaflet states, "for this day of rest and worship."

Many other dioceses are entering upon similar programs of definite purpose this Lent. This return to prayer and the Scriptures is the most hopeful promise we have seen for years. Lent is prone to drift into a kind of general religiosity. We make it a season for emphasizing spiritual discipline. But we are not always concrete in our suggestions of how to begin the discipline. If a rector, when he stands in his pulpit on the six Sundays in Lent, can have the assurance that the people to whom he is preaching have read each week seven specified passages from the Bible and have prayed certain definite prayers to God, he will find inspiration really to preach about religion and he will have the confidence that he is preaching to people who are attent to learn.

The parish that receives instruction in the Bible and is encouraged to read the Bible, is the parish that grows in grace. It is the only sort of parish in which good preaching is possible Sunday after Sunday, for good preaching pre-supposes some knowledge of Holy Scripture on the part of the listener. The decline of preaching in recent years into topical moral essays or mere emotional oratory is due to a decline of interest in the Bible. If the spiritual life of a parish is alert and real, it is because the people have been taught to pray and to read their Bibles. We believe that this coming Lent in our Church is to be one of especial profit.

THE ART OF PUBLICITY

P ERHAPS we shall have no more big nation-wide drives for funds in connection with the war. However that may be, the drive as an efficient method of sweeping vast sums into the treasury of worthy philanthropies will not be dropped. Its psychology is too valuable to be lost sight of. It is easier to raise forty millions by means of a drive than fifty thousand dollars through a leisurely, decorous appeal to people's conscience. The reason for this is not far to seek. Any publicity man can tell us that he has understood the psychology of the drive for years. He will also tell us why so many churches and highly approved charities have such hard times raising small sums of money. They refuse to avail themselves of the A B C of the science of publicity. The churches that are conspicuously successful in raising money, consciously or without knowing it, are, through their leaders, using good publicity methods. They know how to let the people who have money to give know what the needs are. They know how and when to ask for funds for those needs.

There is nothing indecorous about publicity. Religion and philanthropy would not soil their garments by stooping to ask information and following the advice of publicity experts. It is not necessary to offend the taste by "playing up" personality. What we need to do is to play up the cause and the facts. We believe that the missionary problem of the Churches, both diocesan and foreign, will never be solved until the boards which have the business in hand employ experts to conduct the campaigns for raising funds. We make this suggestion modestly, but we wonder if it would not pay the Board of Missions to employ at a high salary a publicity man to present the cause of missions to the Church. It is the most winning appeal that ever touched the heart of the race if it is skilfully made. It is not always made with skill, consequently missions have not infrequently been on the pauper list. To get them from under foot, pennies are thrown to them.

We appreciate fully, we think, the fact that war enthusiasm has made possible the wonderful success of these drives. But war enthusiasm does not wholly explain results. If these great drives had been bungled, they would have failed as piteously as most of our missionary drives fail. War enthusiasm is a big asset, but it needs to be directed. Brains, the best publicity brains in the country, harnessed that enthusiasm and put it to work. There is a good deal more latent enthusiasm for the work of the Churches than most of us are aware of. It is not too late for men and women who are caring for the temporal interests of religion to go to the publicity school in which John R. Mott and some other people learned the art of raising money. Thousands of men through their Liberty Loan work have come to see what proper publicity can do. These men, most of them, are in our Churches. They will hereafter, we believe, look with enthusiastic favor upon publicity campaigns in behalf of missions and church support.

We venture to say that if the Church needs a million dollars for its missionary work and if it doesn't get it, it is its own fault. The Church will give it, it will give many times that amount, if its conscience and heart are touched by the facts. Publicity is merely the art of getting the facts before the people. We dare prophesy that not one of the great organizations within the Church will in a decade think of attempting to conduct its affairs without employing experts in publicity.

THE WEEK

Chronicle and Comment on Current Events

QUINQUAGESIMA

"TO Christianity, it is the soul that is pursued; and God is forever restless, in quest of what to him is lost. The God of the Christian is one who pervades the earth in order to bring men to themselves; to every soul of man he stands at the door and knocks." These are Professor Hocking's words in the inspiring chapter, "The Divine Aggression," in his Human Nature and Its Remaking. This aggressive aspect of love is not always perceived in our definitions of the Christian's duty. Too often we conceive of love as a sort of inactive amiability. Not infrequently, of late, we have thought of love simply as a fierce hatred which chastises the object hostile to its beneficent purpose. But love is never merely that. It is, as we conceive God to be, aggressive in its benevolence. It goes after its object to win it. What else is the meaning of the whole Christian drama? "The God of the Christians disguises Himself, takes the form of a servant; He comes to His own and His own knows Him not; He is despised and rejected and done to death. And all this is the foil and the background of His great joy. For He has His moment when to some mind, more honest than usual to its own need, there comes a presentiment of recognition, and the awed question, Who art Thou, Lord? to whom He answers: 'I am He Whom thou persecutest.'"

SEEDS OF WAR

IT was not considered good patriotism during the war to suggest that nearly all wars had their causal roots in commerce. Anybody who knows anything about history knows the cause of wars. But when it is necessary for purposes of victory to see war with a halo, it is bad form for a patriot to suggest so plebeian an origin as commerce for war's splendid emotions. Those, therefore, who are realists in their handling of war psychology refuse to show much enthusiasm over anything done in Paris which does not attack the causes of war. The only way to prevent war is to remove the inciting cause. No league of nations, even if it have armies and navies at its beck and call, can prevent war if that league permits the inciting causes to continue operative. Imperialistic ambition, greed for colonial expansion and trade have been the breeders of international hatred. Africa has within its womb the seeds of a hundred future European wars. All the fair words emanating from Paris thus far give little promise of a lasting peace among the great European nations unless they are willing to forego their loot.

MUSIC AND UNITY

WE can usually sing with people with whom we disagree, just as we have found we can keep the fellowship of silence even when we cannot pray aloud with them. The possibilities of music as a common denominator were suggested last autumn in Carnegie Hall, New York, at a joint meeting in the interests of religious education in which Protestants of various communions, Roman Catholics and Jews, all took part. The choirs of various churches were present, and sang separately and together. In addition to the choir music, the great audience sang the hymns in unison.

The suggestion has since then been put forward by a settlement worker, who knows the psychology of the crowd, that an attempt be made to break down sectarian barriers and demonstrate the underlying unity that binds Christians together by arranging for musical mass meetings at which the choirs should render music illustrative of the genus of each communion, the choir numbers to be bound together by congregational singing in which the whole audience should be led by a precentor. This might be carried a step farther by taking over the idea into the realm of the pageant. A community Christmas festival with the tableaux of the Nativity presented by different communions and the music between the tableaux sung by the combined choirs of the community, or better yet, by the audience itself, would be for beauty and spiritual value far above the ordinary community Christmas tree.

Another suggestion, more easily carried out, is that of community hymn services. A church in a central part of the city might be opened on certain nights in Lent, or during the noon hour, and the people irrespective of church affiliation gathered to sing hymns. United services of praise and meditation are to be attempted in New York during the coming Lent, according to an announcement Dr. Slattery made at Grace Church last Sunday. He described the proposed services as follows:

During Lent here in New York a plan is under way to have united services in a single church in each district, where Christian people may come together for common praise and silent prayer. The plan provides that there shall be no one in the pulpit or chancel, and that by the help of leaflets announcing the subjects for silent prayer, and the words of the hymns, the people in the pews will feel that they are one under the leadership of the invisible Christ.

WHAT IS THE MATTER WITH MEXICO?

ARCHDEACON MELLEN'S resignation from the Mexican mission has been announced. Mr. Mellen is not leaving Mexico City; on the contrary, he has accepted the appointment of the American Bible Society as agency secretary for Mexico. One after another the American missionaries in Mexico have resigned, many of them to undertake mission work in other districts. The Rev. Allen Burleson, who is in charge of the English-speaking congregation in Mexico City, and Miss McKnight, principal of the Hooker School, are the only ones left—save, of course, Bishop Aves. It is something like two years since he has crossed the Texan border into Mexico, and during that time Archdeacon Mellen has kept the work of the mission from complete extinction. The bishop has now returned, and with his little force of native helpers, clerical and lay, faces a situation the gravity of which it would be hard to exaggerate.

From the first days of La Iglesia de Jesus in the sixties right up to the present the history of the Mexican mission has been one of tragic blunder. Devoted men and women have labored faithfully; money has been spent and some valuable property has been secured. But the American Church has never sent men with the gifts of leadership such as have been sent into the Orient. The building erected has been laid on a foundation of sand.

ALIEN AGITATORS

WE are in complete sympathy with the quick action of the Government in rounding up and deporting alien agitators. It is a ticklish business, the principle is susceptible of grave abuse, but it is far less dangerous for over-zealous officials to make a few mistakes than it is for America to continue to permit any kind of alien to carry on any sort of agitation that is pleasing to him. America's problem must be settled by Americans. Mr. Roosevelt's voice, now that it is stilled, will sound forth more authoritatively than ever on the great theme that America cannot tolerate fifty per cent loyalty. We do not advocate the suppression of agitation; but American politics must be handled within our borders by Americans.

We advocate a nation-wide movement to hasten the Americanization of every man, woman and child within our borders. Alien propaganda of every sort must cease. We want no more German-Americanism. We want no more Hungarian pastors in foreign pay preventing the Americanization of immigrants. America has too big a problem on its hands with its foreign population to permit conspiracies obstructive of the work of Americanizing our foreigners to go on under our eyes. America is more than a melting pot. It is a nation. It has traditions that are worth fighting for. While there are enough Americans extant who have already fought for those traditions we shall not deliver over to foreign agitators and alien groups the future of our beloved country to be moulded as they happen to wish. America may finally be lost to the Americans—but not without a struggle.

SIR DOUGLAS HAIG'S REPORT

SIR DOUGLAS HAIG'S masterly dispatch describing the military operations of the British arms on the Western Front from the end of April to the signing of the armistice is one that ought to make the heart not only of England but of all the English-speaking peoples swell with pride. England is not given to boasting. Well might she sing the renown of the marvelous feat of her arms during the closing months of the great war. Events moved with such rapidity; so many fronts were winning glory that the eye could not shift from one point to another with sufficient celerity to see all the points where honor and immortality were being won. We quote from Sir Douglas's report:

The armistice probably saved the Germans from the greatest military disaster in history. The proof of the terrible pressure which the British armies had put upon the Germans, both in the anxious months of April, May, June, and July when we were still only holding them, and also during the offensive which began on August 8th in front of Amiens, is afforded by the fact that when the British attack in conjunction with the Belgians was launched in Flanders in September there were no more than five German divisions in front of General Plumer. All the rest had been desperately withdrawn to the centre.

Sir Douglas Haig does not try to disguise the intense anxiety he felt at the end of April. The German advance had been checked for the time being, but important railway junctions were under the fire of German guns, and in order to supply our armies about two hundred miles of fresh railway had to be hurriedly laid. Five thousand miles of new trenches had also to be dug. . . .

We have not space to follow in detail the glorious procession of victories which began with the battle of Amiens (when the British Fourth Army and the French First Army co-operated under Sir Douglas Haig) and included the battles of Bapaume, the Scarpe, Quéant, Cambrai, Le Cateau, the Selle River, and the Sambre. Altogether in the period covered by the despatch Sir Douglas Haig took 187,000 prisoners, 2,850 guns, over 29,000 machine-guns and 3,000 trench mortars. . . .

Till almost the end of the fighting we were consistently inferior in numbers to the Germans. We have to thank, not our civilian rulers, but the leadership of the British High Command and the unquenchable bravery of the troops for the fact that in three months fifty-nine British divisions defeated ninety-nine German divisions.

SATURDAY NIGHT SERMON

BY THE REV. GEORGE THOMAS DOWLING, D.D.

The Secret Things of the Bible

Secret things belong unto the Lord our God; but those things which are revealed belong unto us and to our children forever, that we may do all the words of this law.—Deuteronomy XXIX: 29.

WE readily realize that it is the glory of God to reveal a thing, but the author of the Book of Proverbs reminds us that "it is the glory of God to conceal a thing." And there is so much more concealed than is revealed. What we know of anything is only the small dust upon the balance when compared with what we know not.

And this is the reason that the most scholarly men are generally the most humble. They have come to know that the larger their circle of light, the larger their circle of surrounding darkness.

It was of Sir Isaac Newton that Pope wrote:

Nature and nature's laws lay hid in night;
God said, "Let Newton be!" and all was light.

But in his old age, what says the great philosopher of himself? "I know not what I may appear to the world," he writes, "but to myself, I seem to be only like a boy playing on the seashore, and diverting myself, in now and then finding a smoother pebble, or a prettier shell than ordinary, whilst the great ocean lies all undiscovered before me."

His favorite study was the Bible, and on one occasion when the learned astronomer, Dr. Halley, ventured to make sport of the Scriptures, Sir Isaac said to him: "Dr. Halley, I am always glad to hear you when you speak about astronomy, because that is a subject which you have studied, and well understand; but you should not talk of Christianity for you have not studied it. I have, and I know you know nothing of the matter."

Now, what are the Scriptures for? What do they contain and what do they intentionally omit? When does God speak, and when does He hide Himself? Whichever way we turn in this world, questions fall about us thick as shot upon a beleagured fortress. Are yonder worlds inhabited? Marconi predicts the time will come when we shall communicate with their inhabitants. Is that, and are many similar statements true?

I can imagine a man opening this Bible for the first time. He has heard that it is God's message to us; and he says, "Now, all these questions which my curiosity leads me to ask will be answered." Eagerly he scans page after page, and what does he find? Almost nothing. "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth;" but that is all.

And he asks, "Why?" When Handel's Oratorio of the Messiah was played before George I., the king came to him and thanked him for having been so successful in amusing him. The great artist hesitated a moment and then he answered, "Sire, I was not trying to amuse you, but to make you better." That is why: because if there is one characteristic of the Scriptures more striking than another, it is that they deal, not with those questions which it is for our curiosity to ask, but for our betterment to know. Take a single instance which is typical of many equally striking.

How many men have sought to know exactly how Jesus Christ looked. Raphael, Titian, Michael Angelo, painter and sculptor alike, have vied with one another, seeking with the fingers of imagination to portray that divine face.

Here are four writers inspired to record the story of Him who is the centre of all history. His biographers were his intimate associates. But you cannot tell from all their accounts the color of those eyes which wept over Jerusalem, or of the hair which dripped with blood when He was crowned with thorns. You cannot tell the height of that body which swung between heaven and earth on that day when the centurion staggered back from the Cross, exclaiming, "Truly this man was the Son of God!" There is not an authentic picture of Jesus Christ in the world, and there never has been. Every picture of that face is a fancy picture. And other illustrations multiply. Questions of curiosity, in vain ye seek an answer. Not one glimpse! The corner of the curtain which hides Him from us is not even lifted. But observe: "Secret things belong unto the Lord our God; but those things which are revealed belong unto us and to our children forever, that we may do all the words of this law." There is enough revealed to enable us to keep God's law; and what else is the Bible for?

There is no silence concerning those deep and fundamental truths which we need to know and which are preached alike from every Christian pulpit in all the world today. There is no silence when it tells me that God is and that He is the hearer and the answerer of prayer; no silence when it assures me that just as Jesus Christ was with His disciples, so, though we cannot see Him, He walks with us today; no silence when it tells me that I am mortal and must die: that I am immortal and may live.

And when I go groping in sorrow with that cry which has thrilled the ages, "What shall I do for the sin of my soul?" it is no hollow echo which comes back to mock me in that hour. I listen and the depths say "It is not in me." But I hear the voice of the great God Himself, sounding like the music of angel harpers harping upon their harps, "This is a faithful saying and worthy of all acceptance, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners!"

Blessed be God, the answer has come. Concerning these questions of eternal moment no longer need I grope: God revealed; immortality revealed; a Saviour revealed; sin and the way to escape it—all that I need to know revealed; and with David I cry, "Thy Word O God shall be a light unto my way." By yonder beacon I will guide my vessel through a tempest-tossed night. What though there are a thousand questions that I cannot answer? I do not ask that that lighthouse shall dissipate the darkness. It is not a sun but a beacon. As a weather-beaten sailor I only need that it penetrate the darkness that with my ship I may make the harbor at last.

Onward leaps my bark. Tomorrow I shall have reached the port. No more need of a lighthouse then! Then the night will be over! Then the storm shall have swept past, and in the glory of that eternal morning all else that I need to know shall be revealed.

In Thy light, O God, I shall see light; then shall I know even as also I am known. Until then, help me to hold on my way in steadfastness and peace. Until then, I will trust and not be afraid.

TO READ IN LENT

BY THE VERY REV. GEORGE HODGES, D.D.

AN excellent collection of books from which to select a volume for reading in Lent is the Holy Bible. Can we do better?

It may be said, indeed, by way of objection, that we have read the Bible before. It lacks the interest of novelty. But this is like saying that we have already read the Dialogues of Plato or the plays of Shakespeare. The great books are to be read and re-read; partly that we may learn them by heart, and thus carry them about with us; but also because their meaning and their message are not revealed to those who merely read, but to those who study.

Take, for example, such a book as Deuteronomy. One may read it with some attention without perceiving that it calls for the pulling down of all the country churches. Every local shrine must be demolished. Abraham, Isaac and Jacob may have worshiped there, and seen heaven open; no matter, not one stone may be left upon another. There is to be no altar in the diocese except that of the cathedral in Jerusalem! No wonder that the discovery of this book, in the house-cleaning of the Temple after the pagan reign of King Manasseh (II Kings, 22) stirred the souls of all the people of the land. Dr. George Adam Smith, in a series called the Cambridge Bible for Schools (G. P. Putnam's Sons, $2.00), has just published a commentary on Deuteronomy in which most readers will find many surprising and instructive things of which they never thought before. The print is small, and the volume has a discouraging appearance on that account, but a profitable Lent may be assured to anybody who will read this old book in the light of this new study.

So with the New Testament, as it is presented in Professor Kent's Shorter Bible (Scribner's, $1.00). Our familiarity even with these familiar chapters is largely fictitious. What we know is the words rather than the meanings. Dr. Holmes, in one of his Breakfast Table books, speaks of the polarization of words, whereby currents of thought pass through them in settled directions as currents of electricity pass through a bar of iron which lies long in one position on the ground. Move the iron, place it in another position, and the magnetic wave—if that is the right name for it—takes a new course. Retranslate the word, and new thoughts begin to circulate in it. This is what is done in this departure from the familiar versions. The essential homeliness of the Gospels, which is obscured by the dignities and felicities of Elizabethan English, reappears in these more modern equivalents. The whole New Testament collection of writings is rearranged in this book, and set in chronological order: not Romans first of St. Paul's Epistles because it is a long letter, and then Corinthians because they are about the same size, and Thessalonians near the end because they are little books; but Thessalonians first because they were written first, and then Galatians and so on, in the order in which St. Paul wrote them. To re-read the New Testament in this form would be a help to a holy Lent.

Many busy women, who have been making surgical dressings, and knitting unsparingly for the Red Cross, and many men who in the stress of the war have been attending to everybody's business but their own, may find spiritual refreshment and strength this Lent by reading any one of four famous books wherein the strenuous altruisms of our present life are conspicuous by their absence. The altruisms are all right; but there is danger lest we fall into the failure of the disciples at the foot of the hill, who could not cast out the devil because of the weakness of their own souls. "This kind," the Lord said, "cometh not forth but by prayer"; to which some ancient manuscripts add, "and fasting"—acts especially appropriate to Lent. The men of these four books delighted in them more than in meat and drink. In them they lived, going out in the strength thus gained to minister to their neighbors, but returning to their prayers not only for new strength but for true joy. They represent a side of life which needs emphasis in these times of reconstruction.

One of these books is the Confessions of St. Augustine. "Great art Thou, O Lord," it begins—this book which is one long prayer—"and greatly to be praised; great is Thy power and Thy wisdom infinite. Thou awakest us to delight in Thy praise; for Thou madest us for Thyself, and our heart is restless, until it repose in Thee." Another book is the Little Flowers of St. Francis, charming stories told with the simplicity and imagination and untroubled faith of childhood, but all illuminating the face of him who interrupted the wars of Europe, and brought labor and capital into a new understanding, and did these things—which we are trying to do for our own time—not so much by organization and method as by the inspiration of the example of his cheerful, affectionate and self-effacing goodness. A third book is the Imitation of Christ, in whose pages one looks in vain for the enthusiasms of social service. In the thought of the writer there are only two realities, one is God, the other is his own soul. As for his neighbor, to whose affection he is commended in the second of the Two Commandments, he has forgotten him. He is saying over and over, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind." He is trying to do that. "And thy neighbor as thyself." Yes, doubtless, but not today; today I am on the Mount of the Transfiguration; let me make the most of the beatific vision before I go down into the valley to labor again with those who are possessed with the devil. The fourth book is the Pilgrim's Progress, so subjective, and spiritually selfish, if you will, that the hero, finding himself in the City of Destruction, makes no effort to change the situation, but goes out alone, leaving behind him his friends and his family, to save his solitary soul; and yet so in accord with the life of supreme service that a page was taken out of it the other day to describe the character, and praise the achievements, of the most outstanding social servant of our generation. When the secretary of the class of 1880, of Harvard University, announced to his classmates the death of Theodore Roosevelt, he quoted the account of the passing of Mr. Valiant-for-Truth.

After this it was noised abroad that Mr. Valiant-for-Truth was sent for by a summons by the same post as the other, and had this for a token that his summons was true, "that his pitcher was broken at the fountain." When he understood it, he called for his friends, and told them of it. Then said he, "I am going to my Father's; and though with great difficulty I have got hither, yet now I do not repent me of all the trouble I have been at to arrive where I am. My sword I give to him that shall succeed me in my pilgrimage, and my courage and skill to him that can get it. My marks and scars I carry with me, to be a witness for me that I have fought His battles who will now be my rewarder." When the day that he must go hence was come, many accompanied him to the river-side, into which as he went he said, "Death, where is thy sting?" And as he went down deeper, he said, "Grave, where is thy victory?" So he passed over, and all the trumpets sounded for him on the other side.

After these great books, from which a discriminating observer of Lent may choose one, here is a group of lesser books, like the "little ships" which followed our Lord and the apostles across the Lake of Galilee. Three are by English, three by American writers.

The Faith of a Modern Churchman (London: Murray, $1.75), by Canon Glazebrook, includes brief, illuminating considerations of the Church, the Bible, the Creeds, the Sacraments, and other fundamental matters, in the spirit of the saying of Erasmus, "By identifying the new learning with heresy, you make orthodoxy synonymous with ignorance." Christ and the Church: a Restatement of Belief (London: S. P. C. K., 50c.), by Canon Robinson, emphasizes the change of general Christian emphasis from the salvation of the soul, which was the supreme desire of Bunyan's Pilgrim, and from the Fatherhood of God, in the light of which our theology of punishment has been rewritten, to the idea of membership in the Body of Christ, the Church, with its manifold application to our industrial and social life. The Necessity of Christ (E. P. Dutton & Co., $1.50), by Dr. W. E. Orchard, is considered in its relation to thought, to religion, to Christianity, to personality, to society, and to God. "Most of the difficulties our age has found in Christ have been due to mistaken efforts to reduce Him to the need of a particular generation or a particular type of mind. None but the whole Christ will satisfy our whole Christianity."

Fair Play for the Workers, by Percy Stickney Grant (Moffat, Yard Co., $1.60), and The World Within, by Rufus M. Jones (The Macmillan Co., $1.25), are as far apart in their different themes as socialism is remote from mysticism; but they are all as one in the same fine Christian spirit. The object of Dr. Grant's book "is to call attention to some of the consequences of our blindness to the world's deeper democratic activities and to the dawn of proletarian control." The object of Dr. Jones's book is to maintain that "we cannot build this new world of ours out of material stuff alone. It will not be a matter solely of iron and coal and foodstuffs. It will, as always, be a matter of creative faith, of spiritual vision—in a word, the ultimate issue will turn upon the quality and character of the soul of those who are to do the building." These two aspects of life meet in The Christian Idea in the Modern World, by Raymond Calkins (The Pilgrim Press, $1.00), a clear and contemporary account of our best aspirations, by a good churchman in the Congregational ministry.

THE BLESSINGS OF CIVILIZATION

BY VILHJÁLMUR STEFANSSON

IT is commonly said that to a clergyman his text is a point of departure to which he is not likely to return.

Although a close inspection of my variously-spent youth would show that part of it was spent in a divinity school, I hope to distinguish myself from the clergyman of the above aphorism by sticking closely to the following texts, each of which will be annotated as seems needed.

The winters 1903-4 and 1904-5 were spent by Captain Amundsen in King William Island among Eskimos who had meat and animal fat only for food and fuel, who lived in snow houses in winter and in skin tents in summer, who hunted with bow and harpoon chiefly, who knew no English nor other European language, who were strangers to all European foods and conveniences, who had no doctors but their own shamans and no religion but that of their ancestors. Leaving these people, Amundsen spent the winter 1905-6 near Herschel Island among Eskimo who had an abundance of European foods, who had tents of cloth and houses of wood heated by iron stoves, who hunted with all types of rifles up to Krag-Jorgensens and Lee-Enfields, who spoke broken English and had become half-Christianized. Then Amundsen took a short trip to the Yukon and saw the Indians of the Porcupine and of the Yukon between Fort Yukon and Eagle. On the basis of knowledge so gathered he wrote in his book, The North-West Passage, at the end of the second chapter devoted wholly to the Eskimo of King William Islands:

My best wish for my friends the Netsilik (King William Island) Eskimos is that civilization may never get to them.

(The black-face type is Amundsen's not mine). This is the first of my many texts of one import.

In my own book on Life With the Eskimo is cited almost a superfluity of evidence on the basis of which I came to a conclusion like to Amundsen's. The following is quoted from page 26 of that book:

There are many in the Mackenzie district that have given me valuable information about their country . . . but few men know it better than Father Giroux, formerly stationed at Arctic Red River (head of the Mackenzie delta, on the borders of the Eskimo country) but now in charge at Providence (the Roman Catholic Mission school). He says it is true in the Mackenzie basin as it is among the Arctic Eskimo that measles is the deadliest of all diseases. There have been several epidemics, so it might be supposed the most susceptible had been weeded out, and yet the last epidemic (1903) killed about one-fifth of the entire population of the Mackenzie valley. He had noticed also a distinct and universal difference in health between those who wear white men's clothing and live in white men's houses as opposed to those who keep the ancient customs in dress and dwellings.

In this quotation it is the last sentence to which I call special attention.

Before setting down the next quotation I shall say that Mr. Diamond Jenness is an Englishman in blood, an Oxford man by education, a member of the Church of England and that some members of his own family are missionaries in New Guinea where, as well as among the Eskimo, Mr. Jenness spent some years in the study of uncivilized and partly civilized natives. As ethnologist of the Canadian Arctic Expedition he spent one year with the civilized Eskimo of Alaska and two years with the uncivilized Eskimo of Corporation Gulf. In the Geographical Review of New York for August, 1917, he has the following to say:
